Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The last remark of the Senator prompts me to say that I am not contending that we shall be in this condition indefinitely, but I wonder whether the Senator is contending that we will be out of this condition within three years. If he is, I concede the force of his argument. I do not wish to become a prophet of evil or a pessimist, but at the same time I do not regard the present period of depression as likely to terminate within a short time, and I think it is fruitless to legislate on the theory that it will.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I am not trying to predict. What I am trying to say is that any time when Congress is in session we can extend the existing law. I am not predicting whether we will be out of the depression in three years or not; I am not anticipating that we will be or I am not claiming that we will not be, but I do contend that if we go along temporarily financing the small homes we will be here next December, and from then on, and in succeeding sessions we can take such action as seems desirable.

What I am saying is that we are asked, because of the pressure of an emergency, to set up a permanent banking system for an emergency, a banking system which heretofore has never been needed.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] yesterday said that this amendment might interfere with the operations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in making loans which they are already making in the building and loan associations. There is not a thing in my substitute which in any manner would interfere with the loans already being made to the building and loan associations on any kind of collateral that is satisfactory to the corporation.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, will my friend yield to me?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. WATSON. The Senator misapprehended what I said, or I very inadequately conveyed my thought, which was that the amendment of the Senator confers no new power whatever on the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It already has the authority to make loans to building and loan associations. Therefore, the Senator would give them no new power; he would confer no new authority on them. They can do that now, and are doing it.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, the Senator misunderstands. What we are proposing to do is to give them new directions. We do not necessarily have to expand their power or contract it. We are proposing to give them specific directions which they do not now have, and those directions are to set aside $400,000,000 to set up a home-loan division, to be specifically devoted to the care of the small-home owner. It would provide for new instructions which they do not now have.

Mr. WATSON. They have that authority now.

Mr. COUZENS. I am not talking about authority; I am saying they are given directions under this provision. We are giving them directions they do not have. We are telling them that we want them to set up a division to aid the small-home owner.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Gardner, in charge of the building and loan division of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the man who has its actual operations in charge, appeared before the House committee. Mr. REILLY, who is the chairman of that committee, asked him:

> Then the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is not the proper set-up, as regards the length of time for loans that can be made, to accommodate and meet the demands and requirements of the building and loan associations?
> Mr. GARDNER. Absolutely not. My thought is this: In the event of the passage of the home loan bank bill, loans which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has made to the building and loan associations should be picked up by the home-loan bank system, refinanced and reorganized on a long-term basis, suitable to the needs of these associations.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, that is the very thing I am contending, that all of the points the Senator from Indiana is making come from administration appointees or employees. The Senator from Indiana would not expect that employees appointed by the President would come here and testify against a bill which the President wanted. He would not expect them to do that. He has quoted General Dawes and others, and I am not finding fault with their testimony, but obviously they would not come here and testify against a bill which the President himself wanted.

I am not finding any fault with the desires of the President to aid the small-home owner. I am just pointing out that with his multitude of duties, he has been carried away, and so have many others, with the word "home." No one is more interested in protecting the little-home owner than I am, but I want to submit that this bill goes much farther than that, and there is no limitation upon what the money may be used for after it has been secured by the home-loan bank.

Mr. President, even the proponents of this legislation point out that the money may be used for other purposes. I had a letter this morning or yesterday from a building and loan association of Missouri in which it was stated that many persons had invested their money in the stock of building and loan associations, that they were anxious to get the money out, that they wanted the home-loan bank established so that they could discount their mortgages, so that these investors in building and loan associations might secure their money. I am not finding any fault with the desire of these investors, or depositors, or both, in the building and loan associations desiring to get their money. That is a perfectly laudable desire. But that is not supposed to be the purpose of this bill. I want to point out that on the word "home," and the heart-felt desire of every Senator present to help the little home owner, we are carrying along a multitude of other beneficiaries not intended by the bill. If the purposes of this bill were generally understood, if the demands of those who are asking for it were generally understood, it would not be carried through the Senate on the mere statement that it is for the purpose of helping the little-home owner.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course, what the Senator has in mind is the repayment of the investment.

Mr. COUZENS. Certainly. I am not finding any fault with that, but I do not want to be carried away with the word "home."

Mr. COPELAND. This is a fact, is it not, that in a little community like Ann Arbor, we will say, the success of the continued operation of the building and loan association in Ann Arbor depends upon investments made from time to time by the purchase of new series of stock in order that more loans may be made? Of course, the continued success of the building and loan movement is involved as much in keeping satisfied the investing members as in keeping satisfied the borrowing members.

I have a copy of a letter which the Senator referred to a moment ago, referring to the failure of a building and loan association in some Southern State to pay out at the end of eight years. Of course, there is not an iron-clad pledge when such stock is purchased that it will pay out in eight years. It will pay out when they have accumulated enough money to pay out, and that may be 10 years or 12 years, perhaps. My judgment is that the building and loan associations through a hundred years of history have demontrated that with regard to investing members—and they amount to about five to one borrowing member, 10,000,000 investing members to 2,000,000 borrowing members—it is just as important to the continued operation to have those investing members satisfied as it is to have the borrowing members satisfied. So even though some of the money should be used, as the Senator suggests, for taking care of the investing members, I would not think that was any different from taking care of the various banks which receive money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. COUZENS. That is true, and they already have the same opportunities as the banks have to get the money to relieve their depositors. The Senator has pointed out the very thing I want to emphasize. There are 12,000,000 assumedly interested in building and loan associations. Ten million of them are not borrowers. Ten million have put their savings either on deposit, or in stock, and there are only 2,000,000 of the home owners.

The bill, therefore, will do five times as much good to the depositors as it will to the little home owners. I am not objecting to helping the depositors, but I do object to putting over this permanent system of banks based on the heartstrings of those who have great sympathy for the little home owners. The bill is not for the purpose claimed; that is to say, it is only one-fifth for that purpose and four-fifths for another purpose. Why not acknowledge it? Why try to put through a permanent system of banking on the theory that it is simply to help the small-home owners when four-fifths of the purpose of the bill is not that at all?

Mr. COPELAND. But when we make a loan to a bank through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that is helpful to the promotion of the function of the bank. Furthermore, we have included in the bill more than the building and loan associations. We have savings banks and insurance companies and mortgage-loan companies and a number of other institutions, where there is not the same investing group to be considered as in connection with the cooperatives.

Mr. COUZENS. That is one of the vital objections to the bill as written.

Mr. COPELAND. It is an objection I have, too.

Mr. COUZENS. One of the main objections the building and loan associations have to the bill is that it does include every conceivable kind of mortgage company, bank, and savings association.

We have had some debate on a provision of the bill which I approved of and which was amended. I refer to section 5. It was amended on the motion of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON] with respect to the amount of charges that might be made by a beneficiary under the bill. I have a letter from a prominent Detroit realtor inclosing a letter from a prominent trust company. The letter which the realtor incloses from the trust company is one in which the trust company offers to renew a $2,000 mortgage.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator to ask if it is section 5 to which he referred?

Mr. COUZENS. Yes; it is. The Senator from New Mexico offered an amendment which was adopted.

Mr. BRATTON. Yes; it was section 5.

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct—line 4, page 6.

Mr. COUZENS. The amendment which was proposed by the Senator from New Mexico is not in the printed copy of the bill I have.

Mr. COPELAND. I have the language here.

Mr. COUZENS. Will the Senator read it, please?

Mr. COPELAND. It read originally:

An actual net cost to the home owner in excess of the maximum legal rate of interest (regardless of any exemption from usury laws) in the State where such property is located.

As amended it reads:

An actual net cost to the home owner in excess of the maximum legal rate of interest and rates allowed for other charges permitted by contract (regardless of any exemption from usury laws) in the State where such property is located.

Mr. COUZENS. That amendment is wholly ineffective in protecting the borrower. Section 5, to which we have just been referring, was inserted in the House for the very purpose of protecting the borrower. It has now been so amended that it does not protect the borrower. I find nothing in the bill which would prevent companies doing just what is done in the case to which I was about to refer a moment ago, of a man who wants to renew or continue a mortgage of $2,000. This involves one of the little homes about which we have been talking. The trust company says, "We will renew the loan on a 6 per cent basis; but we want an appraisal fee of $3; title report, $7; recording fee, $1.25; photograph and survey, $5; and 3 per cent commission, $60." The man who wants to renew his loan for $2,000 is not only required to pay a 3 per cent commission for the privilege of renewing it, but he is compelled to pay $60 as a commission to the lender. What protection is there if the trust company comes to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or to the home-loan bank system and asks for money to help the little home owner? How is the little home owner going to be protected from paying this 3 per cent commission? There is nothing in the laws of Michigan which would prevent the trust company from charging the 3 per cent commission, so that even though the substitute which I propose may be reconsidered, the bill as amended by no means is complete and in proper shape for passage.

I have here another communication which among other things says, referring to the home loan bank bill:

It seems highly desirable that funds available by this act, intended ostensibly to aid home owners, should not be available for relending by member associations at exorbitant rates. It would seem quite contrary to the claims of the general intent of the act to furnish funds to member associations at, say, 5½ to 6 per cent, in order that the home owner be charged the rate he must at present pay in many cases.

There are existing outside of the jurisdiction of the District of Columbia many lending associations which charge an interest rate, with premium added, averaging 8.1 per cent. While they are doing this the stockholders of those institutions are getting 7 per cent. It is proposed to set up a new system of banking with the avowed purpose, of course, of making a profit. It would not be expected that they should operate without a profit. The associations which are going to profit from the home-loan banks are organizations that are already receiving 7 per cent. In other words, the small-home owner is already borrowing from an association that makes 7 per cent profit. Of course it has to be paid by the little-home owner. It is proposed now to impose upon that structure a new structure that will have to earn a dividend also.

There is on the outskirts of the District of Columbia an institution which charges, with premium, 8.4 per cent, and the stockholders receive 8 per cent. It is now proposed to impose upon that association another system which will have to earn dividends or it can not exist. Then there is another association which, with interest and premium, charges 9 per cent to the borrower and which pays 6 per cent on its stock. There is to be imposed upon that organization, which already charges the little-home owner 9 per cent, another system of banks which will be still more burdensome on the little-home owner, because under this system there is no plan for operation direct with the little-home owner except when and if he is unable to secure money from the banks or associations who are to be the beneficiaries under the terms of the bill.

I should state in connection with the rates upon which I have been commenting that it is alleged and stated that these are not the rates charged by the building and loan associations in Washington or the District of Columbia, and I do not want to give the wrong impression that the associations in the District of Columbia are charging any such rates.

It has been suggested, and I think it is a very wise suggestion, that no borrower should be required to pay more than 1½ per cent above the rate at which the bonds of the home-loan bank, if salable, are sold on the market. In other words, if, as stated by the proponents of the bill, they would be able to sell the bonds at, say 4½ per cent, it should not be permissible for any building and loan association or other beneficiary under the bill to charge more than 6 per cent. But, Mr. President, every single attempt that is made to limit the charge which the building and loan associations may make or which the banks or trust companies may make, is objected to and opposed. It is proposed that all the beneficiaries under the bill may continue to make the same profit and receive the same income that they have heretofore made, and yet there is to be pyramided on top of the money that they have heretofore made the maintenance of a new system of banking, namely, the home-loan banks.

I do not think it is necessary to go into a discussion of the outcome of the organization of the Federal farm-land banks or the joint-stock land banks, but I do not think it will do any harm to point out that the organization of those banks has been the means of encouraging unreasonable borrowing. It has also been shown quite conclusively that the Federal land banks and the joint-stock land banks have not by any means been a howling success. Some of them are in the hands of receivers. Some of them have suspended the payment of interest on their bonds. Others have suspended the making of loans.

I have been unable to find, Mr. President, where the market is for all the securities that are proposed to be issued under the home loan bank bill. The Federal farm-land banks are unable to sell their present securities at anywhere near par; the joint-stock land banks are unable to sell their securities; and yet the Senator from Indiana stated the other day that the success of the proposed home-loan banks was based on the hope that $1,800,000,000 of securities of the home-loan banks would be sold.

Mr. President, it is absurd, under existing conditions or under any conditions that we are able to visualize, to contend that $1,800,000,000 worth of bonds of the home-loan banks, not guaranteed by the Government, can be sold to the American public.

Not only that, Mr. President, but there has already been advanced to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by the Federal Treasury over three-fourths of a billion dollars borrowed from the people of the United States. Why? Because the Reconstruction Finance Corporation have not dared to attempt to sell their debentures or bonds in competition with Government bonds, even though the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bonds are guaranteed by the Government.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. KING. In view of the fact that the appropriation made was only $500,000,000, I was wondering where the Reconstruction Corporation obtained the residue of money with which to make the loans, aggregating, as the Senator said, practically a billion dollars, unless they did sell debentures?

Mr. COUZENS. The Treasury Department has been taking them; they have not offered anything on the market. There have been no offerings from any source of the securities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. KING. That is to say, the Treasury has been taking their securities instead of the public taking them?

Mr. COUZENS. Yes; outside the $500,000,000, which the Government subscribed in the form of stock, additional money has been advanced by the Treasury Department on debentures or securities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. KING. One other question, if the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. COUZENS. Yes.

Mr. KING. As I understand, under the terms of the pending bill as it was originally introduced, the capital stock was to be $125,000,000, which was to be supplied by the Federal Government. Upon that slender or narrow basis do the proponents of this measure suggest that they will be able to float $1,800,000,000 of bonds or securities of the proposed home-loan banks?

Mr. COUZENS. That was the contention of the able financier from Indiana. The able financier from Indiana contended that, on a basis of $125,000,000 and whatever other contributions they could get from private agencies which are beneficiaries under the proposed act, the home-loan banks could sell $1,800,000,000 worth of their bonds, and he said it would be necessary to sell that many in order to make a success of the home-loan bank system.

Mr. President, from the debate that has taken place and from the manner in which the bill came from the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate, it seems to be indicated that there was a unanimous opinion in its support on the part of the committees of both the House and the Senate. Of course, that is not correct, although it is correct that no minority views were filed by the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency. There are, however, some very strong minority views expressed by members of the House committee. I want to read a portion of those minority views as they appear on page 13 of the report submitted to the House of Representatives by Mr. REILLY, of the Banking and Currency Committee. It will be remembered that the Senator from Indiana submitted this report as his own report; in other words, the Senator said in the beginning of the consideration of the pending measure that we might accept the House report on the bill as his report.

Mr. STEVENSON, on page 13, gives numerous reasons for his opposition to the bill. I am not going to read the first reason because it is rather technical as to the territory covered.

The second reason I draw specifically to the attention of the Senator from New York, whose particular interest seems to be in the building and loan associations. In his minority views Mr. STEVENSON says:

> Second. I am opposed to the feature of the bill which authorizes State banks, trust companies, or other banking organizations to be embraced in this bill.

Therefore, Mr. President, it can not properly be said, as has repeatedly been said, that this bill is for the purpose of aiding building and loan associations and their small-home-owner customers.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I hope before we get through that we may amend that feature of the bill so as to make it a building and loan association bill.

Mr. COUZENS. Continuing to quote from the views of the minority:

> The finance reconstruction act and the Glass-Steagall bill were designed to relieve that class of institution, and I am opposed to encouraging commercial banks or institutions who receive demand deposits to embark on a venture in which they must make long-time loans on real estate in order to be eligible. Furthermore, it opens the door of the Treasury of the United States to the banks and trust companies, who will probably monopolize the available funds to the exclusion of the building and loan associations, which are the logical method of approach for relief by the home owner. I am also of the opinion that the relief, even though these institutions directly to the home owner, will be negligible, if banks are allowed to be in this institution.
> We undertook early in the present session of Congress to facilitate the making of loans to farmers under the farm loan act, and to stop foreclosures by the land banks by providing $125,000,000 capital to the land banks, and yet we find that in the last six months up to March 31 of this year that the number of loans to farmers had decreased about 4,000 in number, and $24,000,000 in money due from the farmers, and there was $3,102,288 more worth of farms owned by said banks at the end of the same period.

Mr. President, it is quite clear that the $125,000,000 we appropriated for the Federal land banks is not being used for the purpose for which we appropriated it, namely, making loans to farmers. I reiterate that there is not a word in this bill, nor any provision in the bill, requiring one single cent of Federal money to be passed on to the little-home owner; and from our recent experience in connection with the advance of $125,000,000 of Government money to the Federal land banks it is quite reasonable to expect that the same thing will happen with respect to the home-loan banks. In other words, since we have advanced the money to the Federal land banks actual loans have been contracted, showing that the recipients of the $125,000,000 have been using it to pay the interest on their bonds and dividends rather than passing it on. There is not a word in this bill which would prevent any bank or trust company or any building and loan association from accepting the benefits of the money put up by the Government to organize the proposed home-loan banks and using it to liquefy themselves.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. That is exactly the feeling I have had about the measure, that if commercial banks and other banks not primarily engaged in loaning money for homes on mortgages had the benefit of rediscount in the home-loan banks they would avail themselves of the privileges, as the Senator has said, for the purpose of adding to their liquidity. As the Senator said the other day, instead of being able to boast that they were 80 per cent liquid, they would be able to boast that they were 95 per cent liquid, which, to my mind, is not a very worthy boast on the part of a banking institution. That, however, is a difficulty which comes from including in the class of borrowing institutions those banking establishments which are not primarily organized to lend for home loans. I agree with what the Senator says about that.

Mr. COUZENS. Continuing to quote from the views of the minority filed by Mr. STEVENSON, of the House committee, he says:

> This means that instead of the farmers getting the benefits of the $125,000,000, the bondholders and bankers dealing with the farm-loan banks have absolutely absorbed the one hundred and twenty-five millions, and 4,000 farmers have been closed out in one way or another.

Mr. President, with that example staring us in the face in the case of the recent appropriation of $125,000,000 for the benefit of the farmers, what may we expect in this instance? Where has that $125,000,000 gone? It has gone to the benefit of bondholders and bankers who have been dealing in farm loans, and that is just what is going to repeat itself under this bill. We are going to set up permanently another system of banks. What for? To relieve these associations from their frozen assets. What will they do when they get the money? They are going to use it the same as the Federal land banks have done, for the benefit of the bondholders and the bankers dealing in this sort of loans, while at the same time since we have been in session 4,000 farmers have been closed out.

Mr. President, there is not a word in this bill, there is not a provision in this bill that will prevent doing the very same thing; namely, securing a Federal appropriation to help out the banks and the institutions that loan money to home owners, while at the same time they are foreclosing mortgages on the homes that we are supposed to protect. This bill does not do it.

Continuing to quote:

If the banks and trust companies are allowed to come into this institution and dominate it, it simply means that the $125,000,000 proposed to be put up in these institutions by the Government will be absorbed in taking over the frozen real-estate loans of the banks and trust companies and building and loan associations that have themselves loaned injudiciously.

The bill contains no provisions whereby a home owner or a prospective home owner can directly borrow from these institutions, although that question was propounded to the committee during the consideration, and no gesture was made by those formulating the bill to make such provision. Hence, I assert that the bill as enacted in the present form will merely be for the betterment of the position of banks, trust companies, and widely extended building and loan associations, with negligible benefits to the home owner whose welfare was so solicitously proclaimed in behalf of this bill.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield for that purpose?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Dale	Jones	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Davis	Kean	Schall
Bailey	Dickinson	Kendrick	Sheppard
Barbour	Dill	Keyes	Shipstead
Bingham	Fess	King	Shortridge
Black	Fletcher	La Follette	Smoot

Connally	Hayden	Nye	Watson
Coolidge	Hebert	Patterson	White
Copeland	Howell	Pittman
Costigan	Hull	Reed

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have printed and lie on the desk, which I will bring up later, with respect to this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. COUZENS. I continue to read the objections filed in the minority report in the House to the pending home loan bank bill.

On page 14 of the views of the minority I find that the third objection advanced by Mr. STEVENSON was the following:

Third. My next objection to this trouble referred to—of diverting the resources where provided to other than home-building projects—is found in section 9, subdivision 2, paragraph (i), page 24, of the bill.

If the Senate will turn to page 24 of the bill, to which the minority report refers, and look at subdivision (2), paragraph (i), they will find the following:

(i) Each Federal home-loan bank shall at all times have an amount equal to the sums paid in on outstanding capital subscriptions of its members, plus an amount equal to the current deposits received from its members and from nonmember borrowers, invested in (1) obligations of the United States, (2) deposits in banks or trust companies, (3) advances with maturity not greater than one year made to members or nonmember borrowers upon such terms and conditions as the board may prescribe.

I will not take up the time of the Senate to continue reading the whole paragraph, because I am going to read what the minority report says in that connection:

That paragraph provides that all capital stock and deposits paid in by members and nonmember borrowers shall be invested in (1) obligations of the United States, (2) deposits in banks and trust companies, (3) advances with maturity not greater than one year made to members or nonmember borrowers upon such terms and conditions as the board may prescribe, and (4) advances with maturity not greater than one year made to members or nonmember borrowers the amount of whose creditor liabilities (not including advances from the Federal home-loan bank) does not exceed 5 per cent of such members' or nonmember borrowers' net assets, which advances may be made without the security of home mortgages or other security, upon such terms and conditions as the board may prescribe.

It will be noted that this kind of loan absorbs all of the capital stock and deposits provided to be paid in by members and nonmember borrowers. It is to be invested either with or without security, or deposited in banks or trust companies, or invested in the obligations of the United States. That means, if I understand it, that the directors are turned loose to put that money in the banks and trust companies indefinitely, and that so far from providing a fund for home builders, if they loan it they can loan it without security of home mortgages or other security. Of course, a home mortgage contemplates borrowing from them for more than a year, and this provision, therefore, takes away all the capital, except such as is furnished by the United States, for temporary loans to banks, for purchase of United States bonds, or loans without security to members and nonmember borrowers, and they can loan to members and nonmember borrowers, who have borrowed to the limit of their assets from the Federal home-loan banks, without security, because the liabilities which are counted to make up the 5 per cent of their net assets do not embrace advances made by the home-loan bank.

I consider this a very serious defect in the bill, and I endeavored to exclude it in committee, but unsuccessfully.

While I am on that point, Mr. President, I want to say that if the Senate reconsiders the vote by which the so-called Couzens substitute was agreed to and we go back to the original bill, I will propose an amendment to have this paragraph excluded from the bill. The minority report continues:

I am unalterably opposed to creating any more institutions that are to sell securities which are tax exempt. Section 12 of the bill provides for exemption from all Federal or State taxation, except surtaxes, estate, inheritance, and gift taxes. This is one of the things that have been indulged which must be stopped, and the way to stop it is to kill or amend every bill of that kind that comes before Congress. We are even now confronted by the need to raise revenue and handicapped in that matter by the fact that the Government is being embarrassed with every device that can be found for hiding the property of the citizens from the taxing power. We inveigh against it and then go on providing new tax-exempt securities and providing new shelters in which to hide from the imposition of taxes, so that citizens do not all bear their share of the burden.

Mr. President, I want to emphasize to the Senate that all during the debate on the revenue act of 1932 wails of complaint went up against increasing the surtax rate. Protest was vigorously made that it would not catch those citizens who had their money invested in tax-exempt securities. That was one of the main arguments as to why it was useless and unfair to raise the surtax rates. Now, in spite of the general condemnation of the Federal Government's, the States', and the municipalities' issuing tax-exempt securities so that persons may invest in them and avoid taxation, it is now proposed that we set up another agency that is supposed to issue $1,800,000,000 more of tax-exempt securities.

Mr. President, just what is the sincerity of all this protest against the issuance of tax-exempt securities when it is deliberately proposed that we pass a bill which would authorize, according to the statements of the Senator from Indiana, the issuance of $1,800,000,000 more of tax-exempt securities?

I read further from the minority report:

This same bill was, in effect, submitted to former Secretary Mellon on May 21, 1921; and Mr. Mellon, in writing to the Hon. George P. McLean, chairman of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, made this statement:

It is not very often I quote the great Secretary of the Treasury as my authority, but it seems as though in this case we are absolutely in accord. He said:

The institutions proposed to be established under the bill would not be banks and should not properly be called banks. And it would be undesirable even to a limited extent to introduce their bonds, secured by land mortgages, into the Federal reserve system. The proposal to designate the Federal home-loan bonds as instrumentalities of the Government of the United States and to confer upon them full exemption from Federal, State, and local taxation is also fundamentally objectionable from the point of view of the Treasury. It would amount to an indirect Government subsidy in a most dangerous form. For the reasons indicated in my letter of April 30 to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, I am opposed to the further creation of tax-exempt securities, and believe that prompt steps should be taken, by constitutional amendment where necessary, to control or prohibit future issues.

Mr. President, the Senate and the House have debated for hours the question of tax-exempt securities. It is well known that during the war the first Liberty loan bonds were made wholly tax exempt. The issues afterwards authorized were only partially exempt from taxation. Condemnation has been made of the fact that the States and the municipalities and all of their political subdivisions are continuing to build up a great amount of tax-exempt securities, which, it is alleged, defeat in part, at least, the Government revenue from surtaxes. Yet under the pending bill it is proposed that we set up another organization which may issue unlimited amounts of tax-exempt securities.

It is contended that this is all necessary for the little-home owner, and I repeat what I have often said before, that there is not a word in this bill which would assure the little-home owner that he would get one single cent of benefit from the enactment of this legislation.

I continue to quote from the minority report, which was concurred in by four of the members of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House:

If large and long-term bond issues are made with tax exemption to the limit and bought by the public, when constitutional action such as Mr. Mellon suggests is taken to prevent the issuance of such securities, these outstanding bonds could not be affected and for many years would still remain as a shield to those who desired to avoid taxation, and while it is urged that it is necessary to bring that condition about by constitutional amendment, the only way to bring it about is to stop the sale of such bonds now, wherever we can, and demonstrate to the country that we mean to abolish the habit.

I have formerly, myself, been doubtful of the wisdom of such constitutional amendment, but the history of the last few years has compelled me to the conclusion that such an amendment should be adopted, but why adopt it after the country has been saturated with tax-exempt securities which can not be affected by such constitutional amendment, which would tend, if applied to such securities, to divest vested right?

I interject at this point, Mr. President, that any attempt constitutionally to prohibit the further issuance of tax-exempt securities would of course greatly enhance, to the extent of millions of dollars, the value of the tax-exempt securities which are already out. I continue to quote:

For these reasons I am forced to confess that I am not able to support the bill, however much I desire to aid the humble citizen who wants to build a home, and regret that this bill is not so drawn as to accomplish that most laudable purpose unless radically amended in the particulars indicated.

On page 16 of the House report, which was adopted by the Senator from Indiana as his report, there appear the minority views of Mr. CLYDE WILLIAMS, in which he said:

This particular legislation seems to have originated with the President and his conference on home building and home ownership. The Department of Commerce and Doctor Gries have taken charge of the bill. I am informed that Doctor Gries has office space in the Commerce Building but has no official connection with the department. A large number of questionnaires were sent out by the Commerce Department, accompanied by a statement of the President, but without copy of the bill, and, I understand, without the knowledge of the author of the bill. The questionnaire in effect asked the institutions if additional money and credit in their community were desirable and would be helpful. A great deal of stress is placed upon the fact that a majority of them answered "Yes." This questionnaire was prepared, I am informed, at the expense of much time by the clerks in the Commerce Department. The question very properly arises: Why this extreme interest in this measure by this department? I have never known of the Commerce Department being consulted about a banking measure before. A system of banks is to be established, involving a line of real-estate credit for the entire country, and the Commerce Department is called in to pass on it and to ascertain the public sentiment. Legislation of a similar nature to this was introduced in the Sixty-sixth and Sixty-seventh Congresses, and the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. GLASS, in the first case, and Mr. Mellon, in the last, both reported against the measure. This may account for the fact that no representative of the Treasury Department or the Federal Reserve Board has been called during all the time the extensive hearings have been held on this bill. It does seem strange that none of the financial agencies or authorities of the Government have been heard on a bill that seeks to establish a system of home-loan banks; but, on the other hand, the Commerce Department has had the only say, so far as the hearings show.

Mr. President, is not that a rather unusual circumstance? Does it not indicate quite clearly that the Commerce Department interest was primarily in commerce and not in protecting the little-home owner who was about to lose his home by the foreclosure of a mortgage? It would be logical to contend that the financial agencies of the Government would be consulted as to the wisdom and merits of the bill, but that does not appear in the hearings in the House to have been done.

Mr. WILLIAMS continues, under the caption, "Who are for the bill," on page 16 of the minority views, as follows:

It makes no difference who are for a measure or against it, if there is a national necessity for it and the measure is sound, and its scope within the proper governmental activity, then it should be enacted.

At that point I desire to point out that I do not remember a time during a session of Congress where there has been such a stream of propaganda against complying with the demand of minorities. There is not a Member of the House nor of this body who has not protested vigorously against our surrendering to the demands of a minority. I submit, Mr. President, that the merits of a bill should not rest upon who proposes it or who opposes it. I submit that the question naturally should be, Is the passage of the bill in the public interest or is it just based upon the demands of a minority who are demanding the legislation for a special private interest? I submit that the record shows, both in the House and in the Senate, that there is no public demand for the bill. The record will further show that the demand that does exist comes from a special group which would benefit by the enactment of the measure.

Continuing to read from the minority views:

But the question of who are for a measure often determines its necessity and throws some light on the motives behind its chief proponents. What institutions would be especially interested in this bill?

1. Building and loan associations.
2. Real-estate boards.
3. Savings banks.
4. Commercial banks and trust companies.
5. Insurance companies.
6. Mortgage bankers.

That covers the field in a general way.

The United States Building and Loan League at its convention in Philadelphia last August discussed various proposals along the line suggested in this bill and then voted to lay them all on the table, and several of the States have passed resolutions against the proposal.

Yet it is contended by some of the proponents of the measure, particularly the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], that the building and loan associations of America desire the passage of the bill. That is not the fact; but it is the fact that the building and loan associations of his own State are not in favor of the enactment of the legislation.

Mr. President, this is not a local issue. I have no special interest in the defeat or passage of the bill, except that I am trying to prevent an incubus being placed upon the workers of America that will continue indefinitely to be a burden upon them. There is no possible way to aid the workers on the farm, to aid the workers in the mines, to aid the workers in the factories by continually pyramiding one financial agency upon another.

Everyone knows that all of the enormous and even the little financial institutions have to be supported by the workers. Merely to observe the marble halls and the marble staircases of the Federal reserve banks and of many of the National and State banks must be shocking to the workers in the mines and the factories and on the farms, because it reminds them that they are supporting those institutions. There is no other means of support for them. There is no way of supporting those great mansions, those great halls for business, except by the sweat of the workers. So, Mr. President, why pyramid great financial institutions upon great financial institutions which can only be supported by the groups of workers to whom I have referred? No Senator dare rise on the floor to defend such a proposal or to deny that assertion. No human being can successfully deny that all of us here can only be supported by the work performed on the farms and in the mines and in the factories, so why do we now seriously consider erecting another incubus upon those already in existence?

I continue to quote, under the head of Federal Land Banks, from page 17 of the minority views. It is there shown that on March 31, 1932, there were in existence 405,481 loans amounting to $1,150,293,499, while on September 30, 1931, there were 409,476 loans in an aggregate of $1,174,295,621; that on September 30, 1931, there was real estate owned of the value of $28,274,601, while on March 31, 1932, the real estate owned was $31,376,889. The table from which I have quoted these figures shows that even under the press of the depression, which is the power behind the drive to enact this bill, the agencies organized for the purpose of helping the farmer are doing just the reverse thing, to wit, decreasing the number of farm loans. I quote further:

> There were 3,995 fewer loans March 31, 1932, than on September 30, 1931, or six months; $24,002,122 less money loaned to farmers March 31, 1932, than September 30, 1931, or six months; $3,102,288 more owned in real estate March 31, 1932, than September 30, 1931, or six months.

What does that mean? It illustrates that the Federal farm-land banks—and the same statement would be also applicable to the home-loan banks—protect their own interests. What have they done? They came to the Federal Government and got $125,000,000 more and used it, of course, to protect their own interests, because it is clearly shown that there are nearly 4,000 less farmers benefiting under the act than there were six months before they got the additional money, and that there had been required to be taken over $3,000,000 more of farms.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I infer from the report submitted yesterday that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has advanced but about $30,000,000 of the $125,000,000 thus far. It looks as though they have not done much of anything with the additional money.

Mr. COUZENS. I have their report here also, but I was of the opinion that more of it had been loaned out.

Mr. FLETCHER. The report says that the Corporation "also has allocated $85,000,000 to the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with the provisions of section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, and has agreed to make loans to the several Federal land banks up to an aggregate amount of $30,000,000." I can not understand why they have not agreed to lend the $125,000,000.

Mr. COUZENS. It may be the applications have not been made. I have no information as to that.

Continuing to read from the minority report:

> The National Association of Real Estate Boards at its meeting in Baltimore last summer refused to indorse any plan for Federal home-loan banks; real-estate boards are not eligible for membership in the proposed banks, but are interested in home building and financing, and many of them have gone on record against the bill: St. Paul, Kansas City, Denver, Chicago, and others.
> The savings banks have recorded opposition to the proposed legislation.
> The American Bankers' Association, through its interim committee and its executive council at White Sulphur Springs, has entered its opposition to the measure. All the leading life insurance companies are against it, and the mortgage bankers of the country are united in their opposition to the bill.

Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT] comes from a great insurance State, and it was undoubtedly because of the need of the insurance companies for some protection that the Senator from Connecticut submitted his amendment to limit the operations of the home-loan banks to five years. The lending privileges are limited to 5 years and they are required to liquidate within 15 years. The Senate adopted that amendment—why? Because it was perfectly obvious that there was need only for a temporary agency to carry over the distress period. All during the history of the Nation, all during the times of the greatest number of immigrants coming into our country, all during the times of the greatest growth in population there has been adequate money for home financing.

It is not money for home financing that the small home owner wants. What he wants is a stability of income. When we have so organized our capitalistic system that we can assure a better distribution of the income of the Nation we shall not be required or called upon to build up more credit and financial institutions and still more credit and financial institutions. No one can successfully deny that a national income of anywhere from seventy to ninety billion dollars is quite adequate to provide for all the people of the United States. The trouble is our inability to find a majority opinion on ways and means to secure a distribution of the national income so that the workers may be assured of a respectable living.

I continue to quote from the views of the minority.

> This record is given to show that there is no unanimity of indorsement of the plan by any of the great institutions that are eligible for membership. There may be found some advocates for the measure among all the classes, and there is certainly considerable well-organized activity for the plan among some of the building and loan associations.

I desire to quote from the minority views under the caption "Is there a great national need for the system?" I may interject at this point that my whole opposition to this bill, the reason that I have consumed so much time and have gone into the matter so thoroughly, is because I doubted seriously that there was "a great national need for the system." After listening for hours and hours to the hearings, I became convinced that there was not "a great national need for the system." I recognized the strong appeal the word "home" has; I recognize that I am tackling a rather unpopular job and that I will not get much support, because it appears on the surface and to those who do not think about the basis of the proposal that it may be unwise and unpolitic to attempt to defeat legislation supposed to be for the benefit of the little home owner. Reading further from the views of the minority:

> No one will deny that it is desirable for all who can to own a home. There is a great appeal in this measure. There is, no doubt, needs for additional funds among certain home-loan institutions of the country. This system will help some of the institutions, but the help to home owners will be negligible. The system of the Federal home-loan bank is modeled somewhat after the Federal land-bank plan. If there is a real, genuine need for a separate line of real estate credit as distinguished from commercial credit, then why not establish one system instead of several; one for farm lands, one for homes, one for apartments, and still another for the factory or business house?

Mr. President, that really hits the nail on the head. It raises the question, are we going continually to be setting up financial agencies to take care of every special interest that appeals to us? We started the ball rolling when we established the Federal land banks. No one claims that they have been a howling success. Now, we propose to set up a Federal home-loan bank system. I predict, Mr. President, that in a very short while there will be a demand to set up a system for apartment-house ownership. I submit, Mr. President, that if we adopt a special banking system and set up 12 home-loan banks, there is not any justifiable reason why we should not respond to a demand from the individual who has a home in an apartment house to support and finance apartment-house enterprises. Then, Mr. President, having complied and responded to the demand for land banks, for home banks, for apartment-house banks, we shall be called upon to respond to a banking system for factories, shops, and department and other stores. I am unable to see any reason why we should deny to one minority group the same privileges and rights that we grant to another minority group; and that is just what we are doing every time we start out to set up a new system. The views of the minority continue:

> It can hardly be said that the Federal land-bank system of this country has been a howling success. The entire system with all its governmental subsidy is carrying but 12 per cent of the farm loans of the country.

Mr. President, are we going to set up another extensive system like the Federal land-bank system to carry less than 12 per cent of the home loans of America? I hope not.

Continuing with the quotation:

When depression came, when hard times were upon us, when the value of farm products dropped, when interest and tax payments became due, when the farmer was in real distress and needed an extension of time and further credit, what did our land banks do? Did they extend the time of payment, did they lend a helping hand to the farmer? No. They found their own securities selling in some cases for almost nothing and found themselves on the verge of bankruptcy and ruin, and instead of being in a position or in a condition to help the farmer for whose benefit they had been organized, they come scurrying to shelter and begging and pleading with the Government to save them and their system from wreck.

Mr. President, that is exactly what they have done; that is exactly what is going to happen in this case. Why, after all this past experience, do we deliberately walk into the same sort of thing by another system of banks?

Continuing to quote:

And so in a time of great national need, instead of being a benefit and of assistance, they became as a millstone around the neck of the Government, and this Congress was compelled to come to their aid and give them an additional $125,000,000 to save them from bankruptcy.

Mr. President, what happened after they got it? We have saved the banks from bankruptcy but we have not saved the farmers from bankruptcy. Yet the great urge when we organized the Federal land banks was the farmer; it was said that we must do something for the farmer. Now we have the urge, and the only motive power behind this bill is the urge, of what is supposed to be the benefit of the small home owner. Mr. President, history will repeat itself. The same thing will happen to the proposed Federal home-loan bank system that has happened to the Federal land-bank system. Just why do we go into this thing in view of our past experience and endeavor to establish a system which, in effect, will be of no benefit to the home owner and will be, in fact, misleading as to what he may expect from it?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I ask unanimous consent to introduce, out of order, a bill and request that a brief accompanying statement explanatory of the bill may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I want to ask the Senator to withhold the transaction of any business, if he will do so.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It will not delay matters at all.

Mr. LONG. I understand that; but it will make possible another call for a quorum, whereas if no business is transacted that can not be done.

Mr. COUZENS. May I suggest to the Senator that I did not yield for that purpose, and there has already been business transacted, so I now suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Couzens	Johnson	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Dale	Jones	Schall
Bailey	Davis	Kean	Sheppard
Barbour	Dickinson	Kendrick	Shipstead
Bingham	Dill	Keyes	Shortridge
Black	Fess	King	Smoot
Blaine	Fletcher	La Follette	Steiwer
Borah	Frazier	Lewis	Stephens
Bratton	George	Long	Thomas, Idaho
Brookhart	Glass	McGill	Townsend
Broussard	Glenn	McKellar	Trammell
Bulkley	Goldsborough	McNary	Tydings
Bulow	Gore	Metcalf	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Hale	Moses	Wagner
Capper	Harrison	Norbeck	Walcott
Caraway	Hastings	Norris	Walsh, Mass.
Cohen	Hatfield	Nye	Watson
Connally	Hayden	Patterson	White
Coolidge	Hebert	Pittman
Copeland	Howell	Reed
Costigan	Hull	Robinson, Ark.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, for some unaccountable reason the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] seems to think that this is a filibuster.

I want to say that this is in no sense a filibuster. He gave me a warning a while ago that a 1-man filibuster could not succeed. I am not trying to filibuster. I have not said one word that was not strictly relevant to this subject. Neither have I said anything or read anything that has heretofore been said on the floor of the Senate.

I am unalterably opposed to reconsideration of the provision previously adopted by the Senate. If, however, that should be accomplished, as I understand it will, by the Senator from Indiana—he has been threatening me right along that he had the votes—there will be plenty of amendments, because in no sense has the bill been perfected.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, the Senator will admit that he is against the bill?

Mr. COUZENS. Oh, I have repeatedly said—I have been saying it all the time the Senator was out at lunch—that I am against the bill.

Mr. WATSON. And the Senator will admit that he wants to do everything he can to kill it?

Mr. COUZENS. Certainly; because I think it is a very bad thing for the Federal Government to undertake.

Mr. WATSON. I do not know whether we have the votes to reconsider it or not.

Mr. COUZENS. Oh, yes; the Senator does.

Mr. WATSON. I think we have; but is not the Senator willing that the vote should be taken and that the majority may have its way on the proposition?

Mr. COUZENS. Certainly. That is the point I tried to make when I got up, because there seemed to be a feeling around that I was against a vote. I am not against a vote.

Mr. WATSON. Why does not the Senator let us vote, then?

Mr. COUZENS. Because the Senate has not all the facts yet.

Mr. WATSON. Oh!

Mr. COUZENS. When the Senate gets all the facts, and I am satisfied it has had all the facts, I certainly shall not object, as I never have objected, to the majority rule.

Mr. WATSON. About how long does my good friend think it will take him to elucidate the bill properly and array the facts before the Senate?

Mr. COUZENS. I am not quite sure. Now I want to make a parliamentary inquiry. I understood that we had an agreement to take up the emergency relief bill at the convening of the Senate.

Mr. WATSON. No; we did not. This bill is the unfinished business.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COUZENS. On the calendar of to-day there is the following note:

SPECIAL ORDER

Ordered, by unanimous consent, That the bill (H. R. 9642) to authorize supplemental appropriations for emergency highway construction, with a view to increasing employment, be made a special order immediately after convening of the Senate July 12, 1932. [July 11, 1932.]

The parliamentary inquiry is, when that is applicable. The question again arises about the meaning of the word "immediately."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the rule, a special order gives way for the unfinished business. The unfinished business takes precedence.

Mr. COUZENS. Then this special order does not mean anything?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Oh, yes. The relief bill follows the home loan bank bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. COUZENS. Then it does not mean what it says—that the emergency relief bill will come up immediately after convening of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; it does not say that.

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; it does not say that. It was made a special order for that time.

Mr. WATSON. That is right.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That does not mean that the special order always comes up at the time for which it is set.

Mr. WATSON. That is right.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Because, under the precedents, when a bill is made a special order it takes a place behind the unfinished business. That is the result of legal decisions affecting the rules.

Mr. WATSON. That is correct.

Mr. COUZENS. I still contend, then, that the language does not mean what it says.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has asked a very pertinent question, and the Chair will read the rule:

RULE X

Any subject may, by a vote of two-thirds of the Senators present, be made a special order; and when the time so fixed for its consideration arrives the Presiding Officer shall lay it before the Senate, unless there be unfinished business of the preceding day, and if it is not finally disposed of on that day it shall take its place on the Calendar of Special Orders in the order of time at which it was made special, unless it shall become by adjournment the unfinished business.

Mr. COUZENS. Then, Mr. President, this special order is based on a rule, and not the language of the order itself?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule governs.

Mr. COUZENS. I am not disputing the rule or the ruling of the Chair; but I want to say that the language means nothing except as it is based on the rule.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; the Senator is entirely wrong about that. He is entirely right in the assumption that the special order gives place to the unfinished business.

Mr. WATSON. The special order, I will say to the Senator from Michigan, must be considered with reference to the rule.

Mr. COUZENS. I am not disputing that. What I am saying is that the special order as printed here, without relation to the rules, means nothing.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I very ardently trust that my friend will not ask the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] for an interpretation of the word "immediately."

Mr. COUZENS. I am not asking the Senator from Connecticut. I was asking the Senator from Indiana, our great leader——

Mr. WATSON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. COUZENS (continuing). If this language means nothing except as it is interpreted by a rule.

Mr. WATSON. That is right.

Mr. COUZENS. I want to say, then, that I was rather dumb. I did not know that the language did not mean what it said; that it means only what the rule implies it to mean.

Now, Mr. President, we are going to discuss some more of the angles of the Federal home loan bank bill, because I still am of the opinion that the Senators do not know what the opposition to this bill is, nor the basis for it; nor do the Senators know what has happened to the Federal land-bank system, or they would not be in sympathy with starting another system which will be just as much of a failure for the homeowner as the Federal land-bank system has been for the farmer.

I have just read, while nearly every Senator was out at his lunch, a detailed statement of what has happened to the Federal land-bank system. Not only that, but I pointed out that the $125,000,000 that we appropriated within the last few months has not gone for the benefit of the farmer. Everyone knows that a financial institution is first interested in itself. It first must protect its bonds, its stockholders, before it considers the welfare even of its customers; and, as I have already read from the minority report filed in the House, I am sure that if the RECORD is read the Senate will be convinced that there is no justification for setting up another such system.

When the quorum was called I was reading from the minority report, on page 17, as follows:

The entire system with all its governmental subsidy—

That is, referring to the Federal land-bank system—

The entire system with all its governmental subsidy is carrying but 12 per cent of the farm loans of the country. When depression came, when hard times were upon us, when the value of farm products dropped, when interest and tax payments became due, when the farmer was in real distress and needed an extension of time and further credit, what did our land banks do?

They did just exactly what the home-loan banks would do now, and forever afterwards if we had other depressions.

Did they extend the time of payment; did they lend a helping hand to the farmer? No. They found their own securities selling in some cases for almost nothing and found themselves on the verge of bankruptcy and ruin, and instead of being in a position or in a condition to help the farmer for whose benefits they had been organized, they come scurrying to shelter and begging and pleading with the Government to save them and their system from wreck. And so, in a time of great national need, instead of being a benefit and of assistance, they became as a millstone around the neck of the Government and this Congress was compelled to come to their aid and give them an additional $125,000,000 to save them from bankruptcy.

In the light of that experience, why should there be set up still another system of real-estate credit at the expense of the Government? If there must be a Federal mortgage-loan plan to furnish real-estate credit, why not put it into one system and upon a sound, financial basis? In these days when there is an urgent demand for a consolidation of boards and bureaus, a real necessity for a combination and coordination of related activities, why should there be established another national system of banks?

Just simply pyramiding the incubus which has to be supported by the man who works on the farm, in the mine, and in the factory. There is no general, urgent, national need for home-loan banks; and, as I said before, we have been condemned by the press and by industry for responding to the demands of minorities.

I submit that this is simply a demand of a very small minority, and we are responding to that demand, first, because the bill contains the attractive name "home," and secondly, it is indorsed by the President of the United States and backed with all the force of his political organization. The pending bill would not get anywhere if it were not for the support and backing of the President of the United States and his political organization.

I continue to quote:

There is no general, urgent, national need for Federal home-loan banks. This measure was first heralded as a great business reviver. That it would encourage home building and furnish a market for building materials and employment for workmen. The President said, among other things, that its purpose was "to assist in the revival of home construction in many parts of the country and with its resultant increase of employment." Again he said, "A considerable part of our unemployment is due to stagnation in residential construction."

As I have said, there is not a word in this bill, not a sentence, not a provision, that the money which is to be put up by the Federal Government is ever going to get to the home owner. There is not a single provision that a dollar will be loaned to a man who desires to build a home. Yet the President said, when he indorsed this bill, that it was to provide employment.

Mr. President, if that is the purpose of the bill, why do we not say that every dollar that is advanced by the Federal home-loan banks must go for one of two purposes, either to relieve the little-home owner who is already in distress, or to provide a home for a man who is able to advance 50 per cent of the money? The latter would give employment, and the former would relieve the home owner from having his home mortgage foreclosed.

The pending bill, Mr. President, is a deceptive bill. The bill was heralded in all the press notices as a home loan bank bill. It is nothing of the kind. It is a bill to relieve the financial agencies which are overloaded with home mortgages.

Mr. President, I do not want to mislead. I admit that some of the money that is to be provided under this bill might get to the home owner, there might be some financial institution which would carry a home mortgage as a result of its ability to get money from this source; but if that is the only thing that is holding it back, I submit that my substitute would take care of that. That is the reason why I was not willing to rise here and protest the passage of the home loan bank bill, and, at the same time, offer no relief in any form to the little-home owner who was about to have the mortgage on his home foreclosed.

I venture to say that if the situation is taken care of temporarily by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation through a division incorporated therein that will pay special attention to the little-home owner, long before the Congress repeals the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act we will find that there are adequate facilities for taking care of the mortgages on the little homes.

I continue to quote from the report:

The author of the bill, the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. LUCE, is quoted as saying in December, 1931: "The speedy enactment of this legislation is of the utmost importance, not only to the manufacturers of building supplies but, of far greater importance, to those thousands upon thousands of artisans in the building field now out of employment." The questionnaire which the Commerce Department sent out, with all its suggestion and appeal, could not get a majority of the institutions that answered to say there was a need for home construction or remodeling even if credit was furnished. It developed in the hearings what everybody but a very limited few already knew, that there was very generally an overbuilt condition in the country. So the excuse for this legislation had to shift to other grounds.

Mr. President, that is absolutely true. When the President had his home conference here in Washington, it was primarily called for the very laudable purpose of encouraging home building. It is a very laudable undertaking to use every possible means to encourage a man to get his home. No one wants to stand in the way of anyone getting a home who has the desire or ability to maintain a home. So when the conference was called for the purpose of encouraging the building of more homes, for the purpose of enabling people to get homes, nothing was said in the call of the conference to the effect that it was for relieving the home owner who was in debt. That was not a part of the agenda of the conference. One may read the minutes and the hearings of that conference and the decisions and the conclusions of the conference and he will find nothing in it with respect to what is now proposed to be accomplished by the enactment of this legislation.

Mr. President, when they found that the country was overbuilt, due to the great construction period of 1924, 1925, 1926, 1927, and 1928; when they found that there was no more need for homes, with the curtailment of immigration, with the generally depressed condition, with the fact that many families were doubling up, that there was a surplus of homes in view of these things, and no need for new construction, what then happened? They switched their ground and said, "Oh, we must have the banks just the same, but we must now put it on the ground that they are for the purpose of preventing foreclosures of mortgages on the poor man's home." So the excuse for this legislation had to be shifted to other grounds. I quote further:

Then it was said this measure would be of immediate help to the home owner. It was not for the purpose of encouraging new home building, but to help refinance the home with a mortgage on it; enable the man who by reason of misfortune or of losing his job was unable to pay the taxes, interest, or installment due on his property; that there was no mortgage money in the country; that homes were being sold under mortgage foreclosure and that there was no way to save these home owners but through this measure.

It now develops that this is primarily a bill to help investors, stock owners, or certificate holders in building and loan associations rather than to help the borrower, the home owner who has borrowed from the association. There are 10,000,000 investors or stockholders in building and loan associations where there are 2,000,000 borrowers.

Mr. President, does anybody contend that a bank, a trust company, a building and loan association, or any other beneficiary under this bill, will not foreclose a mortgage it owns if, in its judgment, the property will not pay out? There is not a financial agency that will not foreclose a mortgage if in its judgment it should not be done before there is a further depreciation. It is not going to be restrained from foreclosing a mortgage which it thinks ought to be foreclosed because it is able to get money from some governmental agency. I quote further:

Mr. Bodfish, executive manager of the United States Building and Loan League, the gentleman who perhaps has more to do with writing and rewriting, amending and reamending this bill than anyone else, he who has stayed on the job day and night for a long time said (pp. 87 and 88, Senate hearings):

"Senator WATSON. Of all the borrowers of the country, how many have defaulted?

"Mr. BODFISH. I do not know.

"Senator WATSON. Is there any considerable number?

"Mr. BODFISH. We have not had a great number in our building and loan associations. It has been one of the things that has helped the associations through this depression period. Home owners seem to make these monthly repayments with surprising regularity and tenacity. I think it is a splendid vindication of the long-term amortized home-mortgage loan principle or plan.

"Senator WATSON. I do not see then the necessity for the passage of this bill to aid building and loan associations, if you are running right along. A man will pay these loans and his life insurance to the exclusion of everything else, will he not?

"Mr. BODFISH. True; but, Senator, we have a large number of people who saved their money in our associations and saved it for a rainy day; due to lack of confidence they want their money at the present time.

"Senator WATSON. That is, the investors, not the borrowers?

"Mr. BODFISH. The investors, not the borrowers.

"Senator WATSON. Yes.

"Mr. BODFISH. Building and loan borrowers are not suffering, in my judgment."

That was the testimony before the subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency of which the Senator from Indiana was chairman. As I said, there is not a bit of evidence anywhere on either side of Congress which shows any need for the establishment of the home-loan bank system.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I merely desire to call the Senator's attention to the hour in order that some of us may know what disposition to make of ourselves. Is there to be a hearing before the Interstate Commerce Committee at 2 o'clock as scheduled?

Mr. COUZENS. I may say to the Senator that the Interstate Commerce Committee meeting at 2 o'clock is to be an executive session to vote for or against the confirmation of Mr. Garsaud.

Mr. LONG. I have witnesses here, and I thought they were going to be heard.

Mr. COUZENS. There are no further witnesses to be heard after our decision of yesterday, because the Senator was not ready.

Mr. LONG. While I am asking the Senator this question on the floor of the Senate, yet as I understood it he did not have a quorum of the committee yesterday; and the Senator could hardly have taken such action without a quorum, could he?

Mr. COUZENS. We did not take action yesterday; we took testimony.

Mr. LONG. The Senator would have had to have the whole committee there to transact business of that kind. I have brought Mr. Russell here, and we have managed to prepare to present quite a little testimony, and I was sincerely hoping that the Senator would not shut out the hearing of witnesses.

Mr. COUZENS. We are going to have an executive session to vote to report out the nomination either favorably or unfavorably.

Mr. LONG. I would be permitted to appear before the committee and move to reopen the matter and let these men be heard, would I not?

Mr. COUZENS. Certainly.

Mr. LONG. I have my witnesses here. Is it the intention of the Senator from Michigan to be at the meeting which is scheduled for this hour, or what shall I do?

Mr. COUZENS. I think perhaps I can get the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL], who is now present in the Chamber and who is one of the members of the committee, to preside, because it is necessary for me to remain in the Chamber.

Mr. LONG. It is time to have the committee meeting, and I want to know what is the best thing to do.

Mr. COUZENS. I think the best thing the Senator can do is to wait. The Senator has been doing a lot of that lately. We all have to wait a lot in the Senate.

Mr. President, continuing, there is the testimony. I have just read the testimony of the most vigorous proponent of the bill, testifying that it is the investors and not the home owners or the borrowers who are requesting the passage of the bill. Why try to fool the country or to fool ourselves? Why does the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] try to fool himself into believing that this is a bill for the small-home owner? The bill would not have gotten out of the committee except for two outstanding matters, one that we incorporated the word "home" and the second that it had the force of the administration and its organization back of it. It does not make any difference to me who is for or against the legislation. The point is that there is no demonstrated need for these banks, and I object to the enactment of legislation based on misleading statements, which will create a new incubus upon the workers of the country and which can not under any circumstances be of any benefit to them.

I continue to quote from page 9 of the minority views:

> Mr. Stickle, engaged in building and loan business (p. 72) said: "In our State we have 1,561 associations, and perhaps 15 per cent of them are finding difficulty in the matter of meeting these shareholders to whom we taught systematic thrift; and then when the rainy day comes, due to depression conditions, we do not have the funds for them, a very important part of our business."

That is the testimony before the committee. I do not want to be placed in the position of not being interested in the little shareholders or the depositors, but I submit that the bill should not go through the Senate on any misunderstanding or misconception of what it is intended to accomplish. It is not under any circumstances intended to accomplish the purpose that the proponents state.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. There is a slight amendment that ought to be offered as a proviso at the end of section 1 of the bill in its present form if we are to be fair to the Territories. The Senator will realize that the Territory of Hawaii contributes a very large amount of taxes and ought to have equal benefits with the States. I have spoken to the Senator about it privately, and he has no objection to the amendment being offered. Will the Senator yield to me to ask unanimous consent that at the end of section 1 of the bill, in its present form, there be inserted the words: "Provided, That as used in this section and in section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act the term 'State' shall include the Territories."

Mr. COUZENS. May I suggest that the Senator introduce it and let it lie on the table so that after we vote on the matter of reconsideration he can bring it up?

Mr. BINGHAM. I was asking unanimous consent that this might be adopted as a part of the bill in its present form.

Mr. COUZENS. That is, in the form of the substitute?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes. If the motion to reconsider prevails this would go out. The original bill contains such a proviso, but the Senator's substitute does not contain it, and I was fearful that I might not be here at the proper moment, and hence I am asking unanimous consent to consider the amendment out of order.

Mr. COUZENS. I have no objection.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask unanimous consent that the bill in its present form may be amended by adding at the end of section 1 the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To what bill does the Senator refer?

Mr. BINGHAM. The home loan bank bill in its present form, the form which contains the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan to sections 1 to 27, inclusive, being the bill which is actually under consideration. A motion is pending to reconsider the vote by which that substitute was adopted. Pending that reconsideration I desire to perfect the bill in the form in which the Senator from Michigan had it adopted. I am asking unanimous consent that the amendment may be adopted to the bill in its present form before the motion for reconsideration is put.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield for that purpose?

Mr. COUZENS. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator yields the floor then.

Mr. COUZENS. It does not matter. I suggest the absence of a quorum in view of the question before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Couzens	Johnson	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Dale	Jones	Schall
Bailey	Davis	Kean	Sheppard
Barbour	Dickinson	Kendrick	Shipstead
Bingham	Dill	Keyes	Shortridge
Black	Fess	King	Smoot
Blaine	Fletcher	La Follette	Steiwer
Borah	Frazier	Lewis	Stephens
Bratton	George	Long	Thomas, Idaho
Brookhart	Glass	McGill	Townsend
Broussard	Glenn	McKellar	Trammell
Bulkley	Goldsborough	McNary	Tydings
Bulow	Gore	Metcalf	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Hale	Moses	Wagner
Capper	Harrison	Norbeck	Walcott
Caraway	Hastings	Norris	Walsh, Mass.
Cohen	Hatfield	Nye	Watson
Connally	Hayden	Patterson	White
Coolidge	Hebert	Pittman
Copeland	Howell	Reed
Costigan	Hull	Robinson, Ark.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to offer an amendment. The Chair would state that the amendment goes to a part of the bill that has been stricken out. The vote by which it was stricken out would have to be reconsidered before the amendment could be considered.

Mr. BINGHAM. No, Mr. President; it is intended to apply to the Couzens amendment, to add at the end of section 1 the proviso which I have sent to the desk. May I say for the information of the Senate that in the original home-loan bank bill, as reported out of the committee, I believe—and if I am wrong, I shall be glad to have the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] correct me—the Territories were taken care of on the same basis as the States; but in the substitute offered by the Senator from Michigan, which was just adopted, and which is now the bill which is before us, the Territories were left out. This corrects that omission. That is all the amendment seeks to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will require unanimous consent to present the amendment at this time.

Mr. MOSES. A point of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will allow the Chair to make a statement, the question before the Senate is the motion to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] was adopted, and while that motion is pending the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut is out of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. I realize it is out of order, but I asked unanimous consent to offer the amendment.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, what is the pending question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] in the nature of a substitute was adopted, pending which the Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to present an amendment.

Mr. DILL. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. WATSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. JOHNSON. Just a minute, Mr. President. I do not see the Senator from Michigan present and in fairness to him I will occupy some time upon the bill, if necessary, solely in order that he may come in. It is as a matter of good sportsmanship and fairness that I shall do that.

Mr. WATSON. I think the Senator from California is entirely right about that. I would not seek to have a vote in the absence of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, may I say, if the Senator from California will permit me, that I interrupted the Senator from Michigan, who was not through with his speech, in the hope that this little amendment might be adopted, not expecting that there would be any objection to it.

THE LAUSANNE CONFERENCE—FOREIGN INDEBTEDNESS TO THE UNITED STATES

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, speaking strictly to the bill that is now before us, I wish to offer a few observations upon the debts due from foreign countries to the United States of America. This morning I read in the New York Times that the developments in relation to the war debts were as follows:

LONDON.—Chancellor of the Exchequer Chamberlain, responding to an attack on the agreement by Winston Churchill, said representatives of the United States had been consulted by Britain at Lausanne settlement.

BERLIN.—Germany announced officially that she had nothing to do with the secret "gentlemen's agreement" at Lausanne and refused to be drawn into any combination against the United States.

WASHINGTON.—Reaction in Congress to the secret accord indicated that no move to reduce war debts or to extend the moratorium on them would meet with favor. Secretary Stimson declared the United States was in no way consulted in the "gentlemen's agreement."

PARIS.—French opinion was uneasy over the reaction here, but Premier Herriot feels he carried out the understanding reached in the Laval-Hoover conversations in Washington.

I digress long enough after the recitation of this résumé concerning debts to say there is not any American of whom I know who is familiar with the understanding between the United States or the President of the United States and Premier Laval and the agreement that was made during that historic visit of the French representative. There may be individuals who know all about it, but the American people know nothing about it. The one thing that I resent is not the fact that there was any understanding between the representative of France and the President of the United States; that was their right so far as understandings could go legally between these two; but I do resent that there should have been, if there was, any understanding at all between these two representatives of two great nations and that the American people should have been kept in absolute ignorance of any such understanding.

I refer to what has transpired now because a representative of the British Government—a responsible representative of the British Government—has in the Parliament of Britain expressed himself—and so far as the dispatches show expressed himself in no uncertain tones—and while, of course, I accept the denial of the State Department of the United States, because, after all, it is my State Department as well as the State Department of the United States, nevertheless I am somewhat concerned, and, sir, I am somewhat troubled, when a responsible representative of the British Government rises in the British Parliament and says that upon the "gentlemen's agreement," or upon any agreement concerning that which is foremost in the minds of the American people, so sorely oppressed and overburdened today, our representatives were consulted, and, officially, that is exactly what Mr. Chamberlain told the British Parliament last night.

I read from the special cable to the New York Times of to-day under the heading "Reveals Talks with Americans":

A bitter attack—

Says this article—

on the Lausanne settlement by Winston Churchill in the House of Commons to-night brought a statement from Chancellor of the Exchequer Neville Chamberlain that reassuring talks had been held between British and United States representatives during the recent conference.

I repeat, sir, that even with the peculiar views that are mine, nationalistic in character, if you please to call them so, even chauvinistic, if thus you desire to characterize them, I accept what my Secretary of State and the Secretary of State of the United States says; but I can not, sir, forego a bit of comment when this gentleman, representing the British Government, says something wholly at variance with what the Secretary of State of the United States has stated to the public of our country.

Mr. Churchill—

The article proceeds—

Anticipating to-morrow's big debate, said he believed the reports of "gentleman's agreement" and "semi-secret" agreements among the European powers, otherwise there would have been official contradiction, and said:

"If the settlement at Lausanne was conditioned upon a settlement of our debt to the United States and its ratification was to be delayed until then, all this Lausanne pact has dropped to a far lower plane. We can not say Europe is saved, but only Europe is saved subject to ratification, and I can not feel any solid benefit has been obtained."

Mr. Chamberlain retorted that Mr. Churchill had done no service to Britain in trying to undermine confidence in the Lausanne result and suggesting that Britain had made embarrassing relations with her own creditors elsewhere.

Then quoting:

"After all, we have been in touch at Lausanne not only with European representatives but had an opportunity for conversations with representatives of the United States," he said, "and I would ask the House to believe in this rather delicate situation. We have no reason to think the course we have taken is one which is going to lead to any of those unfortunate results Mr. Churchill anticipates."

"Rather delicate negotiations," says Mr. Chamberlain, after he relates that conversations had been held with various Americans upon the subject of debt. "Rather delicate negotiations!"

I can not believe, of course, in the teeth of the denial of the Secretary of State of the United States that there have been either delicate or other negotiations, for it is incredible, Mr. President, if upon a subject of this sort any accredited representatives of the United States have held conversations abroad with representatives of Great Britain and other European powers in debt to us that the fact would be concealed, hidden from all the American people and naught told to the American people concerning it, just as it is incredible, sir, that there was any understanding with Mr. Laval when he was here, relating to the debts due us.

It was denied publicly by the representatives of the United States Government. That denial is absolute so far as we are concerned; and I can not understand, sir, the peculiar propensity of gentlemen who represent governments abroad for repeatedly asserting, as they do, that there have been understandings, negotiations, consultations, conferences, conversations, and even "delicate negotiations" with representatives of the United States relating to this all-important subject of the debts.

Mr. President, this question of debts is one that is going to plague us in the days to come. Just as we loosed the peculiar virus in 1931 in the moratorium, which then we adopted, we set in motion the first thing that recognized the relationship existing between reparations and the debts due to us from foreign countries. When we took the initiative before the world in a moratorium as we did a year ago last month, we can not complain if the nations of Europe and of the rest of the world either misunderstand wittingly or misrepresent unwittingly just what has transpired and just exactly what our position is.

I do not speak, of course, either for the Government of the United States or the Senate of the United States or the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate of the United States or for any group or for any particular set of individuals; but, fortunately, sir, I can yet speak for one man who dares speak whenever he desires to speak, and for that individual I have no hesitancy in saying that when last June a year ago we first began to deal with the moratorium we were touching the fire that ultimately was bound to consume us so far as our taxpayers be concerned and so far as the debts due to us might be concerned. I am one of those who then said that it was the beginning of the end; and in a statement that I made on the very day when this attempt was made to induce the Congress of the United States to indulge in a moratorium, given out in the city of San Francisco on June 24, 1931, which, Mr. President, you will pardon me for saying, was prophetic in character and which foretold the situation that ultimately was to come to us in regard to those debts.

At that time I spoke concerning the plan then attempted to be foisted upon the American people, and, while I do not wish to read it all to the Senate, I should like to read a paragraph of the remarks I then made in regard to the moratorium and to have printed in the RECORD the entire statement. The paragraph which I desire to read is as follows:

A moratorium for one year, just a brief period, is planned. In reality, it is the beginning of the cancellation of the debts due to the United States from European nations, debts due not alone for moneys advanced during the war but for moneys loaned European nations after the war for rehabilitation

We buy from the European nations, it is claimed, forbearance for Germany, but what we are actually doing is to safeguard loans and investments of our international bankers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement referred to is as follows:

[From the San Francisco Examiner June 24, 1931]

Generally speaking, I am sympathetic with moratoriums, international, national, or individual. How marvelous it would be if our banks would say to our own people who are in the red, "We grant you a moratorium and we do it, in the language of the President, 'As wise creditors in our own interests and as good neighbors.'"

I wonder if we could not with beautiful language, soft and sweet, induce American financiers to take this attitude toward Americans.

STAMPEDE DEPLORED

The American people are asked immediately to consent to, and the Congress by wire, to legislate a moratorium for Europe from solemn agreements settling Europe's debts to the United States. Perhaps this should be done; but Americans are entitled to know exactly the situation and the Congress hardly fulfills its functions when stampeded without full knowledge into a telegraphic "yes."

What is proposed?

The President says, "The American Government proposes the postponement during one year of all payments on intergovernmental debts, reparations and relief debts, both principal and interest, of course not including obligations of governments held by private parties."

Why, of course.

While we could not compel great bankers holding obligations of Germany and other governments to postpone their principal, and refrain from collecting their high rates of interest, we might in suppliant fashion suggest it.

The administration papers in San Francisco state "American financiers, with more than $1,000,000,000 of investments in Germany acquired chiefly since 1924, have been increasingly alarmed at the trend of affairs in Germany."

Ostensibly the moratorium is to aid Germany, but the beneficiaries who profit most will be the American financiers with more than a billion dollars at stake.

A moratorium for one year, just a brief period, is planned. In reality, it is the beginning of the cancellation of the debts due to the United States from European nations, debts due not alone for moneys advanced during the war but for moneys loaned European nations after the war for rehabilitation.

We buy from the European nations, it is claimed, forbearance for Germany, but what we are actually doing is to safeguard loans and investments of our international bankers.

Anyone with the slightest knowledge of the propaganda of the last year for the cancellation of foreign debts, knows this moratorium means cancellation. When the President's offer was cabled to Europe, the Geneva press, the home of the League of Nations, predicted the payment of the debts, once suspended, probably never would be resumed. This, indeed, is the accepted foreign view.

The Scripps-Howard newspapers accurately state the fact in their leading editorial approving the moratorium when they say to the American people they need not take seriously Mr. Hoover's statement, "I do not approve, in any remote sense, the cancellation of the debts due to us." And this powerful string of newspapers points out that the debts will probably be canceled.

We may take it that this is the fact and it is quite paradoxical to advocate a moratorium and then assert that we are opposed to cancellation.

WITHOUT FACTS

I repeat, perhaps this moratorium should be granted, while we stand helpless to aid our own. If Germany faces utter economic ruin, we would all like to help without injustice to our own; but we would like to be certain the aid we extend helps those intended to be helped.

We are absolutely without the facts upon which to base a considered judgment. The moratorium is shouted by the international press and all the "yes" men of the country as the greatest event since the World War, of "stupendous" and "unparalleled" character.

Every internationalist is engaged in bludgeoning the rest of our people into acquiescence. This country is still a republic governed presumably by the representatives of the people; and if confronting us now is a question of "unparalleled importance" the "most stupendous event since the World War," the representatives of the peoples should be called together to act upon it, with full knowledge of every detail concerning it; and beyond that, the American people are entitled to know every fact and circumstance which induced the action of the administration.

AN ADDED BURDEN

Here's a policy which places an added burden in these terrible times of two hundred millions or more upon an already overburdened American people; and which may possibly, indeed, probably, deprive them in the future of many billions of dollars to which they are justly entitled.

Such a policy, after long preparation, is sprung upon them overnight. It is sought to sweep them off their feet to immediate acquiescence and their representatives are expected from the far corners of the country at once to agree. Let the Congress meet and turn on the light.

Mr. JOHNSON. Now, sir, we have reached the place where every nation on the face of the earth is expecting that there will be ultimate cancellation. We have reached it because we began, with our moratorium initiated by the President of the United States himself, upon that road that has led us into the wilderness where now we are, and where possibly we never will be able to collect that which is due to us.

Firmly some of us have stood from that day to this, refusing absolutely to adopt a scheme of cancellation, and, more than that, refusing absolutely to adopt any plan of revision; for, Mr. President, it is useless for a man to say with all the vigor that he has, "I oppose cancellation of the debts due us from foreign countries," because by the simple process of revision, of again considering the capacity of debtors to pay, you are going to do, if you embark upon that course, just exactly what they expect you to do when they speak of cancellation.

I will not dwell, for I have done it in the past, upon what this means to the American taxpayer. I will not repeat what I repeated many times upon this floor, that the $250,000,000 we forgave last December and a year ago last June meant $250,000,000 added to that deficit in the United States Treasury that we were compelled to make up by the taxes that we have levied now upon our people, already overburdened and already with backs nearly broken by taxation. I will not dwell upon the fact that the $270,000,000 about to become due, of course, will be met with another moratorium, and $270,000,000 put again upon the backs of our taxpayers, a burden that this Congress ought not to put there under any circumstances. And when you add the two sums together, you get one-half the amount for which we spent the days and days and nights in that celebrated occupation of "balancing the Budget"—practically one-half the amount required by us to be raised from American taxation, American taxation such as peace time never has known before.

I cry out against one thing at this time more than all else: That is, secrecy in this Government, secrecy in relation to that which concerns every man and every taxpayer in all this land. That secrecy ought not to be tolerated. If secrecy exists, there ought to be a perfectly firm declaration concerning the attitude of the Government of the United States, not only to-day, but in the future; and it is nonsense to tell me, sir, that the Government of the United States as now constituted never had any thought of either cancellation or revision when in the presidential message that was sent to us last December not only did we speak of revision in accordance with the ability of our debtors to pay but in that message as well the President asked the re-creation of the debt commission in order that it might deal with a subject that long years ago we thought had been foreclosed.

So what was in the minds of those who are temporarily in power in this Government is perfectly obvious from the words that they have uttered and the official messages that they have sent to the Congress of the United States. They said, "We will talk about the capacity of our debtors to pay. We will re-create," said the President in his message—he asked us even to do it—"the debt commission" to deal with a subject that had already been dealt with, and dealt with with a generosity that no people on earth had ever before extended to other peoples who constituted their debtors.

And so, sir, it is time that there should be some kind of warning spoken in this Chamber and in this Government by those who believe that, after all, this Government belongs to just one people, the American people; who believe that, after all, burdens that belong to Europe should not be put upon the backs of Americans; and, who after all, insist that whenever the time arises that a choice is to be made as to where a debt shall be put that is justly due, and the choice must be made between the collection of that debt and breaking our own people, we will stand for our people, and for a brief period, at least, be just Americans in this land.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. KING. In view of the suggestion made by the Senator and the intimation that possibly another moratorium might be granted by the United States or by the Executive to our European debtors, I ask the Senator whether there is any constitutional warrant for the President to grant a moratorium.

Mr. JOHNSON. Oh, of course there is no constitutional warrant; but the Senator will remember the ease with which the Constitution was avoided a year ago when by the scare heads all over this land, the telegrams that were sent to the Members of the Congress, when it was asserted that there was destruction in the path of this Government, and we were about to be ruined if we did not grant a moratorium upon these debts; and then if he will recall all the events that transpired, may he remember, too, how very futile the whole action was.

Mr. KING. Of course, it seems to me obvious, may I say, that there is no constitutional warrant; but I was wondering if there had been any intimation by the State Department that we would be called upon to grant another moratorium so far as the debts due the United States are concerned.

Mr. JOHNSON. I really can not speak for the State Department; but, Mr. President, I do not need to be hit over the head with a brick to know that my head has been injured; and when I see so clearly what is transpiring I have not any doubt at all what will happen.

Let me say in frankness to the Senator that I do not think anything will be said about it to-day or to-morrow; but on the 9th day of November next we will hear so much about it that it will din into our ears with a crashing symphony that will be utterly irresistible.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I shall occupy only a moment.

An interesting debate took place in the House of Commons in England yesterday which is partially reported in the press of the United States. The able Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] has read excerpts from that debate. I desire to reread a paragraph or two.

Mr. Churchill assailed the Government on account of the proceedings at Lausanne, and, among other things, said:

> If the settlement at Lausanne was conditioned upon a settlement of our debt to the United States, and its ratification was to be delayed until then, all this Lausanne pact has dropped to a far lower plane. We can not say Europe is saved, but only Europe is saved subject to ratification, and I can not feel any solid benefit has been obtained.

In reply to this Mr. Chamberlain, speaking for the Government, said:

> After all, we have been in touch at Lausanne not only with European representatives but had an opportunity for conversations with representatives of the United States, and I would ask the House to believe in this rather delicate situation. We have no reason to think the course we have taken is one which is going to lead to any of those unfortunate results Mr. Churchill anticipates.

Mr. President, after reading this in the morning paper I had a conversation with the Secretary of State, and after the conversation with the Secretary I asked if I was permitted to state publicly the substance of that conversation. He said I was at liberty to do so.

I desire to state, therefore, that the Secretary stated to me explicitly that there had never been any conversation on the part of this Government with the representatives of foreign governments touching the terms of the settlement at Lausanne; that we were not consulted about and in no way advised with reference to what is called the gentlemen's agreement. He stated that the position of the Government had been, throughout the negotiations which had been going on between the governments in Europe, that our Government regarded and has always regarded the debts and the question of reparations as separate propositions; that we neither by communication nor through representatives who are now in Europe representing this Government at other conferences, had anything whatever to say or do with reference to the reparations settlement, and in no wise is this Government bound by any supposed gentlemen's agreement, either expressly or impliedly.

I think, Mr. President, that is the substance of the conversation; but I desire to say and put in the RECORD, that it may be in the record from this time on, that our Government rejects the implication that there was any conversation or communication whatever between this Government and any other government or governments relative to the terms of the settlement at Lausanne or the supposed gentlemen's agreement. I believe this to be the clear purport of the statement of the Secretary of State.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator will recall—I think I state it accurately—the statement attributed to the President when Mr. Laval was here, or just before his departure, to the effect that if the gold standard was to be preserved Mr. Laval, speaking for France, must return to France, and that the European nations who were our debtors and who had other debts must arrange their own controversies and their own settlements, and then the matter would be taken up again by the United States. I may not state it accurately, but that is my recollection of the statement that was given to the press.

Assuming that that statement, as I understand it, was correct, would not that be an invitation to the European nations to agree upon a settlement of their debts among themselves, and an intimation that after that was effected the United States would be in position to deal with them, and perhaps to modify materially the obligations which were due from those nations to the United States?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not speaking in any respect whatever with reference to conversations which may have taken place between the President and ex-Premier Laval. I do not know what conversations took place between them. I only desired to state the conversation I had with the Secretary of State this morning with reference to this particular transaction, or the proceedings which have been going on at Lausanne.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I am extremely grateful to the Senator from Idaho. I am more than grateful that our Government has expressed itself and has stated as frankly and as fully as he has stated it just exactly what our Government's intention is. I am delighted to hear from the Senator from Idaho, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, that our Government considers unrelated the reparations and the debts.

I can not remove from my memory, however, what was said last year upon the subject by the President of the United States, and it is utterly impossible, with the head that God gave me that is upon my shoulders—I hope for some other purpose than for mere ornament—for me not to remember that during that period the President of the United States, asking for a moratorium, which of itself linked debts and reparations, then in a message to the Congress of the United States in so many words spoke of the ability of our debtors to pay and of the fact that considerations should subsequently be had in that regard. Nor can I forget, sir, that in that very message, too, at its conclusion, the President of the United States asked that the debt commission should be re-created to deal with that very subject.

So while I welcome what the Government of the United States has just said to us and welcome that it should have been said to us in the manner in which it was said and through the gentleman who represents us upon the Foreign Relations Committee and holds such an enviable place in this body, while I welcome what he said and am delighted and gratified with it I still remember and I still can not forget.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, it seems to me that on such an important matter as transferring $11,000,000,000 of debts from European taxpayers to American taxpayers we ought to know the exact facts. The President of the United States, it seems, is the only person who can give us those facts.

Several days ago I offered a resolution calling on the President for the facts. At that time we did not have them, and my resolution was more or less general. I think we ought to pass that resolution and have the President notify the Senate and the country just what the facts concerning this matter are.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. In just one moment. We have all kinds of reports coming in, that the Assistant Secretary of State said this, and the Secretary of State said that, and the statements are denied the next day. But there are certain facts which have not been denied by anybody. What are those facts? One is that two representatives of this Government, Mr. Hugh Gibson and Mr. Norman Davis, sent to Geneva to a disarmament conference, were in touch concerning reparations with the Lausanne negotiators during the time negotiations were going on at or near Geneva, or between Geneva and Lausanne. There can be no other construction put upon those facts than that those gentlemen were sent there by somebody—inferentially that they were sent there by the President of the United States or under his authority.

If those two gentlemen did take part in those negotiations, they were representing the United States, because neither of them would have thought of doing so unless he had been sent there. It may be that the Secretary of State does not know anything about it, I do not know; but the President does know, and the people of the United States are entitled to know as to what has been going on over there.

There is Prime Minister Herriot, who testified that he had been in negotiations with these representatives. There is Mr. Chamberlain, holding a high place in the British Government, who testified on the floor of the House of Commons that he had been in negotiation with representatives of the United States. It is right and proper under those circumstances that the only man who has knowledge of the facts should give those facts to the country. That man is the President of the United States.

I now yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, how could anything be more specific, more clear, more downright, than the message brought to us by the Senator from Idaho directly from the Secretary of State this morning? Of course, if there were negotiations or conversations, the Secretary of State would know about them. He is the channel through which all communications pass to our representatives abroad.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the answer to that is that they have not answered the questions I desire to submit to the President of the United States. Mr. Stimson has not denied that there was an understanding there was to be a reduction of our debts, if there was a reduction of reparations.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will yield in a moment.

I want to modify my resolution, Senate Resolution 266, which I offered a day or two ago, and I will read it so modified, so that it may go into the RECORD and that Senators may know what it provides. The resolution as I have modified it is as follows:

Whereas it is stated in Associated Press and other dispatches appearing in responsible newspapers that the United States Government has expressed to foreign nations indebted to it a willingness to consider further reductions in the indebtedness of said nations in view of the recent Lausanne reparations proposal; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States (which alone has power to modify the debt settlements heretofore made) has officially declared by House Joint Resolution 147 its unwillingness to cancel or further to reduce the indebtedness of said nations: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States is requested to inform the Senate whether there is any foundation for the statements made in said dispatches concerning the United States' participation in said reparations negotiations, and especially if he directed our representatives, Gibson and Davis, or any other representatives, to take part in said reparations negotiations, and if they actually did so; if they made an express or an implied agreement to submit to the Congress the question of a cancellation or reduction of the debts of the United States; the nature and the extent of the negotiations about United States debt settlements since the passage of House Joint Resolution 147; if they, and if the President, had knowledge of the secret "gentleman's agreement" before it was published, and if so, by what authority any representative of the United States has taken such action in view of the existence of House Joint Resolution 147.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may amend Senate Resolution 266 to read as I have read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has that right.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator from Idaho desires, I will yield to him now.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I only desire to say that our representatives at Geneva were referred to in the conversation this morning, and I asked whether they had had anything to do with this settlement at Lausanne. I was assured by the Secretary of State that they were not authorized to and did not discuss this subject.

Mr. McKELLAR. Were they there?

Mr. BORAH. I have understood they may have talked with Mr. MacDonald with reference to disarmament.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. MacDonald went back as a conquering hero to England for what he had accomplished by the cancellation of reparations, so the newspapers stated, and Mr. MacDonald, as I recall what the newspapers stated, said that he had consulted the American representatives, Mr. Davis and Mr. Gibson. Mr. Herriot stated the same thing. Mr. Chamberlain stated the same thing. Now, as I understand, the Secretary of State admits that they were there at that particular time, when they had been sent to Geneva for another purpose.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not say that the Secretary of State admits that they were there at that particular time. I had understood that they did consult with the represenatives of the English Government with reference to disarmament, but I was assured that they never at any time discussed the reparations question, nor were they authorized to do so.

Mr. McKELLAR. The debt question and the move for disarmament dovetail. As everybody knows, that is one of the schemes to get those debts canceled. There is no intelligent man who does not know what arguments are going to be used. I do not know when the negotiations began, and we ought to know when they began, or if they began, and all about them. A part of the scheme is, first, to get the reductions made, then some vague, indefinite promise of some kind or another about reducing armaments, and then America will fall in line, and, as the result of a paper reduction in arms, and of the reparations matter, we will forgive them their debts, all made after the war was over for the purpose of reconstructing their several countries. In other words, they have had the pleasure of fighting their wars, and now they want to make America pay for them, pay all the cost and expense of them. They want to turn $11,000,000,000 of debts over to America to be paid, and that is what is going to be done unless we take timely action; and, it seems to me, that in fairness to everybody, in justice to the President, in justice to the Secretary of State, in justice to these gentlemen who have been dealing with them, this resolution, or a resolution like it, ought to pass this body, and let the President state what the facts are and what is proposed to be done.

Surely, when we are confronted with as important a matter as this, with $11,000,000,000 at stake, when we at this very session are putting an additional $1,100,000,000 burden upon our people in taxes, it does seem to me that it is as little as the administration can do to take the American people into the confidence of the administration, and let us have the facts as they are.

Mr. President, without further ado, I am going to ask unanimous consent at this time—I imagine it will not take a moment—for the immediate consideration and passage of the resolution I have introduced.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I want to say a word.

The Congress of the United States has passed an act declaring the fixed policy to be against cancellation or further reduction of the foreign debt. The President has signed that measure. We have just now from the lips of the Senator from Idaho a flat denial that any conversations have taken place with foreign representatives looking toward any such reduction or cancellation.

Mr. President, I feel as strongly as does the Senator from Tennessee in opposition to any further reductions or cancellations of these debts; but the surest way to bring them about, in my view, is to keep on talking about them. Unfortunately, we have too many American citizens——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I do not yield for a moment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will not the Senator yield in my own time? I yielded to the Senator.

Mr. REED. No; the Senator has not yielded at all. He has asked for unanimous consent, and I hold the floor in my own right.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think the Senator has a right to take me off the floor under the circumstances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thought the Senator had yielded.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I have not yielded the floor. I have been on my feet all the time. I yielded to the Senator.

Mr. REED. How can a request for unanimous consent be put with the Senator holding the floor? Are we only to be permitted to object by his courtesy?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the surest way to bring about a reduction or cancellation of these debts is to keep talking about them. Let us take it as a settled and accepted fact that the United States expects to be paid the fragment of the debts that was left after the last debt settlement. We do no good service to the United States when we talk, as so many of our New York friends have talked, about the necessity of canceling these debts.

Everybody knows that with a small fraction of what is being spent on wasteful armament in Europe these debts can be satisfied. I think we had better sit quietly, rest on the position we have already taken, which is clear beyond the possibility of mistake of understanding by anyone, and expect our debtors to meet their engagements, as I believe they will do. Therefore, I object to the present consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in view of the remarks——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Has the resolution been referred?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; it has not been referred. It is on the table now.

Mr. BORAH. There will be a meeting of the committee to-morrow morning if the Senator wants to refer it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be glad to do it. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, just a word further.

In view of what the Secretary of State has to say I want to quote from a well-known correspondent here in this city, Mr. Frederic William Wile. He is certainly on the very closest terms with the administration. Many of us believe that he speaks for the administration. He seems to speak with authority. Here is what he said in the Washington Star:

> There is unrestrained appreciation in Hoover administration circles of the generosity of France in assenting to Germany's demand that the reparations slate should be cleaned once for all. When the then premier of France, M. Pierre Laval, left Washington last October, he carried with him a pledge from President Hoover and Secretary Stimson that the administration would do its utmost to persuade Congress to reconsider war debts, if Europe settled the reparations problem. * * *

See how it dovetails in before this storm arose. This was Sunday. This was before the facts had leaked out. It was even before the New York Herald Tribune had printed the "gentlemen's agreement." It is rather remarkable that it was printed in no other paper last Sunday except that one, so far as I saw.

See how it works out. Our representatives are there and it is not denied that they were there during the time of the negotiations, and afterwards here comes this very remarkable agreement on reparations. It apparently met with very wide approval, but the next day an enterprising newspaper man published the agreement, which was that instead of forgiving one another, they were turning the whole burden over to the United States and that it was done apparently with our consent and approval.

Mr. Wile said further:

> But conditions have now ensued which justify the French and our other European debtors in expecting the United States to make good on the assurances given M. Laval. * * * It is certain that nothing will be done until after the presidential election in November.

How familiar that sounds. It will be remembered that last year Mr. Hoover made the moratorium agreement and the Congress was called upon to make good his assurance to the European debtors. We knew nothing about it, but we did have to make it good and we did make it good. I did not vote for the moratorium, but a majority did, and Mr. Hoover's assurances were made good. How natural the plan works up to this date. Next fall, as Mr. Wile says in a subsequent part of his article, after the elections are over the President will have a free hand and then it will be necessary for Congress to make his word good. Listen to this, and I am quoting from Mr. Wile's article:

> Undoubtedly the President desired to pave the way to this projected action when he asked Congress last winter to reestablish the World War debt commission for the purpose of reviewing matters in the light of existing conditions. Whether he is reelected or defeated in November, Mr. Hoover will be vastly more of a free agent in both domestic and foreign affairs than he is a candidate for a second term in the Presidency. He can afford to strike out boldly in any direction he pleases. No one at this early date is authorized to quote the President's views, but men qualified to know them are confident that he plans to move along lines that will electrify the world, just as his origination of the 1931 moratorium on intergovernmental debt payments did.

See how it follows! He is going to electrify the world—with what? By putting on the overburdened backs of the American people this $11,000,000,000 of debt. Of course it will electrify the rest of the world!

Mr. GORE. And electrocute the people of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; as the Senator from Oklahoma says, it will electrocute the United States. It may not exactly electrocute, but it puts an enormous burden of taxation upon our people that ought not to be put there. It seems to me we should know the facts and that the American people should know the facts. We ought not to be called on in the future to uphold and defend some secret agreement that is being made by the President or State Department. We know there have been some sort of negotiations going on over there. Our representatives—Mr. Gibson and Mr. Davis—would not have been at that particular place at that particular moment, away from where they were sent, halfway between Geneva and Lausanne in secret meeting—a mysterious meeting at deep midnight—unless there had been some reason for their being there, and we know it. We ought to see to it that the American public, who will have to pay the bill, know it, too.

I digress long enough to say that there was unrestrained joy among the international bankers when this news came. The first article that was published was that, now that Germany had escaped from her debts by the United States assuming them, she was going to pay in part at least the debts due the American international bankers and they were going to get some return for the money which they had spent in private transactions in Germany and in other parts of the world.

Mr. President, I want to say that we will get the facts about these matters pretty soon. The Secretary of State is talking, the Assistant Secretary of State is talking, and the foreign ambassadors are talking. I quote from this morning's Washington Herald:

Mr. Chamberlain, defending the Lausanne negotiations against the violent denunciations of former Chancellor Winston Churchill, who deplored the united European front against America, implied that official Washington knew every move being made at the Lausanne parley. He declared:

"We were in touch at Lausanne not only with European repre-representatives, but we have the opportunity for conversations with representatives of the United States."

Is it possible for us to believe that this great British minister, Mr. Chamberlain, would get up on the floor of Parliament, in the House of Commons, and utter a falsehood? It is almost inconceivable. I hope he is mistaken, but it is almost inconceivable that a member of the British cabinet, speaking in the House of Commons, would make a statement like that unless he knew it were true. He went on to say:

I will ask the House to believe that in this rare, delicate situation the Government had no reason to think the course it had taken was one which would lead to any unfortunate results which have been anticipated.

Let me quote further from this article in this morning's Washington Herald under the title "Two Conferences," as follows:

The American representatives referred to by Chamberlain were United States Ambassador to Belgium, Hugh Gibson, and Norman Davis, of the American delegation to the disarmament conference. Gibson conferred not only with MacDonald but once with Premier Herriot, of France, in a mysterious midnight meeting halfway between Geneva and Lausanne.

Listen to this—and I am wondering whether the Secretary of State had anything to say about this:

In a mysterious midnight meeting halfway between Geneva and Lausanne.

It is not very far from Geneva to Lausanne. The representatives at Geneva could have gone over to Lausanne. The representatives at Lausanne could have gone over to Geneva. There is no natural halfway place. Why was a secret midnight meeting held half way between the two cities?

Discounting Washington dispatches that the Hoover administration is maintaining an attitude against debt revision, it was pointed out that MacDonald, while at Lausanne, said publicly that negotiations for war-debt reduction were being carried on with Washington.

Are we to suppose that the chancellor of the exchequer of Great Britain and the prime minister of France are falsifying about this thing? I can not believe it. They had no reason to utter falsehoods.

Mr. Churchill, who seems to have brought the whole matter to a focus in Parliament, had this to say:

If the settlement of Lausanne is conditional on the settlement of our debts with the United States, and if ratification is to be delayed until then, the whole Lausanne act has dropped to a far lower plane and has shrunken altogether in its scale and importance.

If, at the same time, anyone supposes we are going to get back to the Young plan in Germany, he really deserves medical attention.

I digress long enough to say that I will not go that far, but I will say that it is inconceivable to me how anyone, in view of the undisputed facts concerning statements from the administration, concerning a reduction or cancellation of our foreign debts, which statements have been published in the newspapers for days, unanswered, can say that there is not something in this Government's connection with these negotiations, some way, somehow, in some manner, and somewhere. I repeat the statement of Mr. Churchill:

If, at the same time, anyone supposes that we are going to get back to the Young plan in Germany, he really deserves medical attention. I thought we had forgiven Germany; apparently we want to find out first if we are to be forgiven our debts.

Here is what they have done. They entered into a secret alliance, a secret compact, made apparently at midnight, to forgive each other their debts provided that America would take them over. That is the whole game. If it is not that, what else could it be? Knowing France as we do know France, knowing how France has stood out for reparations from the very beginning, is it conceivable, unless she had some sort of understanding with our Government, that she could ever have made any such agreement as that?

Then Mr. Churchill went on to say:

No more unfortunate approach toward debt cancellation could have been made than the procedure adopted at Lausanne. All I can say is that it will make it more difficult to obtain British debt revision, inflicting an injury on ourselves which will cost us dear.

Mr. Churchill is exactly right. Whoever planned the reparations and debt settlement agreement certainly made a great mistake. The same paper—that is, the Herald of this morning—quotes Premier Herriot as follows:

It is laid down that in the event of a satisfactory settlement not being obtained from the United States, we remain as we were. We have all of us taken that pledge.

It will thus be seen, Mr. President, that a secret agreement has been made. The Secretary of State apparently is not informed about the matter, but I believe that there has been an agreement not only among the European nations, but with representatives of the American Nation. Mr. Stimson does not say that our representatives were not present at the midnight meeting. They had no business to make such an agreement; they have not been appointed for that purpose. Mr. Davis was sent to Geneva to participate in a disarmament conference and Mr. Gibson was there for the same purpose.

Of course, Mr. President, no one is simple enough to believe that this arrangement would have been made by those two gentlemen who are attending the disarmament conference at Geneva, or that they would have attended a midnight conference half way between Lausanne and Geneva, without having been sent there. In my judgment, it was Mr. Hoover who brought about this agreement, if he did not initiate it. Neither Mr. Gibson nor Mr. Davis would have dreamed of attending these conferences or of being privy to the secret agreement that was made unless they had been specifically instructed so to do. Evidently those two gentlemen were simply carrying out instructions from Washington. The nature of those instructions should be made public.

Further evidence of the fact that Washington was not only consulted but approved the proposal to transfer these debts from Europe to America is shown in the approval of the White House and the State Department authorities. When the reparation agreement was first made known all the newspapers carried the statement that the reparations agreement was fully approved by the White House, and great rejoicing was there. There can be no doubt, Mr. President, that America was a part of this "gentlemen's agreement," though apparently our representatives did not sign it. The Senate and the country ought to know the entire particulars; and I am going to ask the committee tomorrow to report favorably the resolution which I have submitted.

At this time, Mr. President, I want to conclude what I have to say by asking unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Washington Post of today, Tuesday, July 12, under the title of "Trickery at Lausanne." I will read only the first sentence from the editorial in the Washington Post, which is one of the most active, earnest, and vigorous supporters of the administration. Listen to this:

The much-advertised gesture of renunciation and forgiveness of Germany by the Lausanne negotiators is now found to be a fraud.

A fraud! What constitutes it a fraud?

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the remainder of the editorial as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Washington Post, July 12, 1932]

Premier Herriot, of France, declaring that France has heard with emotion the story of the sufferings of Germany, and trying to make it appear that France had concurred in forgiving Germany for the sake of world peace and good will among men, now turns up at Paris with a secret agreement in his pocket, in which it is stipulated that the Lausanne agreement shall have no force unless the United States first cancels the war debts.

Prime Minister MacDonald is credited with authorship of the brilliant piece of chicanery which is now setting nations by the ears, and which doubtless will cause the downfall of Herriot. Mr. MacDonald is reported to have said that he was willing to proceed with the cancellation of reparations, trusting to America to make a corresponding cancellation, but that France and Belgium would not trust America. Those Governments insisted that the United States must first cancel the debts before they would ratify the agreement with Germany.

"If the United States finds the Lausanne agreement good," said M. Herriot upon returning to Paris, "and if a satisfactory arrangement concerning debts can be reached, the Lausanne agreement on reparations will be ratified and will come into full effect. If that is not the case, everything is reserved." In an interview M Herriot said: "Everything is now subordinated to an agreement with America."

This action will put an end to Herriot's régime. It is contrary to the spirit of the Hoover-Laval statement, which prefigured a settlement by Europe of its problems before opening the question of debts owed by European nations to America.

The refusal of the United States to cancel the debts will become painfully apparent to France. There is no reason why the debt of France should be reduced, since she is able to pay. When the determination of the United States is thoroughly understood in France an outburst against Herriot will inevitably occur, because he has signed a document which releases Germany and acknowledges that France is not warranted in demanding large reparations. He will lay stress upon the fact that this arrangement will not become effective until the United States cancels the debt owed by France, but nevertheless he has given away much of France's case against Germany. The Young agreement can not be made effective again.

The effect upon Americans of the secret attempt to force this Government's hand is unfortunate. Another stealthy and utterly selfish agreement aimed at the United States has been exposed, and it is wrapped in hypocritical expressions of solicitude for Germany and world welfare. Prime Minister MacDonald loses in public respect for his part in this shady transaction, while Premier Herriot merely invites his own downfall by his double-dealing.

Chancellor von Papen will be fortunate if he does not lose his official head. He is now in the position of having been a dupe of Great Britain and France. He glorified the Lausanne agreement as an accomplished fact whereby Germany would be relieved of reparations and inferentially of the charge of war guilt. Now Germany discovers that everything done at Lausanne is subject to a secret "gentleman's agreement," aimed at forcing the hand of the United States. Germany gets no concessions unless the United States first permits France, a perfectly solvent debtor, to evade payment of her debt. When the German people grasp the full force of the trick that has been played upon Von Papen they are likely to dismiss him as entirely too guileless to cope with the hard-boiled "gentlemen" who have double-crossed Germany and are trying to double-cross the United States.

So international relations go from bad to worse, thanks to the marplots whose work at Lausanne and Geneva reveal that certain governments are trying to evade honest debts while devoting immense tax revenues to excessive armaments. Public opinion in the United States is shocked and disgusted with the revelations. The determination to make solvent debtors pay their debts is shared by all parties in this country.

Mr. McKELLAR. What constitutes it a fraud is that it was secretly done; it is that our representatives in some way, somehow, knew about it, and it is that though it was an agreement among themselves, it was virtually an attempt to take $11,000,000,000 of burden off the backs of European taxpayers and put it on the backs of American taxpayers.

Mr. President, I protest as earnestly as I know how against any such action, and I hope when the Senate comes to examine into the matter it will adopt the resolution I have submitted, so that the true facts may be given the American people.

HOME-LOAN BANKS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12280) to create Federal home-loan banks, to provide for the supervision thereof, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] was adopted.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Couzens	Johnson	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Dale	Jones	Schall
Bailey	Davis	Kean	Sheppard
Barbour	Dickinson	Kendrick	Shipstead
Bingham	Dill	Keyes	Shortridge
Black	Fess	King	Smoot
Blaine	Fletcher	La Follette	Steiwer
Borah	Frazier	Lewis	Stephens
Bratton	George	Long	Thomas, Idaho
Brookhart	Glass	McGill	Townsend
Broussard	Glenn	McKellar	Trammell
Bulkley	Goldsborough	McNary	Tydings
Bulow	Gore	Metcalf	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Hale	Moses	Wagner
Capper	Harrison	Norbeck	Walcott
Caraway	Hastings	Norris	Walsh, Mass.
Cohen	Hatfield	Nye	Watson
Connally	Hayden	Patterson	White
Coolidge	Hebert	Pittman
Copeland	Howell	Reed
Costigan	Hull	Robinson, Ark.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] was adopted.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I understand the Senate is very anxious to vote, and I am not desirous of delaying it, although I am frank to say that not nearly all the testimoney in opposition to this bill has been submitted. I will delay the Senate for only a short while to point out some of the matters which seem to me have not as yet been made of record.

I understand, of course, that probably there will not be very many, if any, votes changed, but in view of the position I have taken, it seems to me necessary and desirable that the record be complete as to the reasons for the opposition I have to the enactment of the proposed legislation and for my belief that the temporary provision afforded by my substitute would take care of the needs of home owners who are now in distress.

I continue to read briefly from page 19 of the minority views filed in the House of Representatives on the bill:

Mr. E. J. Adams, associated with Federal Trade Commission (on p. 200 of the Senate committee hearings), says:

"I must, in all fairness, say that it does not in any respect comply with the recommendations of the President, and I doubt if he has ever read it. There is not a dollar's worth of relief or help in this bill for the home owner."

Mr. Best, president of the Building and Loan League (p. 285), said—

And Mr. Best has been very active in promoting the passage of this bill—

"Practically speaking, less than two-tenths of 1 per cent of the shareholders' dollars in building and loan associations have been lost during the present economic crisis, although the demands for withdrawals have been very, very heavy during the last year. Funds are needed to pay those people desiring their money. Many are timid or frightened, and it is only a minority that have a real need."

These very frank statements from the high officials of building and loan associations clearly show that the primary purpose to be accomplished by the organization of these banks is to obtain funds with which to pay their investors and certificate and stock holders. It is very desirable for every investor who has his money in an unprofitable business to get his money out. But why should the Government help the building and loan investor, the stock or share holder in building and loans any more than any other investor or stockholder?

The reasons why building and loan associations as well as banks are in an unliquid, and in many cases an unsound condition to-day, are due to a number of things:

1. Loans were made on inflated land values and on too narrow a margin.

2. Many home owners when credit was easy, were induced to borrow and to build beyond their means.

3. Shareholders were led to invest their money on the promise of certain and large dividends.

4. In periods of prosperity when money was plentiful, large dividends were paid, and no reserve was built up.

5. Excessive rates of interest were charged. The hearings show that the actual rate of interest charged by building and loan associations in 30 States ranged from over 7 to 14 per cent; in many cases an extreme hardship upon the borrower for the benefit of the investor.

These conditions can not now be cured by the establishment of Federal home loan banks. There is money available for conservative, sound mortgage business, and there is no real national need for this system.

Without taking up further time of the Senate in reading, I ask unanimous consent to make the balance of the minority views of Mr. WILLIAMS a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

W. H. Wood, president of the American Trust Co., Charlotte, N. C. (p. 121) says:

"I do not think the percentage of foreclosures would be as high as in a great many other places, because our building and loan associations are very successful and very conservatively managed, which has held up the situation."

Wilson W. Mills, chairman of the board, First Wayne National Bank of Detroit (p. 215) says:

"I do not know that the supply of money from banks and building and loan associations and from insurance companies, at least in the Middle West, has been very much curtailed as compared with what it has been in the past, to promote building, and for any mortgages on homes or other mortgages."

John Warren, director United States Building and Loan League for New Jersey, which organization has assets of $1,211,000,000 (p. 259) says:

"Withdrawals in our State, Senator, up until very recently, have been a problem of a comparatively few associations."

John F. Scott, president Minnesota Building and Loan Association, St. Paul (p. 266), says:

"Their present condition, so far as the payments on their home loans is concerned, is better than it was a year ago. The associations in Minnesota and the Northwest need no relief legislation, but if they did, this measure would not afford it."

A. C. Hunt, Black Hills Building and Loan Association, Rapid City, S. Dak. (p. 344), says:

"Senator WATSON. What is their general condition?

"Mr. HUNT. Generally good."

C. W. Thompson, president Aetna Building and Loan, Topeka, Kans. (p. 400), says:

"We could borrow money. Conditions in Kansas are such that building and loan associations can borrow money temporarily.

"Senator WATSON. Borrow it from whom?

"Mr. THOMPSON. The banks."

John S. Hill, banker, Durham, N. C. (p. 50):

"Senator WATSON. It appears to me that you have a pretty sound institution, Mr. Hill. You do not need any help.

"Mr. HILL. No, sir."

Harry E. Karr, Baltimore, representing Maryland League of Building Associations (p. 54) says:

"At the present time, because of the slowing up of general business and real estate and that sort of thing, there has not been much request at our banks to advance funds to building associations. Most of them have been able to carry on themselves."

Theophilus White, president Continental Mortgage Co., Baltimore (p. 135):

"Senator BULKLEY. You do not think it would be of value as a permanent organization?

"Mr. WHITE. I do not think it is necessary to have the Government permanently in the real-estate financing business."

Hiram S. Cody, president Mortgage Bankers Association, Chicago (p. 138):

"Senator WATSON. How are your home mortgages outside?

"Mr. CODY. They are good.

"Senator WATSON. They are all right?

"Mr. CODY. Yes, sir; in good shape.

"Senator WATSON. Do you see any necessity for the passage of this bill?

"Mr. CODY. No, sir.

"Senator WATSON. None at all?

"Mr. CODY. No, sir.

"Senator WATSON. You are satisfied with the existing conditions?

"Mr. CODY. Yes, sir."

Henry R. Robins, Commonwealth Title Co., Philadelphia, Pa. (p. 149):

"Mr. ROBINS. Generally, I think the whole scheme is inadvisable. It is more in the nature of an idealistic dream than a thing that can be put into operation, in my opinion.

"Senator WATSON. Why?

"Mr. ROBINS. In the first place, I don't think there is any need of such a structure in the United States. The fault has not been lack of money. It has been the size of the mortgages. There has been too much loaned by the various mortgage institutions generally on mortgages. That is what has been the cause of this foreclosure storm that has hit the country, and not the lack of money.

"Senator WATSON. What is the capitalization of your institution?

"Mr. ROBINS. Two million capital and three million surplus."

Again (p. 150):

"Mr. ROBINS. For any legitimate mortgage of the proper value there is plenty of money.

"Senator WATSON. But where there are from twelve to twenty thousand foreclosures in a year, how are you going to help those fellows?

"Mr. ROBINS. I can not see how you can help a man who is borrowing more than the security that he puts up."

John Hall, president of the St. Louis Building and Loan Association, and member of the legislative committee of the United States Building and Loan League (p. 220, House hearings), says:

"The borrowing of a building and loan association, gentlemen, should be an incidental part of its business. It should get its own funds, generally speaking, from the sale of its stock. There are certain seasonable times, times like this, when it could readily borrow money for various purposes, but it should be incidental to its main purposes. The associations in Missouri are now borrowing from banks where they need it, and the banks are lending it promptly"

Ann E. Rae, of Niagara Falls, N. Y., former president of United States Building and Loan League, in writing of the Federal home loan bank bill, after stating that she was convinced that "nothing but harm will come from it," says:

"Lastly, legislation that will, or is intended, to have such a far-reaching effect as the creation of these banks would, should not be enacted into law without the most searching scrutiny and examination of the facts in the case; first, to determine whether the banks are needed; second, to determine how they should be operated; and, third, but not last by any means, to determine what good they will do."

Senator Charles O'Connor Hennessy, of New York, and former president of the United States Building and Loan League, says:

"Building and loan associations who are in temporary difficulties in certain States and who are told that this proposed Federal system will let them out of their troubles are deceiving themselves, or are being deceived, as a reflective study of the bill might show."

R. Graeme Smith, Connecticut General Life Insurance Co., Hartford, Conn. (p. 279), says:

"I think we will all agree that there is no way for any banking system to assist a man who is not able to meet his interest payments and taxes. Certainly no home-loan bank system can put money in his pocket to pay these items. Certainly no cooperative or governmental agency can take over his loan if he can not pay them. How is this proposed system to give relief?"

William Rindsfoos, president of the Brunson Bank & Trust Co., Columbus, Ohio (p. 330), says:

"There is nothing in the bill requiring the carrying of a cash reserve. By that I mean the building and loan can go in under this bill and borrow its head off and not carry 25 cents in the bank; and if you get another crisis like this, what are you going to do? That is the trouble to-day; they did not carry any reserves, except a few. The ones that did are not in trouble. Some had a big cash reserve, but 99 per cent did not, and that is why they are in trouble."

Hiram S. Cody in his testimony quoted from Elements of the Modern Building and Loan Associations, by Clark and Chase, which is approved by United States Building and Loan League, as follows (p. 350):

"The organizers of an association are interested first of all in securing a sufficient dividend rate upon their own shares to make the investment profitable to themselves and to other investors. Therefore, they attempt to fix an interest rate as high as the traffic will bear, knowing that the borrower can see his way out of debt through the amortization principle in spite of the excessive rate.

"Unscrupulous directors have at times taken advantage of borrowers by keeping the monthly payment low, while requiring an excessive number of payments, thus accomplishing the same thing as charging a higher rate in the first place. Charging too high a rate in the past has obliged some associations to liquidate their assets and go out of business, because the high rate was boycotted by borrowers and the money of the savings members could not be invested according to plan.

"The average building and loan secretary has not taken the trouble to sit down with the borrower and figure out the total cost of a loan. It has been the custom to tell the borrower the rate of interest and to refer to the premium and such other costs as may be imposed as unimportant details. The average borrower from a building and loan association is making the only big loan of his life, and misleading or incomplete statements may make it possible to exact an exorbitant total price for the loan."

Continuing, on page 354, Mr. Cody says:

"Just a word about the 12,000,000 building and loan members, which include 10,000,000 depositors and 2,000,000 borrowers. Also their $8,000,000,000 of assets, constantly mentioned in these hearings. Impressive totals, it is true, but if our Mortgage Bankers Association of 300 or 400 actual members, including banks, trust companies, and mutual life insurance companies, counted its membership and its assets by exactly the same process as the building and loan associations count theirs, the total would be over 50,000,000 members and our assets would exceed $14,000,000,000. Yet we seek no special consideration because of these striking totals."

In the Senate hearings, page 666:

"Senator BULKLEY. No; that is not what I am talking about; I am talking about how we are going into the business that the life insurance companies are doing and consciously accept the lower class of risks and get away with it?

"Secretary LAMONT. I do not know; I can not speak from any statistical background, but I think the general history of real-estate home mortgages has been on the whole very satisfactory. The building and loan associations have out some $9,000,000,000 worth of loans, and their losses have been so insignificant that, taking it as a whole, they have been successful and prosperous."

There has been a wide difference of opinions as to the amount of home-mortgage loans in the entire country. Doctor Gries, in his testimony before the Senate committee, on page 669 of the hearings, gives his estimate from $25,000,000,000 to $43,000,000,000. Of this amount the building and loan associations are carrying about $8,000,000,000, or perhaps about one-fourth.

Since the hearings closed, Mr. Bodfish, executive manager of the United States Building and Loan League, is reported by the New York Times as saying:

"Evidence of a gradual return of confidence among savings investors throughout the country is reported for the United States Building and Loan League through Morton Bodfish, its managing director. He says investors in building and loan associations increased by 10,527 in February, a figure which exceeds by more than 30 per cent the average monthly gain of 7,897 during the boom year of 1929. New accounts opened were 143,055, the league estimates, while 132,528 accounts were closed. Mr. Bodfish calls the February gain a distinct improvement and says it is significant in that it shows people turning naturally to the home-financing investment field again.

In view of the fact that representatives of insurance companies, real estate boards, banks, and even building and loan associations from one end of the country to the other have expressed the opinion that a system of home-loan banks was not needed, it is not difficult to reach the conclusion that there is no such urgent, widespread demand for them as to justify their establishment on a national scale at the expense of the Government. If there is an immediate need, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was organized for the very purpose of furnishing credit to the very institutions mentioned in this act.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation provides for loans to banks, insurance companies, and building and loan associations. That measure became a law in January of this year. Is it possible that almost before the machinery for the operation of that corporation is set up, and before it has had an opportunity to see what it can do, that another nation-wide permanent banking system will be set up for the use and benefit of the insurance companies, the banks, and the building and loan associations of the country?

The Glass-Steagall bill was passed for the purpose of loosening up credit and making it easier for the banks and financial institutions to borrow money. That law has not had time to show what it can do. Still it is now proposed to spend $125,000,000 on a bank plan in behalf of banks, insurance companies, and building and loan associations. The fact is that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has made many loans and in large sums to the very institutions this measure is designed to help. Loans are being made every day and emergencies, which may have existed, are being met.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation from the 2d day of February, which was the first day of its operation, up to April 19, approved loans as follows:

To building and loan associations	$17,326,748
To insurance companies	11,952,000
To banks and trust companies	243,248,769

IF THERE IS A NATIONAL NEED LET THE MORTGAGE LOAN INSTITUTIONS ORGANIZE TO MEET THE NEED

The Nolan-Calder bills sought to establish building and loan banks to the stock of which each association could subscribe. If there is a national need for these banks, why not let the member institutions subscribe for the necessary stock. The proposal in this bill is to set up a system of Federal home-loan banks with the money of the United States for the benefit of certain banking and financial institutions. It is purely institutional. The proposed banks will deal with financial and mortgage-loan institutions. They do not loan to individuals. The Government is put squarely into the banking business in full partnership with financial institutions of the country, except that most of the capital may be furnished by the Government and the profits to be derived therefrom shall be shared by the member institutions. This is something new in Government financing and a dangerous precedent. The Government is to be the principal stockholder in a banking system with building and loan associations, banks, and insurance companies holding the balance of the stock and receiving the benefits and the profits.

STATES CAN TAKE CARE OF NEEDS

The needs are more or less local. The demand for mortgage money is much greater in certain localities than others. There are few building and loan associations in some States. A great many in other States. Practically half of the building and loan association business is done in three States, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey. In normal times through all the years building and loan associations have had all the loans they wanted from the banks, and in many parts of the country that is still true. Local banks, insurance companies, building and loan associations, and mortgage bankers in ordinary times have taken care of real-estate loans. Upon a return to normal times they can do so again, even if they are not able to successfully and efficiently cope with the present situation. The conditions being different in each State, why not let the States provide a mortgage-loan system.

New York has a State land bank called the Savings & Loan Bank of New York, which functions well, and has for a number of years.

Massachusetts by acts of March 2, 1932, created the Mutual Savings Central Fund (Inc.) and the Cooperative Central Bank. These are central banks, the capital of which is obtained from the reserves and deposits in the savings and cooperative banks of that State, which are similar to building and loan associations. The funds in the central banks thus established are loaned to the savings banks or cooperative banks of the State, just as is proposed by this bill. Here are State institutions just set up under State law and with capital provided by the State banks which serve all the emergency needs of the cooperative banks of that State. A similar proposition is pending in New Jersey. If New York, Massachusetts, and possibly New Jersey can provide State central banks to relieve the situation, why not the rest of the States?

What is known as the guaranty stock plan is principally in use in California, Oregon, and Colorado. Clark and Chase in their book heretofore mentioned say:

"Building and loan associations have been so uniformly successful that no guaranty stock association has ever failed to make payments on all kinds of shares."

They further say:

"Even in periods of depression the earnings have not dropped low enough to bother the guaranteeing shareholders."

Kansas has what is known as the permanent or contingent reserve stock plan, the purpose of which is to act as a reserve. Clark and Chase say of these institutions in Kansas:

"All contracts so far as known have been fully met and the dividends on all classes of stock have been liquidated."

If these States can provide a safe and liquid system of building and loan associations even in periods of depression, Ohio and Pennsylvania and other States might do the same.

The real estate laws in all the States are more or less different. Homestead and dower interest vary. The form of mortgage and acknowledgment and the effect of recording the mortgage may differ. The time and manner of filing mechanics' liens are not the same. Methods of foreclosure and rights of redemption are at variance. The amount which member institutions can borrow in different States under the laws thereof, as well as the amount of collateral which may be put up and the purposes for which the money may be borrowed are different. There is a wide difference as to negotiable or assignable paper and reserves that must be carried. With all these differences, variations, and conflicts in the State laws, it will be difficult if not impossible to establish a workable national system and bring together in one group strictly legal mortgage assets to furnish the foundation for a nation-wide bond issue.

WHAT STATES CAN COME IN ON AN EQUALITY?

In how many States will the law permit building and loan associations and banks to subscribe and pay for stock in the Federal home-loan banks if this bill becomes a law? This question has been often asked but never answered. It may be stated generally that banks and building and loan associations can not purchase stock in other corporations. To be sure the laws of the States may be changed if the legislature sees fit to do so. How many would come in until the law is changed and take the chance on going out at the end of 42 months, it is impossible to tell.

Mr. Hall, a member of the legislative committee of the United States Building and Loan League filed with the subcommittee a statement giving the law of most of the States as received by him from the secretaries of building and loan associations in the different States.

From this report it appears the member institutions in 9 States are eligible to become members of the Federal home-loan banks and enjoy the full benefits; that institutions in 22 States are not eligible to enjoy the benefits of membership; 5 States are in doubt and 12 States did not report. This statement shows that in the following States building and loan associations will be prohibited from participating in the full privileges of the Federal home-loan banks until the laws are amended:

In Maine and Nebraska they (building and loan associations) can not borrow money for any purpose. In Missouri, Illinois, Oklahoma, Florida, Iowa, and Pennsylvania, the mortgages of the building and loan associations are nonnegotiable and can not be pledged as security for loans. In Vermont, the mortgages are negotiable, but the State law does not permit their pledge or assignment as collateral security. In Indiana the mortgages may be assigned with the approval of the circuit court. In Alabama securities may be pledged as collateral for borrowed money, but the money can be used only to pay off shares and certificates presented for withdrawal, and can not be used for the benefit of the borrower. In North Dakota the law permits the assignment of mortgages as security for borrowed money but the collateral must not exceed one and one-half times more than the amount borrowed, less than the amount required in this bill. Kansas permits building and loan associations to borrow but does not permit them to borrow for the purpose of making loans to members unless the loan is obtained from some other building and loan association. A decided difference of legal opinion exists as to several provisions of the Massachusetts law and an effort has been made to clarify the situation by new legislation. However, the new central State banks have been established in this State as heretofore pointed out. In Idaho, while the mortgages are negotiable, the law prohibits borrowing for any purpose. In Montana the associations can borrow money but can not pledge mortgages without consent of banking department, and then only in the event the margin of security pledged shall not exceed 25 per cent of the funds borrowed, which is less than this bill provides for.

In California the borrowing capacity of the associations is limited to 5 per cent of their total assets, and the unpaid balance of the mortgages pledged shall not exceed 150 per cent of the amount borrowed. In New Jersey there is no specific provision allowing or prohibiting assignment of mortgages, and a great difference of opinion exists among lawyers on this point. In Minnesota associations have no power to assign mortgages as security, and the attorney general and banking department are of the opinion that the associations can not use their mortgages as collateral to borrow money. In Georgia there is no law to prohibit associations from pledging mortgages, but the practice has been to hold them in the offices of the various associations. In Arkansas the law is uncertain, and an amendment is to be presented to the legislature. In Washington all mortgages of the associations are placed in trust with the State department for the benefit of members and can not be pledged to borrow money. In North Carolina the practice is to borrow on unsecured note without collateral and opinion is that laws must be amended. In Michigan the law is uncertain and may have to be amended. In Colorado the practice is to pledge mortgages as collateral security, but this only gives the pledge a prior lien for repayment on the proceeds of such collateral when collected in the usual way but does not permit the sale of such collateral.

A letter from the executive secretary of the Wisconsin Building and Loan League, written since the hearings closed, states that "Building and loan mortgages in Wisconsin are secured by nonnegotiable bonds and mortgages," and further states: "So far, we are not interested in the Federal home-loan bank, because we believe our associations have borrowed too much money already."

In addition to the above States, Maryland and South Carolina can not come in under the general provisions of the law, for the reason that their building and loan associations are not subject to State inspection. There is a provision that permits them to come in for a period of 42 months in order to give the legislature a chance to change the law in regard to inspection. There is also a provision by which members who can not pledge mortgages as collateral may obtain advances with maturity not greater than one year from the capital stock of the bank but not from the proceeds from the sale of bonds. These provisions are efforts in a measure to satisfy conditions in certain States in order to secure support for the bill. These widespread differences and the conflicting and confusing provisions of the State laws emphasize the difficulty if not the impossibility of establishing a national system of home-loan banks. The various States may change their laws to permit the various institutions to enjoy full membership in this system if it is established. Some of these changes are not mere matters of form. They involve fundamental local policies and principles. That the mortgages of building and loan associations shall not be pledged as collateral for borrowed money is regarded by many as the greatest safeguard thrown around the institutions. Whatever the States may think of their policy, this measure says to them, "You must fit into the mold made for you in Washington if you get any benefits from this law."

Respectfully submitted.

CLYDE WILLIAMS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] was adopted.

Mr. COUZENS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]. I understand that if he were present he would vote as I shall vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HATFIELD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MORRISON]. I am informed that he would vote as I desire to vote. I therefore feel free to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE], and will vote. I vote "yea."

I desire to announce that if the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE] were present he also would vote "yea."

Mr. KING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] upon this and other matters relating to this bill. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. If he were present, he would vote "nay"; and if I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea." I withhold my vote.

Mr. METCALF (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. I understand that if he were present he would vote "nay." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SCHALL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. I understand that he is otherwise specially paired on this question, which leaves me at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], who, if present, I understand would vote "yea." I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. I am not advised as to how he would vote if present. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. I understand that on this question he and the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN] have made a special pair, which leaves me free to vote. I therefore vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BULKLEY. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], who is absent. Obviously, if he were present, he would vote as I intend to vote, and I therefore am free to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DICKINSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. I understand that the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MORRISON], if present, would vote as I have already voted. I therefore transfer my pair to the senior Senator from North Carolina, and will permit my vote to stand.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] is unavoidably absent. He has a special pair on this subject with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. If present, the Senator from West Virginia would vote "nay."

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]; and

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES].

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] is detained on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 47, nays 23, as follows:

YEAS—47

Ashurst	Fess	Kendrick	Smoot
Austin	Glenn	Long	Steiwer
Bailey	Goldsborough	McGill	Thomas, Idaho
Barbour	Hale	McKellar	Townsend
Brookhart	Hastings	Moses	Trammell

Carey	King	Oddie	Walsh, Mont.
Coolidge	Lewis	Shipstead	Waterman
Cutting	Logan	Shortridge	Wheeler
Dale	McNary	Smith
Harrison	Metcalf	Swanson

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is upon the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] in the nature of a substitute.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is open to amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 1260. An act for the relief of James E. Fraser;

H. R. 2010. An act for the relief of Malcom Allen;

H. R. 2650. An act for the relief of George H. Holman;

H. R. 3460. An act for the relief of Caughman-Kaminer Co.;

H. R. 3467. An act for the relief of David C. Jeffcoat;

H. R. 4160. An act for the relief of Raymond D. Woods;

H. R. 5211. An act for the relief of the heirs of Samuel B. Inman;

H. R. 5276. An act for the relief of Hilda Barnard;

H. R. 5513. An act to permit the United States to be made a party defendant in certain cases;

H. R. 7309. An act for the relief of Frank R. Scott;

H. R. 7499. An act to amend Act No. 3 of the Isthmian Canal Commission relating to the suppression of lotteries in the Canal Zone, enacted August 22, 1904;

H. R. 9590. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the collection and publication of statistics of tobacco by the Department of Agriculture," approved January 14, 1929; and

H. R. 12251. An act to provide for the conveyance of the Portage Entry Lighthouse Reservation and buildings to the State of Michigan for public-park purposes.

PLUMBING AND GAS FITTING IN THE DISTRICT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3400) to amend an act of Congress approved June 18, 1898, entitled "An act to regulate plumbing and gas fitting in the District of Columbia," which were, on page 2, line 10, to strike out "$25" and insert "$10," and on the same page, line 11, to strike out "$50" and insert "$25."

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments made in the House.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I did not quite understand this measure.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, the amendment would reduce the annual license fee in the District of Columbia for plumbers and steam fitters from $25 and $50, as provided in the Senate, to $10 and $25, as provided in the House.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I think that is a very happy amendment to the bill. I was very much startled and disgusted to read in the press recently that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia had succeeded in getting through Congress a bill which provided for an increase in the license fees in the District of Columbia on taxicabs from $9 to $25. There has been more or less of a war on in the District of Columbia for some time between the taxi monopoly and the independent taxis, those who have brought about the reduced rates, and it seemed that the monopoly has had exhibited toward it a friendly attitude on the part of the District Commissioners, and in this particular legislation authorizing the increase from $9 to $25 per taxicab, they had the increased assistance of Congress.

I think it is high time that the committees, or whoever is in charge of the District of Columbia legislation, should maintain an attitude of preserving the rights of the public generally of the District of Columbia and not assist in the promotion of the monopolistic tendency on the part of taxicab companies in this city, which want a monopoly.

I am very glad to see that this amendment provides for a reduction. I thought the legislation when it passed the Senate was absurd, to increase the license tax, as it was proposed to increase it, and this is much better. I am very sorry that there ever slipped through Congress any bill authorizing an increase from $9 to $25 upon taxicabs. It is a movement which can not result to the benefit of anyone except the monopoly. It is also a movement which will be conducive toward more unemployment. I have a great feeling of sympathy for the hundreds of men in the city of Washington who are driving taxicabs and making only a bare existence. They are energetic, they are patriotic, they want to make an honest living, and they are operating their taxis in order to do that, even though most of them are making a small earning of $1.50 to $2 a day. Yet the District of Columbia comes along and Congress assists them in increasing their license tax from $9 per annum to $25 per annum. I really think Congress ought to repeal any such provision.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT, as in executive session, laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, submitting sundry nominations of postmasters, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

HOME-LOAN BANKS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12280) to create Federal home-loan banks, to provide for the supervision thereof, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT] was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have moved that the Senate reconsider the vote whereby it agreed to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT]. That was an amendment to strike out the language in section 25 of the bill as originally presented and insert new language, the effect being to limit to five years the life of the home-loan-bank system which is to be set up under this measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

On a division, the motion was agreed to, and the vote was reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, at the request of the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], who is necessarily absent, I desire to submit an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON] moves on behalf of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], on page 4, line 10, at the end of the line, to insert the words "mortgage guarantee company," and on page 5, line 14, at the end of the line, to insert the words "or mortgage guarantee company," so as to read:

CAPITAL OF FEDERAL HOME-LOAN BANKS AND SUBSCRIPTIONS THERETO

SEC. 4. (a) Any building and loan association, savings and loan association, cooperative bank, homestead association, insurance company, savings bank, trust company, mortgage-guaranty company, State bank, or other banking organization, shall be eligible to become a member of, or a nonmember borrower of, a Federal home-loan bank if such institution (1) is duly organized under the laws of any State or of the United States; (2) is subject to inspection and regulation under the banking laws, or under similar laws, of the State or of the United States; and (3) makes such home-mortgage loans as in the judgment of the board are long-term loans (and in the case of a savings bank, trust company, State bank, or other banking organization, if in the judgment of the board its time deposits, as defined in section 19 of the Federal reserve act, warrant its making such loans). No institution shall be eligible to become a member of or a nonmember borrower of a Federal home-loan bank if in the judgment of the board its financial condition is such that advances may not safely be made to such institution or the character of its management or its home-financing policy is inconsistent with sound and economical home financing or with the purposes of this act.

(b) An institution eligible to become a member or a nonmember borrower under this section may become a member only of, or secure advances from, the Federal home-loan bank of the district in which is located the institution's principal place of business, or of the bank of a district adjoining such district, if demanded by convenience, and then only with the approval of the board.

(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of clause (2) of subsection (a) of this section requiring inspection and regulation under the law as a condition with respect to eligibility for membership, any building and loan association or mortgage-guaranty company which would be eligible to become a member of a Federal home-loan bank except for the fact that it is not subject to inspection and regulation under the banking laws or similar laws of the State in which such association is organized shall, upon subjecting itself to such inspection and regulation as the board shall prescribe, be eligible to become a member.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to considering the two amendments together? The Chair hears none, and the question is on agreeing to the amendments.

On a division, the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, this morning I sent to the desk an amendment which I would like to have reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is in the Secretary's office, and will be sent for.

Mr. COUZENS. In the meantime I will offer another amendment, while that is being sent for.

I move that subsection (i), running from line 9, page 24, to line 7, on page 25, be eliminated from the bill.

The reason for the motion is that it will be observed from reading this section that the money is not to be used for the small-home owner. The ostensible purpose of this bill has so influenced the Senate that Senators have lost their judgment about what is to be the real outcome of the bill. This section provides as follows:

(i) Each Federal home-loan bank shall at all times have an amount, equal to the sums paid in on outstanding capital subscriptions of its members, plus an amount, equal to the current deposits received from its members and from nonmember borrowers, invested in (1) obligations of the United States, (2) deposits in banks or trust companies, (3) advances with maturity not greater than one year made to members or nonmember borrowers, upon such terms and conditions as the board may prescribe, and (4) advances with maturity not greater than one year made to members or nonmember borrowers the amount of whose creditor liabilities (not including advances from the Federal home-loan bank) does not exceed 5 per cent of such member's or nonmember borrower's net assets, which advances may be made without the security of home mortgages or other security, upon such terms and conditions as the board may prescribe: Provided, however——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair might announce that the proviso was stricken out upon motion of the Senator from New York.

Mr. COUZENS. I have not a reprint of the bill before me. The language I have read ought to come out of the bill, if we are to do what we are really pretending to do, namely, conserve all the money possible for the benefit of the home owner. In other words, instead of requiring the subscriptions to capital and the moneys deposited in the banks to be used for home owners, under this provision of the measure it may be invested in Government bonds, it may be deposited in banks or trust companies, it may be loaned to building and loan associations, without any requirement that the money be used for the benefit of the small-home owner.

I do not desire to take up the time of the Senate. I believe my position is perfectly plain, and that that section of the bill ought to be eliminated.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, it appears to me that this provision of the bill is a most salutary one. It is intended to provide for the protection of those who invest their funds in these home-loan banks.

Mr. COUZENS. Of course, that is perfectly true. That is what I am telling Senators, that instead of being proposed for the benefit of the home owner, it is inserted to provide safety for the investor.

Mr. HEBERT. I disagree absolutely with the attitude of the Senator on this point, because the money that is to be loaned to mortgagors is to come from the sale of bonds which the home-loan banks are to issue, and those bonds must be protected by funds held intact at all times by the home-loan banks.

If these banks are to operate efficiently and effectively, they must have funds very much in excess of the figure named here. The $400,000,000 which the Senator proposes to provide out of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would be far from sufficient to meet the needs. It has been estimated that a sum nearer $2,000,000,000 will be required ultimately to meet the needs of the borrowers in this country, and most assuredly if these banks are going to offer these securities to the investing public, they should be safeguarded, and this provision would safeguard them.

Mr. COUZENS obtained the floor.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, does the Senator move to strike out that whole section?

Mr. COUZENS. Yes; beginning with line 9 and running down to line 25, on page 24. I understand that the proviso which follows has already been eliminated.

Mr. WATSON. Yes; that is out now.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island admits that the home loans that are to be made under this bill are not adequate security for the bonds that are to be issued. In other words, he admits that the marketing of these bonds will be difficult unless there is a reserve outside of the mortgages themselves.

It seems to me that admission is a clear indication of what many of us fear, that they are going to unload all of the junk possible on these home-loan banks, and they are so fearful that is going to happen that they are afraid to issue their securities based on the mortgages to support the bonds or debentures they will sell. Therefore, Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island admitting that the mortgages will not be security for the debentures, admitting that they will be so insecure that the public will not buy them unless all of the capital stock, all of the deposits, and all of the other assets, as provided in section (i) are maintained as additional security for the mortgages, they can not sell their securities.

That is just the kind of admission that I desired to have from the proponents of the bill. They themselves by this confession admit that the securities on which the home-loan banks are going to lend their money are not sufficient to justify anybody's purchasing the bonds, and therefore they demand all this additional security.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I am surprised at the Senator that he would seek to undermine the value of the bonds and the security of the banks. I would think that he would want to make certain that this is a solvent and going concern and that all stock issued is perfectly secure and safe and the bonds equally safe.

Mr. COUZENS. I have contended all along that there will be no market for the bonds.

Mr. COPELAND. Would it not help to have a market?

Mr. COUZENS. This will not help. This will not help to sell the bonds, because it will fluctuate. No one knows what this is going to amount to. It is but a "come-on" statement that the seller uses to get the investors to buy the securities.

Mr. President, it is admitted, and it has been alleged and practically confirmed by the Senator from Rhode Island, that the building and loan associations propose to unload all of their excessive loans on the home-loan bank, and therefore the public will not be able to rely upon the securities issued with them as a basis without possibly adding all of the other assets which are enumerated in section 1.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still open to amendment.

Mr. COUZENS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, line 21, before the period, insert the following: "Provided, That this section shall not apply after two years from the enactment of this act."

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, it will be observed that paragraph (c) of section 4 provides that notwithstanding the provisions of clause 2 of subsection (a), which provides that the beneficiaries under the act must have a State examination or Federal examination by bank examiners, notwithstanding the beneficiaries under the bill are supposed to have and it is provided that they shall have duly authorized examinations, it is now proposed that notwithstanding such provisions requiring inspection and regulation under the law as condition precedent to eligibility for membership, that—

> Any building and loan association which would become eligible to become a member of a Federal home-loan bank except for the fact that it is not subject to inspection and regulation under the banking laws or similar laws of the State in which such association is organized shall, upon subjecting itself to such inspection and regulation as the board shall prescribe, be eligible to become a member.

In the provisions of clause 2, every precaution is taken to prohibit these associations becoming members unless they are under some regulation of State or Federal Government. But it is now proposed that any sort of agency, whether it be regulated by State or Federal Government, is permitted to become a member of a home-loan bank on mere regulations of a bureau or board in Washington. I am not trying to eliminate some of those who may for the time being be unable to get into the banks under the provisions heretofore referred to, so I have offered the amendment in order that the agencies may not become members of the home-loan bank except for a period of two years, and thereafter they must come under Federal or State jurisdiction.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I have no objection to this going to conference, but I want to point out that in Maryland there is no such provision for inspection. The Maryland witnesses brought out the fact that there had not been a loss in the building and loan association in all the years they have operated over there, while there have been many losses in the banks. Personally, I can see no objection to its going to conference and being considered there.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. HEBERT. Supplementing the statement made just now by the Senator from New York, I am informed that there are some 1,100 building and loan associations in the State of Maryland. They have never had any supervision there, and yet they have been eminently successful. I am informed that a very small number have failed. I do not recollect the exact proportion, but I think it is much less than 1 per cent of all those that are doing business in that State.

Mr. COUZENS. That is not the issue. I am not trying to legislate for one State. One of the things I object to here is that every time we attempt to legislate nationally, every time we try to legislate for the Nation, the representatives of some State get up and want an exception because the legislature of their own State has not taken interest enough in the subject matter so that they may come within the requirements of the bill about to be enacted.

Mr. HEBERT. It is to be observed, too, that even where there is State supervision these institutions may be excluded from membership by the board. There is a very stringent condition fixed on page 4 of the bill, beginning in line 22, to which I invite the attention of the Senator. It reads:

> No institution shall be eligible to become a member of, or a nonmember borrower of, a Federal home-loan bank if, in the judgment of the board, its financial condition is such that advances may not safely be made to such institution or the character of its management or its home-financing policy is inconsistent with sound and economical home financing, or with the purposes of this act.

It would not mean that mere supervision by State officials would guarantee that the institutions in any given State would be admissible if in the judgment of the board it was not considered safe to admit them as borrowers or as borrowing members or nonborrowing members. Ultimately it always comes down to the judgment of the board.

Mr. COUZENS. That is quite correct. I had read that provision. I think it is highly desirable, but it leaves to a board the right to take in any sort of agency it may want to as a nonborrowing member or as a borrowing member, only upon the written regulations of a board. The agencies are not required to comply with any State or Federal law so far as the laws applied to financial institutions are concerned.

We have tried to provide in the first part of section 4 that all of the beneficiaries under the bill must comply with the banking or financial laws of their States and subject themselves to examination. It is perfectly desirable, I think, to have the provision to which the Senator from Rhode Island referred as an additional safeguard; but after that additional safeguard, then we exempt those agencies or financial institutions which the board is willing to exempt and which are excluded from examination by National or State law.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I gather that the Senator's idea is that if there are building and loan associations which are not now under the inspection and examination of States because of the absence of State laws, this would give time for the States to provide for examination of such associations, and that they could then qualify.

Mr. COUZENS. That is quite correct. That is the reason why I offered the provision that subsection (c) should not apply after a 2-year period.

Mr. FLETCHER. That would give a chance to the States to enact laws that would provide for their examination and let them come in under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. COUZENS. That is entirely true, and I see no reason why the States themselves should not take an interest in their own building and loan associations and have due examination made of them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there any further amendments? If not, the question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] characterized the home loan bank bill earlier in the debate as a "monstrosity." That monstrosity still remains, but in a more ugly form. The title of the bill should be changed to read "A bill to create another Federal commission, to provide jobs for bank presidents and cashiers, and for a Christmas present to the national banks."

It is proposed by the provisions of the bill to set up a board consisting of five members here in Washington, each with an annual salary of $10,000, with a retinue of lawyers, clerks, specialists, economists, to supervise four so-called home-loan banks, one for each member of the commission and one additional commissioner thrown in for good measure.

Mr. KING. Bad measure!

Mr. BLAINE. Yes; for bad measure.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator that an amendment was accepted reducing the membership of the board to three.

Mr. BLAINE. I accept the correction. The board is to be composed of three members. I withdraw my remarks respecting "bad measure" and "good measure." There are to be three members of the board here in Washington to supervise four of these so-called home-loan banks. There is not a dollar in the bill for the home owners. The building and loan associations and certain banking and financial organizations may borrow money from the home-loan banks in connection with loans they have already made to home owners. That only means that the home owner will have to pay additional overhead charges. The home owner will have to pay added interest, the salary of the bank president, cashier, and assistants, rent and other expenses incurred by the home-loan banks. Of course, the home owners will have to pay those additional charges. Who else is there to pay them?

I have pointed out one of the monstrosities in the bill. The other monstrosity—and I think that is a good name to call it—is the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] which permits national banks to issue circulating currency to the extent of nearly $1,000,000,000, for which the Government—and that, of course, means the taxpayers—will have to pay as high as 3⅜ per cent per annum to the national banks for the purpose of letting the national banks issue money which the Government guarantees.

That means that the taxpayers will pay $33,800,000 a year if the national banks avail themselves of the privilege extended to them in case they use the 3⅜ per cent Government bonds as the basis for the circulation.

The Government is already paying, in round numbers, $13,000,000 to the national banks on money they have issued, but which is guaranteed by the Government under Government bonds. That means that the taxpayers of this country will be paying, in round numbers, to the national banks $46,000,000 annually as interest on Government bonds which the banks use as the basis for the issuing of currency—currency in effect guaranteed by the Government. Translated into practical effect, that means that the Government is paying a trifle more than $46,000,000 a year on its own money after that money is issued by the national banks.

There is no assurance that the currency that will be issued by the national banks will ever reach the general public. There is no provision in the bill and no guarantee that any of the additional currency will be used to purchase services or labor, material or commodities. We have every assurance that such currency will never reach the people, and for the following reasons: Of the $5,400,000,000 of circulating medium now available for general circulation, there is in active circulation only $2,500,000,000, according to the testimony given by a representative of the Federal reserve system before a committee of the House not long since. I repeat, there is only $2,500,000,000 active money in circulation and $2,900,000,000 of existing circulating medium is inactive and is not in circulation. Since that $2,900,000,000 does not find itself in the channels of circulation, how is the additional billion of circulating medium authorized by this bill, ever expected to find its way into the channels of circulation?

It must be perfectly obvious that the additional billion dollars will not percolate into the pockets of the public, since there is now available $2,900,000,000 of circulating medium which has not percolated through to the public.

We all know that banks are not advancing money to industry, transportation, or to agriculture. All three of those undertakings are unprofitable. They do not promise certainty of return of income. It is obvious that the national banks will either hoard the additional billion dollars provided for, or invest the same in Government bonds, or the $1,000,000,000 will go into the stock markets and speculation as loans to brokers—loans more profitable than loans to agriculture, industry, or transportation.

I can not support a bill once a monstrosity and now a double monstrosity.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BLAINE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Costigan	Howell	Reed
Austin	Couzens	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.
Bailey	Dale	Jones	Robinson, Ind.
Barbour	Davis	Kean	Schall
Bingham	Dickinson	Kendrick	Sheppard
Black	Dill	Keyes	Shipstead
Blaine	Fess	King	Shortridge
Borah	Fletcher	La Follette	Smoot
Bratton	Frazier	Lewis	Steiwer
Brookhart	George	Long	Stephens
Broussard	Glass	McGill	Thomas, Idaho
Bulkley	Glenn	McKellar	Townsend
Bulow	Goldsborough	McNary	Trammell
Byrnes	Gore	Metcalf	Tydings
Capper	Hale	Moses	Vandenberg
Caraway	Harrison	Norbeck	Wagner
Cohen	Hastings	Norris	Walcott
Connally	Hatfield	Nye	Walsh, Mass.
Coolidge	Hayden	Patterson	Watson
Copeland	Hebert	Pittman	White

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The bill having been read a third time, the question is on its passage.

The bill was passed.

Mr. NORBECK. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 4940) to provide temporary aid to agriculture for the relief of the existing national economic emergency may be made the unfinished business at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a special order now pending.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the special order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That would have to be done under the rules unless unanimous consent were given to proceed with some other measure.

Mr. NORBECK. Is a motion in order to make the farm bill the unfinished business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not until the other bill is laid before the Senate. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 9642) to authorize supplemental appropriations for emergency highway construction, with a view to increasing employment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is that offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM].

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I desire to withdraw the pending amendment. I understand that a substitute for the entire bill is to be offered by the Senator from New York, and I understand that in the Senator's bill there is the road feature, which is included in the pending bill. When the proper time comes I shall offer the amendment to that measure, but I do not desire to delay the consideration of the proposed substitute. Therefore, I ask that the pending amendment may be withdrawn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut withdraws his amendment.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I thought we had reached an understanding by which we could secure a vote on the farm bill in time so that it might be considered by the House. I plead with the Senate to give us a chance to do that. I do not think it will involve prolonged discussion, but, Mr. President, we all realize that this is the only chance to secure the consideration of the farm bill, unless it should be offered as a rider to the relief bill, to which certain objection would be made.

I am anxious as is anyone to have the relief measure passed; I worked on it just as long as anyone else; I am anxious to adjourn and get away; but I do not feel that the Congress can adjourn without giving a little more serious consideration to the important question of agriculture which is so far-reaching in its effect. I, therefore, desire to make the motion that the farm bill be taken up and be made the unfinished business.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the relief bill is by order of the Senate the unfinished business at this time. I do not know whether or not the Chair has laid it before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has laid the bill before the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Then it is the unfinished business. The motion of the Senator from South Dakota would displace the unfinished business. I hope he will not make the motion; but, if he shall make it, I will ask that the Senate vote it down because the House is waiting for the relief bill; the House is becoming impatient; and I think we ought to proceed at once with the measure.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, there is all the more reason why it is necessary to get a vote early on the farm bill, if it is going to be given serious consideration by the House, and I must insist that a vote be taken on the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is not debatable under Rule X. The clerk will state the title of the bill which is the subject of the motion of the Senator from South Dakota.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from South Dakota moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business No. 1060, Senate bill 4940, to provide temporary aid to agriculture for the relief of the existing national economic emergency.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Dakota.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I desire to state at this time that that leaves me no recourse except to offer the bill as an amendment to the emergency relief bill, which I will do when we reach the point where that can be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair ask the Senator from South Dakota whether it was his intention to ask that the Senate insist upon its amendments to the home loan bill?

Mr. NORBECK. Yes, Mr. President. I desire at this time to move that the Senate insist on its amendments, that a conference with the House be requested, and that conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COUZENS. Is it permissible to know the names of the prospective conferees before the motion is voted upon?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; that is not permissible.

Mr. COUZENS. Before the question is put on the motion I should like to know, if possible, who will be the conferees. The Chair informs me, however, that it is not permissible to name the conferees in advance.

Mr. NORBECK. The usual parliamentary procedure will be followed in this matter. It is not an unusual thing. I have no hesitation in saying that the conferees will be the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] on the Democratic side and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] and the chairman of the committee on the Republican side.

Mr. COUZENS. I will withdraw, although I know that the majority of the committee are opposed to the position of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Dakota.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. NORBECK, Mr. WATSON, and Mr. FLETCHER conferees on the part of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. WATSON, the bill (S. 2959) to create Federal home-loan banks, to provide for the supervision thereof, and for other purposes, was ordered to be indefinitely postponed.

EMERGENCY UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the special order, the Chair lays before the Senate the bill (H. R. 9642) to authorize supplemental appropriations for emergency highway construction, with a view to increasing employment.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I offer as an amendment to the pending bill, in the nature of a substitute, the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the amendment, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That this act may be cited as the "Emergency relief and construction act of 1932."

TITLE I—RELIEF OF DESTITUTION

SECTION 1. (a) The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make available out of the funds of the corporation the sum of $300,000,000, under the terms and conditions hereinafter set forth, to the several States and Territories, to be used in furnishing relief and work relief to needy and distressed people and in relieving the hardship resulting from unemployment, but not more than 15 per cent of such sum shall be available to any one State or Territory. Such sum of $300,000,000 shall until the expiration of two years after the date of enactment of this act, be available for payment to the governors of the several States and Territories for the purposes of this section, upon application therefor by them in accordance with subsection (c), and upon approval of such applications by the corporation.

(b) All amounts paid under this section shall bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, and, except in the case of Puerto Rico and the Territory of Alaska, shall be reimbursed to the corporation, with interest thereon at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, by making annual deductions, beginning with the fiscal year 1935, from regular apportionments made from future Federal authorizations in aid of the States and Territories for the construction of highways and rural post roads of an amount equal to one-fifth of the share which such State or Territory would be entitled to receive under such apportionment except for the provisions of this section, or of an amount equal to one-fifth of the amounts so paid to the governor of such State or Territory pursuant to this section and all accrued interest thereon to the date of such deduction, whichever is the lesser, until the sum of such deductions equals the total amounts paid under this section and all accrued interest thereon. Whenever any such deduction is made, the Secretary of the Treasury shall immediately pay to the corporation an amount equal to the amount so deducted. If any State or Territory shall, within two years after the date of enactment of this act, enter into an agreement with the corporation for the repayment to the corporation of the amounts paid under this section to the governor of such State or Territory, with interest thereon as herein provided, in such installments and upon such terms as may be agreed upon, then the deduction under this subsection shall not be made unless such State or Territory shall be in default in the performance of the terms of such agreement. In the case of a default by the State or Territory in any such agreement, the agreement shall thereupon be terminated, and reimbursement of the unpaid balance of the amount covered by such agreement shall be made by making annual deductions in the manner above provided (beginning with the fiscal year next following such default) from regular apportionments made to such State or Territory from future Federal authorizations in aid of the States and Territories for the construction of highways and rural post roads. Before any amount is paid under this section to the Governor of Puerto Rico or of the Territory of Alaska, Puerto Rico or the Territory of Alaska shall enter into an agreement with the corporation for the repayment of such amount, with interest thereon as herein provided, in such installments and upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon.

(c) The governor of any State or Territory may from time to time make application for funds under this section, and in each application so made shall certify the necessity for such funds and that the resources of the State or Territory, including moneys then available and which can be made available by the State or Territory, its political subdivisions, and private contributions, are inadequate to meet its relief needs. All amounts paid to the governor of a State or Territory under this section shall be administered by the governor, or under his direction, and upon his responsibility. The governor shall file with the corporation and with the auditor of the State or Territory (or, if there is no auditor, then with the official exercising comparable authority) a statement of the disbursements made by him under this section.

(d) Nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize the corporation to deny an otherwise acceptable application under this section because of constitutional or other legal inhibitions or because the State or Territory has borrowed to the full extent authorized by law. Whenever an application under this section is approved by the corporation in whole or in part, the amount approved shall be immediately paid to the governor of the State or Territory upon delivery by him to the corporation of a receipt therefor stating that the payment is accepted subject to the terms of this section.

(e) Any portion of the amount approved by the corporation for payment to the governor of a State or Territory shall, at his request, and with the approval of the corporation, be paid to any municipality or political subdivision of such State or Territory if (1) the governor makes as to such municipality or political subdivision a like certificate as provided in subsection (c) as to the State or Territory, and (2) such municipality or political subdivision enters into an agreement with the corporation for the repayment to the corporation of the amount so paid, with interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, at such times, and upon such other terms and conditions, as may be agreed upon between the corporation and such municipality or political subdivision. The amount paid to any municipality or political subdivision under this subsection shall not be included in any amounts reimbursable to the corporation under subsection (b) of this section.

(f) As used in this section the term "Territory" means Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico.

TITLE II—LOANS BY RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

SEC. 201. (a) The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered—

(1) To make loans to, or contracts with, States, municipalities, and political subdivisions of States, public agencies of States, of municipalities, and of political subdivisions of States, public corporations, boards and commissions, and public municipal instrumentalities of one or more States, to aid in financing projects authorized under Federal, State, or municipal law which are self-liquidating in character, such loans or contracts to be made through the purchase of their securities, or otherwise, and for such purpose the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to bid for such securities: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prohibit the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in carrying out the provisions of this paragraph, from purchasing securities having a maturity of more than 10 years;

(2) To make loans to corporations formed wholly for the purpose of providing housing for families of low income, or for reconstruction of slum areas, which are regulated by State or municipal law as to rents, charges, capital structure, rate of return, and areas and methods of operation, to aid in financing projects undertaken by such corporations which are self-liquidating in character;

(3) To make loans to private corporations to aid in carrying out the construction, replacement, or improvement of bridges, tunnels, docks, viaducts, waterworks, canals, including industrial water-supply systems, and markets, devoted to public use and which are self-liquidating in character;

(4) To make loans to private limited-dividend corporations to aid in financing projects for the protection and development of forests and other renewable natural resources, which are regulated by a State or political subdivision of a State and are self-liquidating in character; and

(5) To make loans to aid in financing the construction of any publicly owned bridge to be used for railroad, railway, and highway uses, the construction cost of which will be returned in part by means of tolls, fees, rents, or other charges, and the remainder by means of taxes imposed pursuant to State law enacted before the date of enactment of the emergency relief and construction act of 1932; and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is further authorized and empowered to purchase bonds of any State, municipality, or other public body or agency issued for the purpose of financing the construction of any such bridge irrespective of the dates of maturity of such bonds.

For the purposes of this subsection a project shall be deemed to be self-liquidating if such project will be made self-supporting and financially solvent and if the construction cost thereof will be returned within a reasonable period by means of tolls, fees, rents, or other charges, or by such other means as may be prescribed by the statutes which provide for the project. All loans and contracts made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in respect of projects of the character specified in paragraphs (1) to (5) of this subsection shall be subject to the conditions that no convict labor shall be directly employed on any such project, and that (except in executive, administrative, and supervisory positions) so far as practicable, no individual directly employed on any such project shall be permitted to work more than 30 hours in any one week, and that in the employment of labor in connection with any such project preference shall be given, where they are qualified, to ex-service men with dependents. The provisions of this subsection shall apply with respect to projects in Puerto Rico and the Territories to the same extent as in the case of projects in the several States, and as used in this subsection the term "States" includes Puerto Rico and the Territories.

(b) The Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall submit monthly to the President and to the Senate and the House of Representatives (or the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, if those bodies are not in session) a report of its activities and expenditures under this section together with a statement showing the names of the borrowers to whom loans and advances were made, and the amount and rate of interest involved in each case.

(c) In order that the surpluses of agricultural products may not have a depressing effect upon current prices of such products, the corporation is authorized and directed to make loans, in such amounts as may in its judgment be necessary, for the purpose of financing sales of such surpluses in the markets of foreign countries in which such sales can not be financed in the normal course of commerce; but no such sales shall be financed by the corporation if, in its judgment, such sales will affect adversely the world markets for such products.

(d) The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is further authorized to create in any of the 12 Federal land-bank districts where it may deem the same to be desirable a regional agricultural-credit corporation with a paid-up capital of not less than $3,000,000, to be subscribed for by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and paid for out of the unexpended balance of the amounts allocated and made available to the Secretary of Agriculture under section 2 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act. Such corporations shall be managed by officers and agents to be appointed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under such rules and regulations as its board of directors may prescribe. Such corporations are hereby authorized and empowered to make loans or advances to farmers and stockmen, the proceeds of which are to be used for an agricultural purpose (including crop production), or for the raising, breeding, fattening, or marketing of livestock, to charge such rates of interest or discount thereon as in their judgment are fair and equitable, subject to the approval of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to rediscount with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the various Federal reserve banks and Federal intermediate-credit banks any paper that they acquire which is eligible for such purpose. All expenses incurred in connection with the operation of such corporations shall be supervised and paid by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under such rules and regulations as its board of directors may prescribe.

(e) All loans made under this section, and all contracts of the character described in paragraph (1) of subsection (a), shall be fully and adequately secured. The corporation, under such conditions as it shall prescribe, may take over or provide for the administration and liquidation of any collateral accepted by it as security for such loans. Such loans shall be made on such terms and conditions, not inconsistent with this act, as the corporation may prescribe, and may be made directly upon promissory notes or by way of discount or rediscount of obligations tendered for the purpose, or otherwise in such form and in such amount and at such interest or discount rates as the corporation may approve: Provided, That no loans or advances (except loans under subsection (c)) shall be made upon foreign securities or foreign acceptances as collateral.

(f) Each such loan may be made for a period not exceeding three years, and the corporation may, from time to time, extend the time of payment of any such loan, through renewal, substitution of new obligations, or otherwise, but the time for such payment shall not be extended beyond five years from the date upon which such loan was made originally: Provided, That loans or contracts of the character described in subsection (a) may be made for a period not exceeding 10 years: Provided further, That loans or contracts of the character described in paragraph (1) or (5) of subsection (a) may be made for a period exceeding 10 years when it is the judgment of the board of directors of the corporation that it is necessary to purchase securities as provided in such paragraphs and that it is not practicable to require the reimbursement of the corporation, within 10 years, through the repurchase or payment of such securities, or in any other manner.

(g) The corporation may make loans under this section at any time prior to January 23, 1934.

(h) No fee or commission shall be paid by any applicant for a loan under the provisions of this section in connection with any such application or any loan made or to be made under this section, and the agreement to pay or payment of any such fee or commission shall be unlawful.

(i) No loan under this section shall be made to a railroad or to a receiver of a railroad except on the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Any railroad may obligate itself in such form as shall be prescribed and otherwise comply with requirements of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the corporation with respect to the deposit or assignment of security hereunder, without the authorization or approval of any authority, State or Federal, and without compliance with any requirement, State or Federal, as to notification, other than such as may be imposed by the Interstate Commerce Commission and the corporation under the provisions of this section.

SEC. 202. The last sentence of the second paragraph of section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act is amended by striking out "5" and inserting "2⅝" in lieu thereof.

SEC. 203. The second sentence of the third paragraph of section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act is hereby repealed.

SEC. 204. Section 8 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. In order to enable the corporation to carry out the provisions of this act and the emergency relief and construction act of 1932, the Treasury Department, the Federal Farm Loan Board, the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal reserve banks, and the Interstate Commerce Commission are hereby authorized, under such conditions as they may prescribe, to make available to the corporation, in confidence, such reports, records, or other information as they may have available relating to the condition of applicants with respect to whom the corporation has had or contemplates having transactions under either of such acts, or relating to individuals, associations, partnerships, corporations, or other obligors whose obligations are offered to or held by the corporation as security for loans under either of such acts, and to make, through their examiners or other employees for the confidential use of the corporation, examinations of applicants for loans. Every applicant for a loan under either of such acts shall, as a condition precedent thereto, consent to such examination as the corporation may require for the purposes of either of such acts and that reports of examinations by constituted authorities may be furnished by such authorities to the corporation upon request therefor."

SEC. 205. (a) The amount of notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered under section 9 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act to have outstanding at any one time is increased to an aggregate of six and three-fifths times its subscribed capital stock.

(b) The first proviso of section 2 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act is amended by inserting after "as set out in section 9" the following: "(as in force prior to the enactment of the emergency relief and construction act of 1932)," but the Secretary of Agriculture is directed to continue making loans to farmers under the provisions of such section 2.

SEC. 206. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act to financial institutions, corporations, railroads, and other classes of borrowers specified in section 5 of such act, organized under the laws of Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico. As used in this title and in section 15 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act the term "State" includes Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico.

SEC. 207. No loan or advance shall be approved under this section or under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, directly or indirectly, to any financial institution any officer or director of which is a member of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or has been such a member within the 12 months preceding the approval of the loan or advance.

SEC. 208. Section 9 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"The Secretary of the Treasury, at the request of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, is authorized to market for the corporation its notes, debentures, bonds, and other such obligations, using therefor all the facilities of the Treasury Department now authorized by law for the marketing of obligations of the United States. The proceeds of the obligations of the corporation so marketed shall be deposited in the same manner as proceeds derived from the sale of obligations of the United States, and the amount thereof shall be credited to the corporation on the books of the Treasury."

SEC. 209. Section 13 of the Federal reserve act, as amended, is further amended by adding after the second paragraph thereof the following new paragraph:

"In unusual and exigent circumstances, the Federal Reserve Board, by the affirmative vote of not less than five members, may authorize any Federal reserve bank, during such periods as the said board may determine, at rates established in accordance with the provisions of section 14, subdivision (d), of this act, to discount for any individual or corporation, notes drafts, and bills of exchange of the kinds and maturities made eligible for discount for member banks under other provisions of this act when such notes, drafts, and bills of exchange are indorsed and otherwise secured to the satisfaction of the Federal reserve bank: Provided, That before discounting any such note, draft, or bill of exchange for an individual or corporation the Federal reserve bank shall obtain evidence that such individual or corporation is unable to secure adequate credit accommodations from other banking institutions. All such discounts for individuals or corporations shall be subject to such limitations, restrictions, and regulations as the Federal Reserve Board may prescribe. No note, draft, or bill of exchange discounted under the provisions of this paragraph shall be eligible as collateral security for Federal reserve notes."

TITLE III—PUBLIC WORKS

SEC. 301. (a) For the purpose of providing for emergency construction of certain authorized public works with a view to increasing employment and carrying out the policy declared in the employment stabilization act of 1931, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $322,224,000, which shall be allocated as follows:

(1) For expenditure in emergency construction on the Federal-aid highway system, $120,000,000. Such sum shall be apportioned by the Secretary of Agriculture to the several States by the method provided in section 21 of the Federal highway act, as amended and supplemented (U. S. C., title 23, sec. 21). The amounts apportioned to the States shall be available as a temporary advance of funds to meet the provisions of such act as to State funds. The amount apportioned to any State under this paragraph may be used to match the regular annual Federal-aid apportionments made to such State (including the one for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933), and when so used such amount shall be available for expenditure in paying the share of such State in the cost of Federal-aid projects. No amounts apportioned under this paragraph shall be advanced except for work on the Federal-aid highway system performed before July 1, 1933: Provided, That the amounts so advanced shall be reimbursed to the Federal Government over a period of 10 years, commencing with the fiscal year 1938, by making annual deductions from regular apportionments made from future authorizations for carrying out the provisions of such act, as amended and supplemented: Provided further, That all contracts involving the expenditure of such amounts shall contain provisions establishing minimum rates of wages, to be predetermined by the State highway department, which contractors shall pay to skilled and unskilled labor, and such minimum rates shall be stated in the invitation for bids and shall be included in proposals or bids for the work: And provided further, That in the expenditure of such amounts, the limitations in the Federal highway act, as amended and supplemented, upon highway construction, reconstruction, and bridges within municipalities and upon payments per mile which may be made from Federal funds, shall not apply. As used in this paragraph, the term "State" includes the Territory of Hawaii. The term "highway," as defined in the Federal highway act, approved November 9, 1921, as amended and supplemented, for the purposes of this paragraph only, shall be deemed to include such main State parkways as may be designated by the State and approved by the Secretary of Agriculture as part of the Federal-aid highway system.

(2) For expenditure in emergency construction during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, $16,000,000, as follows: (A) For the construction and improvement of national-forest highways, $5,000,000; (B) for the construction and maintenance of roads, trails, bridges, fire lanes, etc., including the same objects specified in the paragraph commencing with the words "Improvement of the national forests" under the heading "National Forest Administration" in the agricultural appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, approved February 23, 1931 (46 Stat. 1242), $5,000,000; (C) for the construction, reconstruction, and improvement of roads and trails, inclusive of necessary bridges, in the national parks and national monuments under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior, including areas to be established as national parks authorized under the act of May 22, 1926 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 16, secs. 403 to 403c), and under the act of May 25, 1926 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 16, secs. 404 to 404c), and national park and monument approach roads authorized by the act of January 31, 1931 (46 Stat. 1053), as amended, or any one section of such roads of not less than 8 miles, which crosses lands wholly or to the extent of 90 per cent owned by the Government of the United States, $3,000,000; (D) for construction and improvement of Indian reservation roads under the provisions of the act approved May 26, 1928 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 25, sec. 318a), $1,000,000; and (E) for the survey, construction, reconstruction, and maintenance of main roads through unappropriated or unreserved public lands, nontaxable Indian lands, or other Federal reservations other than the forest reservations, under the provisions of section 3 of the Federal highway act, as amended and supplemented (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 23, secs. 3 and 3a), $2,000,000. The Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior, respectively, are authorized to make rules and regulations for carrying out the foregoing provisions of this section with a view to providing the maximum employment of local labor consistent with reasonable economy of construction.

(3) For the prosecution of river and harbor projects heretofore authorized, $30,000,000.

(4) For the prosecution of flood-control projects heretofore authorized, $15,500,000.

(5) For the continuation of construction of the Hoover Dam and incidental works, as authorized by the Boulder Canyon project act, approved December 21, 1928 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 43, ch. 12A), $10,000,000.

(6) For expenditure by the Department of Commerce for air-navigation facilities, including equipment, $500,000.

(7) For constructing or purchasing and equipping lighthouse tenders and light vessels for the Lighthouse Service as may be specifically approved by the Secretary of Commerce, $950,000, and for establishing and improving aids to navigation and other works as may be specifically approved by the Secretary of Commerce, $2,860,000.

(8) For the engineering work of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, Department of Commerce, heretofore authorized, $1,250,000.

(9) For the construction of projects included in the report of the Federal Employment Stabilization Board, laid before the Senate January 25, 1932, which have heretofore been authorized or which do not require specific authorization, under the Bureau of Yards and Docks, Navy Department, $10,000,000, of which not to exceed $300,000 shall be available for the employment of classified personal services in the Bureau of Yards and Docks and in the field service to be engaged upon such work and to be in addition to employees otherwise provided for.

(10) For emergency construction of public building projects outside the District of Columbia (including the acquisition, where necessary, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, of sites and additional land for such buildings, the demolition of old buildings where necessary, and the construction, remodeling, or extension of buildings), such projects to be selected by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General from the public building projects specified in House Document No. 788, Seventy-first Congress, third session, $100,000,000. Such projects shall be carried out within the limits of cost specified in such document (except as modified by law), and in selecting such projects preference shall be given to places where Government facilities are housed in rented buildings under leases which will expire on or before July 1, 1934, or which may be terminated on or prior to that date by the Government.

(11) For the construction and installation at military posts of such buildings and utilities and appurtenances thereto as may be necessary, $15,164,000, as follows:

Albrook Field, Canal Zone: Quartermaster maintenance building, $20,000; post exchange, theater, and gymnasium, completion of, $42,000.

Fort Francis E. Warren, Wyo.: Noncommissioned officers' quarters, $120,000.

West Point, N. Y.: For addition to hospital, $250,000; barracks for service detachment, $250,000.

Fort George Wright, Wash.: Noncommissioned officers' quarters, $60,000.

(b) No part of the sum appropriated by this section, except the amount for expenditure under paragraph (1) or (2) of subsection (a), shall be expended if the Secretary of the Treasury certifies to the President that the amount necessary for such expenditure is not available and can not be obtained upon reasonable terms.

SEC. 302. No money shall be available for expenditure under this title in connection with a project in the District of Columbia, except as provided in section 301 (a) (11).

SEC. 303. The last paragraph of section 6 of the Federal highway act, approved November 9, 1921, as amended and supplemented (U. S. C., title 23, sec. 6), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Whenever provision has been made by any State for the completion and maintenance of 90 per cent of its system of primary or interstate and secondary or intercounty highways equal to 7 per cent of the total mileage of such State, as required by this act, said State through its State highway department, by and with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, is hereby authorized to increase the mileage of the primary or interstate and secondary or intercounty systems by additional mileage equal to not more than 1 per cent of said total mileage of such State, and thereafter to make like increases in the mileage of said systems whenever provision has been made for the completion and maintenance of 90 per cent of the mileage of said systems previously authorized in accordance herewith."

SEC. 304. After the date of the enactment of this act, in the acquisition of any land or site for the purposes of section 301 (a) (10):

(1) The period of solicitation of proposals by public advertisement shall be 10 days in lieu of 20 days;

(2) In any case in which such site or land is to be acquired by condemnation, the provisions of section 355 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, shall not apply; and right to just compensation therefor shall vest in the parties entitled thereto. The Secretary of the Treasury shall cause notice to be personally served upon, or if with reasonable diligence such service can not be made, to be sent by registered mail to actual occupants of the premises, setting a time (not earlier than 20 days after the service or sending of such notice) at which such parties shall surrender possession, and at the end of such time the right to possession shall vest in the United States. The Secretary of the Treasury may designate any person to serve any notice under the preceding provisions of this subsection and such person shall have power to enter upon such land for the purpose of posting notice or to make personal service of notice. If any such party fails or refuses so to surrender possession, upon summary petition for an order to surrender possession filed in such district court by or on behalf of the Secretary of the Treasury, the court may, by writ of assistance or other process, order the surrender of possession. A petition in condemnation shall be filed in such district court as soon after the filing of the declaration of taking as practicable. In any such condemnation proceeding no further declaration of taking shall be required, and the provisions of section 1 of such act of February 26, 1931, authorizing the court to fix the time when parties in possession shall be required to surrender possession, shall not apply. If such petition for condemnation is not filed within a reasonable time after the filing of such declaration of taking, any person entitled to just compensation in respect of the property so taken shall be entitled to sue the United States in the court in which such declaration of taking was filed. The procedure in such suit shall be the same as in suits against the United States founded upon contract, except that such suit may be heard even if the amount of the claim is greater than $10,000 and except that the procedure for the ascertainment of the amount of just compensation shall be the same as such procedure in condemnation proceedings. If the petition for condemnation is filed prior to the time the commissioners in condemnation, jurors, or other persons charged with the duty of valuing the property are empaneled, such suit shall be dismissed, except that such suit and the condemnation proceedings may, in the discretion of the court, and under rules prescribed by it, be consolidated to such extent as the court may deem practicable. In any suit authorized to be brought under this subsection or in any condemnation proceeding involving land acquired in accordance with this subsection, the court shall enter judgment against the United States in favor of the parties entitled for the sum or sums awarded as just compensation, respectively, for the land or interest therein taken for the use of the United States, and such judgment shall be paid out of the sums deposited with the court, and such additional sums as may be awarded shall be paid in the same manner as sums awarded in judgments in cases in which the United States has consented to be sued. The provisions of such act of February 26, 1931, except as modified by this subsection, shall apply to all such suits or condemnation proceedings. The provisions of this subsection shall not be construed to be in substitution for, but shall be supplemental to, any method of acquiring land or interests therein provided in existing law.

SEC. 305. In the construction of post offices and of buildings for post offices and other offices provided for in section 301 (a) (10), the Secretary of the Treasury, with the cooperation of the Postmaster General, may use such standard plans (heretofore or hereafter prepared) as may be most adaptable to the particular building to be constructed.

SEC. 306. All contracts let for construction projects pursuant to this title shall be subject to the conditions that no convict labor shall be directly employed on any such project, and that (except in executive, administrative, and supervisory positions), so far as practicable, no individual directly employed on any such project shall be permitted to work more than 30 hours in any one week, and that in the employment of labor in connection with any such project, preference shall be given, where they are qualified, to ex-service men with dependents.

SEC. 307. For each fiscal year beginning with the fiscal year 1934 there is authorized to be appropriated, for the purposes of the sinking fund provided in section 6 of the Victory Liberty loan act, as amended, in addition to amount otherwise appropriated, an amount equal to 2½ per cent of the aggregate amount of the expenditures made, out of appropriations made or authorized in this title, on or after the date of the enactment of this act and on or before the last day of the fiscal year for which the appropriation is made.

During the reading,

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised that this amendment was read just the other day.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I suggest that the Senator from New York be permitted to make a statement about the amendment and that may obviate the necessity for a second reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, in order to save time in the consideration of this amendment, I may say to the Senate that this amendment which I offer in the nature of a substitute is, in all respects, except the matters to which I will refer in a minute, identical with the bill already passed by the Senate as a part of the conference report which was here on Saturday.

I will briefly point out the differences.

The bill eliminates the provision which was in the bill coming out of the conference providing for private loans to individuals, to which the President in his veto message to the House objected. That feature has been eliminated.

Title I of the bill remains as it was passed.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. COUZENS. I wish the Senator would state that at that time there seemed to be in the public mind two objections, not only to loaning to private individuals but to loaning to private corporations. May I ask if that provision authorizing loans to private corporations is out of the bill?

Mr. WAGNER. The word "persons," as defined in that bill, included private corporations and quasi-public corporations, so that that is all out. It is all eliminated. Loans to private corporations are out, except a provision which we had in the original bill which permitted loans to private corporations that were engaged in projects for the public use; and those projects were enumerated in the bill—viaducts, tunnels, docks, bridges, and waterworks.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WAGNER. I do.

Mr. DILL. We had some discussion and made some amendments in the Senate by which public utilities were not included.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes. That has been eliminated. That was eliminated at the time the bill which came out of conference was passed.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. How much money would be available under Title II for loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to these various States and subdivisions and self-liquidating corporations?

Mr. WAGNER. I might say that the authorization of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans has been increased from $2,000,000,000 to $3,300,000,000.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will all of that be available to make loans under Title II?

Mr. WAGNER. It is in one lump authorization, which includes all of the purposes for which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may make loans.

Mr. CONNALLY. In other words, there is no limit on how much the corporation may loan for projects of this character under Title II?

Mr. WAGNER. No.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WAGNER. There is a proposal by the committee of an amendment to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act which is as follows; this is new:

No loan or advance shall be approved under this section or under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, directly or indirectly, to any financial institution any officer or director of which is a member of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or has been such a member within the 12 months preceding the approval of the loan or advance.

That is to apply to all future loans. That was inserted by the Banking and Currency Committee this morning. I accepted the amendment, and it will go in on page 15, section 207.

Unless I have omitted something, I think those are all the changes that were made in the bill as originally passed.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. BINGHAM. In the bill as originally passed, section 302 authorized an appropriation, not exceeding $7,436,000, for the construction and installation at military posts and airports and landing fields of various technical buildings, and so forth. I do not find any of those items in this bill. Does the Senator object to the inclusion of them?

Mr. WAGNER. I may say to the Senator that those items were mere authorizations; and since this bill is to provide employment, we decided to eliminate any authorizations for appropriations, which, of course, would not provide any immediate employment.

Mr. BINGHAM. It was my understanding that originally a good many of these military-post construction items had come under the head merely of authorizations. I will ask the Senator from Pennsylvania whether I am correct in that.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield for that purpose?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. REED. Yes, Mr. President; but as agreed to by both Houses in the former bill they were authorizations for expenditures, and those have been included in the amendment of the Senator from New York. I neglected to change the second section, and it remained merely an authorization, which I understand is the reason why the Senator cut those items out of this bill. I am sorry. I should like to see them included.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator agrees that they can not provide any immediate employment, because there is no provision made for an appropriation.

Mr. REED. No.

Mr. WAGNER. It is merely an authorization.

Mr. REED. Quite so. If they remain an authorization, there is no sense in putting them in this bill; but I was wondering if the Senator would accept an amendment authorizing the addition of those items to the Army items already in this bill, although I must confess that it is done without previous authorization.

Mr. WAGNER. I would not care to accept an amendment of that kind at this late time.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield further to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Is it not true that many of the items that are included were in the original bill, before it was finally amended, merely in the form of authorizations? Was not that changed, at the suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, to make them direct appropriations for this construction?

Mr. REED. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. BINGHAM. In view of the fact that they were originally authorizations and were changed at the suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania to be appropriations and that they are now included again as appropriations, there would seem to be no technical objection to changing the other part, section 302, which the Senator from Pennsylvania says he neglected to notice was merely an authorization, or he would have asked that it be changed at that time.

Mr. WAGNER. Those in charge of this bill originally made no change of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania. We accepted it as he proposed it on the floor of the Senate; and there was a provision there for an appropriation for certain projects, and for authorizations for other projects. We accepted in this bill the appropriation, because that included projects in which the expenditures could be made at once and men could be employed; and this bill ought not to have included in it any authorization. It does not conform to the object of the bill; and I shall resist any efforts to put any proposed authorizations in this bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. I was not asking that the Senator put in any authorizations. I was asking if he could not include that $7,000,000 as an appropriation for the purpose of providing employment and at the same time continuing the military construction.

Mr. FESS and Mr. LEWIS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield first to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. On page 6, line 9, in which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered—

To make loans to or contracts with States, municipalities, and political subdivisions of States—

It is also authorized and empowered to make loans to—

Public agencies of States, of municipalities—

And so forth.

Mr. WAGNER. That is a public corporation, in effect. In some States, instead of calling it a public corporation, the statute itself calls it a public agency; and it was in order to cover that particular type of agencies that we used these words. It is an agency owned completely by either a State or a subdivision of a State.

Mr. FESS. I had an inquiry as to whether it would not be wise, where loans are made to a public agency either of a municipality or of a State, to have the guaranty of the State or the municipality, rather than leaving the security simply to the public agency.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not think that would be feasible. The agency being an agency created by the State, the credit of the State would be behind that particular agency.

Mr. FESS. That was the only point. There would be no difficulty in repayment where it was a municipality or a State, but when we say "public agency of a State" that might be temporary, and might raise the question of adequate security.

Mr. WAGNER. I really think this is sufficient.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. May I take the liberty of asking the able Senator from New York a question? In view of the fact that the provisions as to lending to States, cities, and municipalities have been brought to the attention of this body by myself from time to time in advocacy of a loan to Chicago and her school board for necessities, may I ask the Senator if he feels there has been any change in the provision just as the bill had it before, such as would prevent loans to municipalities if the self-liquidating security proffered were, in the opinion of the board, sufficient?

Mr. WAGNER. As to self-liquidating projects, of course, a municipality may borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. But, in addition, let me tell the Senator that his appeal did finally take effect, because under Title I the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may lend to municipalities moneys for the relief of the destitute and the needy in the municipality.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. When the municipality is designated by the governor to receive it.

Mr. WAGNER. Designated by the governor of the State, and the municipality gives its security.

Mr. LEWIS. There is a provision which allows loans to corporations such as our drainage board, as we call it, to illustrate what I mean, in the construction, replacement, or improvement of tunnels, docks, or viaducts. I conferred with the President, and it is with his consent I am permitted to relate the conversation, there being no particular privacy in it, that the construction ordered by the Supreme Court of the United States for the necessity of drainage, so that we may avoid excess uses of the lake at Chicago, should come under the definition of viaducts and waterworks. That would be, therefore, provided and a loan could be had under section 3, page 7. Am I right?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS. I appreciate the kindness of the Senator.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator interpret the bill to mean that loans might be made to municipalities to install or expand their electric-light plants?

Mr. WAGNER. If it is established that a plant is a self-liquidating project, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may lend to the municipality for the purpose of constructing such a project. The test is that the project itself must be self-liquidating, self-supporting.

Mr. KING. The presumption is that all of the activities of the municipalities of the character I have indicated, public utilities, would be self-liquidating. I was wondering whether under this bill cities could borrow large sums for the purpose of installing electric-light plants, gas works, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; they may make application; and if the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is satisfied that a plant is a self-liquidating project, they may advance money for its construction.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think the distinction possibly is this—and I will ask the Senator from New York if it is not true—that if the electric-light plant's new construction depended entirely on what we might call its assets or profits at the end of the year, or its power to sell bonds, or its credit, it would not come within this measure. If, however, they could so arrange their receipts from rates, their revenues coming in monthly, and put them in an amortization fund, that would be termed undoubtedly self-liquidating, not depending on credits or profits.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, it is the rates charged which would liquidate the debt.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator his construction of the meaning of section (d) on page 4, which provides:

(d) Nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize the corporation to deny an otherwise acceptable application under this section because of constitutional or other legal inhibitions or because the State or Territory has borrowed to the full extent authorized by law. Whenever an application under this section is approved by the corporation in whole or in part, the amount approved shall be immediately paid to the governor or the State or Territory upon delivery by him to the corporation of a receipt therefor stating that the payment is accepted subject to the terms of this section.

Mr. WAGNER. I suppose the purpose of that was to notify the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that a prohibition in a State constitution would not prevent it from making an advance to the State.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Subdivision (d) has relation only to the fund for the relief of destitution, and the object of it is to make certain that no State suffering from extreme necessity shall be denied the opportunity to obtain funds for the relief of its citizens because of any constitutional provisions or statutory limitations of the character described in the section, the idea being that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may make the advance with the understanding that it shall be deducted, as provided in another section of the bill, from future allotments for Federal aid, which, of course, will be within the control of the Congress.

Mr. BORAH. In other words, we waive the constitutional limitations under which the States may be laboring?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. Really in the act it is called a payment to the States. The States may transform that into a loan by agreement under another provision of Title I. If it is not transformed into a loan, then the Federal Government itself liquidates the payment by deducting it from future appropriations for Federal aid to State highways.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. If it is a fact, however, that the governor of a State has no authority to accept the money under those conditions, there would be no way of enforcing the agreement.

Mr. WAGNER. I think he has the authority to accept a payment advanced by the Federal Government for this purpose.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, certainly there will be a way of enforcing the agreement. All the Federal Government would be required to do would be to withhold allotments for future Federal aid to the amount so advanced.

Mr. WAGNER. I think the Senator misunderstood me. The agreement to which I had reference was the agreement the governor of a State might make under the laws of the State—that is, in a case where a State may borrow money. In those cases the State borrows the money as it does from any individual. In cases where there is a prohibition, then the State receives a payment from the Federal Government to feed the needy and the destitute; and if there is no provision made subsequently, within the following two years, for repayment by the changing of the laws of the State, then the Federal Government liquidates the payment by reducing by one-fifth the appropriation each year of Federal aid to State highways until the entire advance is paid.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I think I fully understand the Senator.

Mr. WAGNER. I know the Senator does.

Mr. COUZENS. But I still insist that if anybody contests the legality of the governor's having accepted the advances, then there is no way to prove that he had a legal right to borrow the money or accept the advance.

Mr. WAGNER. I think this provision is perfectly valid, and if it were tested in a court, would be upheld. But I believe it is unthinkable that anybody would test a provision where money is paid to feed the hungry or advance money to the needy or unsheltered.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the only test that could be made of a practical character would be the power and right of the Federal Government to deduct Federal-aid sums, as provided in the bill; and that being within the control of the Government, that being a Federal measure, it could be very easily enforced. The test to which the Senator refers might result in a holding that the governor had no power to borrow. Assuming that such a decision might be reached, that would not estop the Federal Government from making the deductions provided for in the bill, and thus reimbursing itself on account of such deductions.

Mr. WAGNER. I think we are talking about an academic question, anyway. I do not think it will ever arise in the case of money distributed for the purpose of feeding people.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it is my understanding that this section was incorporated for the purpose of estopping the directors of the corporation from setting up any constitutional provisions which might prevail in a particular State as a valid reason for denying a payment or advance.

Mr. WAGNER. That is exactly what the measure says.

Mr. BORAH. But, Mr. President, I was misled by the word "authorized." It provides, "Nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize the corporation to deny," and so forth. I should think the language should be, "Nothing shall be construed to permit the corporation," and so forth.

Mr. WAGNER. If "permit" is a better word, it might be changed.

Mr. BORAH. That is what misled me. Whatever the Senator thinks best is all right with me.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, this being a substitute, if any amendment is to be made to it, it would have to be offered before the substitute is adopted.

I want to call attention to this fact: That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act provides for loans to banks, savings banks, trust companies, and a series of other organizations, and then it provides that loans may be made on the assets of a bank that is closed. I think it was the thought of most of us when the bill was passed that that would include a savings bank; but the officials of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation have ruled that since it does not use the words "savings bank," it applies only to the assets of a regular bank that is closed.

There are some savings banks which have been closed which have very large assets, and they have appealed to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for assistance. While the officials have found the assets entirely sufficient to justify the loans asked for, under the ruling of which I have spoken they have refused to make the loans.

I wanted to ask the Senator whether he thought it would be seriously objectionable to insert an amendment changing section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act by inserting the words "savings bank" along with the word "bank," so that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation could lend on the assets of a savings bank that is closed as well as on the assets of a regular bank.

Mr. WAGNER. It is not really within the province of this legislation. Is the Senator sure it would not cause a veto?

Mr. DILL. I can not see how it would, for the reason that we are increasing the amount of money available to enable the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans, and I can not see why it would be objectionable to allow them to lend on the assets of a closed savings bank any more than they now have the right to lend on the assets of a closed bank.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not, either. I quite agree with the Senator that the construction of the officials is quite a strict construction of the act.

Mr. DILL. It is unnecessarily strict.

Mr. President, I should like to offer the amendment. At the end of page 16, or at the proper place in the bill, if that be not the proper place, I propose to amend the first paragraph of section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act by inserting, after the word "bank," the words "savings bank." We shall have to reprint the entire paragraph in order to do that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to, as follows:

On page 16, after line 24, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 211. The first paragraph of section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 5. To aid in financing agriculture, commerce, and industry, including facilitating the exportation of agricultural and other products the corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans, upon such terms and conditions not inconsistent with this act as it may determine, to any bank, savings bank, trust company, building and loan association, insurance company, mortgage loan company, credit union, Federal land bank, joint-stock land bank, Federal intermediate credit bank, agricultural credit corporation, livestock credit corporation, organized under the laws of any State or of the United States, including loans secured by the assets of any bank or savings bank that is closed or in process of liquidation, to aid in the reorganization or liquidation of such banks, upon application of the receiver or liquidating agent of such bank, and any receiver of any national bank is hereby authorized to contract for such loans and to pledge any assets of the bank for securing the same: Provided, That not more than $200,000,000 shall be used for the relief of banks that are closed or in the process of liquidation.'"

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I think I have pointed out the differences between the bill as passed and the proposed measure, and I have nothing further to say at this time.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the amendment be read for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from South Carolina offers the following amendment:

On page 9, line 21, insert the following at the end of the paragraph: "Provided, however, That no such loan shall be made to finance the sale in the markets of foreign countries of cotton owned by the Federal Farm Board or the Cotton Stabilization Corporation."

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, in explanation let me say that the language of the amendment was contained in the House bill as it was originally passed by the House. In conference the language was eliminated from the bill. I am satisfied that so far as the cotton States are concerned the Representatives upon this floor would agree to the adoption of the amendment. The language of the House bill in addition to cotton provided for wheat. I have eliminated wheat because I do not profess to know the situation as to wheat and have no desire to interfere with that subject.

As to cotton, as a result of the passage by Congress of the joint resolution giving to the Red Cross 500,000 bales of cotton, the cotton industry will be confronted within the next two or three months with this situation: In addition to the crop of this year as it comes upon the market, there will be marketed in this country 500,000 bales of the cotton held by the Cotton Stabilization Corporation. If, in addition to that, loans should be made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to foreign manufacturers to purchase cotton, one can readily see that the effect of the dumping on the market of so large a portion of the cotton now held by the Cotton Stabilization Corporation would further depress the price of cotton.

Mr. DILL. Why does not the Senator move to strike out the entire paragraph?

Mr. BYRNES. I will say frankly to the Senator that I do not profess to know the situation so far as wheat is concerned. I ask to have the amendment adopted. Then if the Senator wants to move to strike out the entire paragraph his amendment would be in order and the Senate could vote upon it.

Mr. DILL. It seems to me we could accomplish the Senator's purpose by making the motion first.

Mr. BYRNES. That might not be agreed to; and if it was not agreed to, I would want to have the provision as to cotton in the bill.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I am not sure, if the Senator's amendment should be adopted, that the other amendment would be in order.

Mr. BYRNES. I will say that the parliamentarian advised me that it would be in order.

Mr. BLACK. It is my intention to move to strike out section 3 entirely.

Mr. BYRNES. I have no objection to that motion being made at the proper time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. NORBECK. At what time will it be proper for me to offer the farm relief bill as an amendment in the form of Title II to the pending measure?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It should be offered before the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is acted upon.

Mr. NORBECK. Is it proper for me to offer it at this time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. NORBECK. I offer it now as an amendment to the pending amendment to be known as Title II.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let it be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TITLE II—EXISTENCE OF EMERGENCY

SEC. 2. It is hereby declared—

(a) That this title is an emergency relief measure pending such period as there can be placed in full beneficial operation permanent agricultural relief legislation heretofore or hereafter enacted, and to that end this title shall cease to be in effect one year from the date of its approval.

(b) That the depression in prices for that portion of our agricultural commodities produced for domestic consumption and the effect of unsettled world conditions upon foreign markets for that portion of our agricultural commodities produced for consumption abroad and the inequalities between the prices for agricultural and other commodities have given rise in the basic industry of agriculture to conditions that have affected transactions in agricultural commodities with a national public interest, that have burdened and obstructed the normal currents of commerce in such commodities, and that render imperative the enactment of this title for the relief of the present national economic emergency in agriculture, industry, transportation, employment, and finance.

(c) That the provisions of this title are made applicable solely with respect to cotton, wheat, and hogs by reason of the controlling effect of those commodities upon prices for all agricultural commodities.

DISTRIBUTION OF COMMODITY BENEFITS

SEC. 3. (a) The Secretary of Agriculture shall within 15 days after the approval of this act estimate as nearly as practicable and proclaim the percentage of the domestic production of wheat and cotton for the year 1932 and of the domestic production of hogs sold or to be sold during such year that in the judgment of the Secretary will be needed for domestic consumption. Such percentage is hereinafter referred to as the domestic consumption percentage for the commodity and shall be based on statistics of the Department of Agriculture as to the average domestic consumption for the commodity for the five preceding years.

(b) Each producer of cotton, wheat, or hogs shall be entitled, subject to the conditions of this title, to have issued to him promptly an adjustment certificate covering the domestic consumption percentage of each lot of the commodity of his own production which, after the fifteenth day following the date of approval of this title, is marketed by him. For the purposes of this act, cotton, wheat, and hogs shall be deemed to be marketed when sold or otherwise disposed of by the producer for processing or resale.

(c) The face amount of any adjustment certificate, per unit of the commodity covered thereby, shall be an amount equal to the adjustment charge (specified in sec. 4) upon a like unit of the commodity, less a pro rata share of administrative expenses as estimated by the Secretary of Agriculture.

(d) The Secretary of Agriculture shall designate officers, employees, or agents of the Department of Agriculture (or with the approval of the President, of any other department or independent establishment) for the issuance of adjustment certificates. Such certificates shall be issued upon application by the producer and proof satisfactory to the Secretary that the producer is entitled thereto. The action of the Secretary or any designated officer, employee, or agent in issuing and fixing the amount of any adjustment certificate shall not be subject to review by any other officer of the Government.

(e) Title to any adjustment certificate shall be transferable by delivery. Any adjustment certificate when presented by the bearer at any time after 30 days and not more than 1 year from the date of issuance shall be redeemable at its face value, in legal tender, from moneys in the domestic adjustment fund hereinafter established for the commodity covered by the certificate. Adjustment certificates shall be accepted for redemption at the United States Treasury and at such fiscal agencies of the United States as the Secretary of the Treasury shall designate.

(f) Nothing in this act shall be construed as affecting or controlling in any way the freedom of any producer to produce and sell as much as he wishes of any commodity.

ADJUSTMENT CHARGES

SEC. 4. (a) On and after the day following the date of the approval of this act there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid upon the first domestic processing of any cotton, wheat, or hogs (whether imported or of domestic production), a charge to be paid by the processor and to be known as an adjustment charge. Such adjustment charges shall be as follows: 43 cents a bushel for wheat, 5 cents a pound for cotton, and 2 cents a pound for hogs.

(b) In order to protect processors of cotton against disadvantages in competition, on and after the day following the approval of this act there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid upon the first domestic processing of silk or rayon an adjustment charge of 5 cents a pound, to be paid by the processor.

(c) No such charge shall be paid on any quantity of the commodity processed by the producer thereof for consumption by his own family, employees, or household.

(d) Upon the exportation of any product with respect to the processing of which an adjustment charge has been paid, the exporter thereof shall be entitled, at the time of exportation, to a refund of the amount of such charge. The Secretary of the Treasury shall establish conversion factors for use in determining the amount of refund, shall prepare forms for filing claims for such refunds, and shall certify to the Treasurer of the United States claims for refund which have been approved for payment out of the appropriate domestic adjustment fund.

(e) Upon the giving of satisfactory bond for the faithful observance of the provisions of this section and of such regulations as may be prescribed hereunder, any person shall be entitled to process any agricultural commodity for export without the payment of the adjustment charge. The Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe the necessary regulations for such processing in bond or in such other manner as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

(f) The adjustment charges on each commodity shall be collected by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. Such charges shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and placed to the credit of a special revolving fund for the commodity which is hereby established, to be known as the domestic adjustment fund for the commodity; except that the adjustment charge on silk or rayon shall be placed to the credit of the adjustment fund for cotton. The moneys in each such fund are hereby appropriated for the purposes of this act.

(g) All provisions of law (including penalties) applicable in respect of the taxes imposed by section 600 of the revenue act of 1926 shall, in so far as applicable and not inconsistent with this act, be applicable in respect of the charges imposed by this section.

ADMINISTRATION OF DOMESTIC ADJUSTMENT FUNDS

SEC. 5. (a) The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to expend from each commodity domestic adjustment fund, for the payment of administrative expenses under this act with respect to the commodity, not to exceed 2½ per cent of the receipts from the adjustment charges on the commodity.

(b) The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to transfer to other agencies of the Federal Government, subject to the limitation provided in subsection (a) with respect to the amounts available for the payment of administrative expenses, such sums from the domestic adjustment fund for any commodity as are required to pay the additional expenses incurred by such agencies in the administration of this act with respect to such commodity.

(c) Notwithstanding the limitation of section 2 (a) on the period of duration of this act, section 4 of this act (relating to adjustment charges) shall continue in effect with respect to any commodity for such additional period as the Secretary of the Treasury may by proclamation fix in order to make available receipts from adjustment charges with respect to the commodity sufficient to redeem all adjustment certificates issued with respect to the commodity.

(d) Notwithstanding the limitations of section 2 (a) on the period of duration of this act, this act shall be held to be in effect thereafter for the collection of adjustment payments on any lot of the commodity sold or otherwise disposed of by the producer during such period, for the collection of duties incurred prior to the expiration of section 4, for the payment of expenses incurred in the administration of this act, and for winding up in any other respect the operations under this act.

(e) The Secretary of the Treasury shall make advances to any domestic adjustment fund of such moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated as may be necessary to redeem adjustment certificates and pay administrative expenses pending receipt of sufficient adjustment charges therefor, and shall repay such advances from the fund to the Treasury from time to time.

(f) Adjustment certificates issued under authority of this act shall be obligations of the United States within the definition in section 147 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909, as amended.

(g) Any person who shall make any false statement for the purpose of fraudulently procuring, or shall attempt in any manner fraudulently to procure, the issuance or redemption of any adjustment certificate, whether for the benefit of such person or any other person, shall be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

MISCELLANEOUS

SEC. 6. (a) As used in this title—

(1) In the case of wheat, the term "processing" means the milling or other processing (except cleaning and drying) of wheat for market.

(2) In the case of cotton, silk, and rayon, the term "processing" means the spinning, milling, or manufacturing (other than ginning) of cotton, silk, or rayon.

(3) In the case of hogs, the term "processing" means the slaughter of hogs for market.

(4) The term "cotton" means cotton of any tenderable grade under the United States cotton futures act.

(5) The term "wheat" means wheat not below United States grade No. 3 as prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture under the United States grain standards act.

(b) The Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Agriculture are directed to make, publish, and distribute without cost, such regulations as may be necessary to the efficient administration of the functions vested in them, respectively, by this act including regulations by the Secretary of Agriculture as to the proof which the secretary will deem satisfactory as a basis for issuing adjustment certificates.

(c) If any provision of section 4 is held invalid and any producers are thereby prevented from redeeming in whole or in part the adjustment certificates provided by this act, the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to pay into the domestic adjustment funds, from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, sums sufficient to provide for the redemption of adjustment certificates and for administrative expenses, as estimated by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I wonder if it is not possible to reach an agreement by which we can take up the bill now offered as an amendment by the Senator from South Dakota and dispose of it in some way before we adjourn? It is very hazardous to attempt to attach it to the pending bill as an amendment. I say that as a friend of the Senator's bill. I have voted in favor of taking it up and I would so vote now, no matter what it might displace, because it seems to me perfectly apparent that the Congress before it adjourns ought to give to the Senator from South Dakota an opportunity to have the bill acted upon by the Senate. I realize very fully, however, the objections that can be made to it as an amendment to the pending bill.

I want to submit a unanimous-consent request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state the unanimous consent request.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent that immediately upon the disposition of the pending unfinished business the Senate proceed to consider the bill (S. 4940) to provide temporary aid to agriculture for the relief of the existing national economic emergency. If agreed to, that would have the effect of getting the bill before the Senate in the same position exactly as though it were taken up on motion. It would give it no superior rights, but it would give it the right that the bill would possess if it were taken up on motion, and it would mean that it could be withdrawn as an amendment to the pending bill and that the discussion which would take place on it will be avoided.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I hope the request of the Senator from Nebraska will be agreed to. I am sure it would be a mistake to incorporate this farm bill in the unemployment relief bill. I am sure that it is a fair suggestion that the Senator from South Dakota be given an opportunity to have his bill considered, and I hope there will be no objection to the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, just briefly I wish to say that the whole difficulty is that a prolonged debate will put the bill in the last hours of the session, and, the House being anxious to get away, if agreed to, the request might result in getting some action in the Senate and no action in the House.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, let me say to my friend from South Dakota that the House, I think, will be able to act under a suspension of its rules, so that expeditious action could be had on the bill if it should go to the other House, even though it might be late in the session.

I should like to say further that, to my mind, the Senator from South Dakota will gain if the request be agreed to because extended debate would take place if the bill were considered as an amendment to the pending bill for reasons which would not exist if the bill stood upon its own merits.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, in our anxiety to push the relief bill along we have attached it as a rider to a House bill, so that it does not have to go to a committee there or here. It will have the right of way. I would have no objection to the proposal if we could also secure an agreement to limit debate so that the House might be assured when we would take a vote on the bill. Would the Senator from Nebraska be willing to include such a proposal in his request for unanimous consent?

Mr. NORRIS. I would be very glad to do so, but I am satisfied that would bring an objection at this time. I can see how Senators who are not familiar with the bill would refuse to enter into an agreement to limit debate until there had been some discussion and they had had an opportunity to make further investigation.

The Senator, however, can make a request of that kind just as soon as the bill shall be taken up, or, more properly, after the bill has been debated for a little while and it is better understood.

Mr. NORBECK. I yield to the request of the Senator from Nebraska. It seems to be the opinion and the feeling of Senators that that would be a better procedure, and I do not want to be arbitrary in this matter. I have simply been seeking to get a vote on the question, to get an expression of opinion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question. Does the Senator think that the bill will lead to considerable debate when it shall be taken up?

Mr. NORRIS. I can not tell, though I should rather think not. The bill will have to be explained, of course; and Senators will have to understand its nature. The measure, however, is not so complicated as, for instance, was the McNary-Haugen bill or other similar bills. I do not think the bill will lead to any long debate.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator knows that I am extremely anxious to get action on the Senate Joint Resolution 164, which is on the table; and that I have tried to secure action on a motion to take it from the table and to have it considered. It was my intention to make that motion as soon as we got through with the discussion of the relief bill, which I did not desire to interfere with in any way. Now the Senator from Nebraska is asking unanimous consent that we may take up something else, which would make it impossible to get up Senate Joint Resolution 164. I was about to ask the Senator the same question that the Senator from South Dakota asked him, if he would not couple with his request some request for a limitation of debate after a reasonable time?

Mr. NORRIS. I would be very glad to do so; so far as I am personally concerned, I have no objection to a reasonable limitation upon debate. However, I am informed that such a request would meet with objection at this time, though it might not do so later. I can see the point in the suggestion, I will say to the Senator. There are many Senators here who have not read the bill, who are not familiar with it, and we ought to debate it for a little while, as we usually do, until Senators shall understand it. Then I should not think there will be any objection to a limitation of debate.

Mr. BINGHAM. I suppose if, after we debated the bill for a while, it appeared the debate was going to last for some time, the Senator would not object to my making a motion to take up some other measure?

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Connecticut would have that right. I do not know whether or not I should object, but it would depend upon what I thought the conditions were at the time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to. The Senator from South Dakota withdraws his amendment.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the bill to strike out paragraph (c) found on page 9.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the amendment be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 9, it is proposed to strike out from line 12 to line 21, both inclusive, as follows:

(c) In order that the surpluses of agricultural products may not have a depressing effect upon current prices of such products, the corporation is authorized and directed to make loans, in such amounts as may in its judgment be necessary, for the purpose of financing sales of such surpluses in the markets of foreign countries in which such sales can not be financed in the normal course of commerce; but no such sales shall be financed by the corporation if, in its judgment, such sales will affect adversely the world markets for such products.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, it will be necessary, I assume, to move to strike out the paragraph as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If it was amended; yes.

Mr. BLACK. I can explain in one or two moments the purpose of the amendment.

This paragraph provides an unlimited appropriation, except as the amount is limited by the assets of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, for the purpose of selling agricultural products abroad on credit. In other words, it provides for the sale of agricultural products abroad, the money to be supplied by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to pay for those products. It would, in my judgment, make impossible the sale of agricultural products for cash. As a matter of fact, I was told by a man to-day that he had a telegram from abroad canceling his contract which had been made unless he agreed to extend the same kind of credit that would be extended by the Government in the sale of its cotton. I do not see any reason why if we are going to sell agricultural products abroad on credit they should not be sold to our own people on credit. Why should we sell them to China with the very faint hope that we have of ever securing payment? Why should we sell them on credit to other countries and disturb our cash purchasers? We are depending largely in the agricultural sections on our customers abroad. If we begin to sell to some on credit, I assume we would have to sell to all on credit.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I assume the Senator is seeking to do for all other farm products—wheat, corn, and hogs—what the Senator from South Carolina has proposed in regard to cotton and to omit all of them from this provision that is included in the bill. That is the purpose of the amendment, is it?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. COPELAND. I think the Senator is entirely right, and I am glad he has offered the amendment.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, it is not my intention to discuss this question further. The provision gives vast power at a very critical time to the Reconstruction Corporation. It is a power which could be utilized for the advantage of one party and for the disadvantage of another.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it ought to be recognized that it is important to the agricultural interests where we have a surplus to export to provide markets for the disposition of that surplus. We can not sell for cash in foreign countries, but very likely we can sell on time, on terms, and the longer the time the better. Banks can not handle such papers because they want 30, 60, and 90 days; that is one of their requirements; but we can authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to handle such paper based upon six months' credit. The purchaser, the mill owner, over yonder, for instance, in Europe wants time enough to get the raw material converted into cloth and to dispose of the cloth. Then he is ready to pay his bill. It is the same way with the spinner and the miller in foreign countries. We had better give them time enough so that they may convert their raw materials into finished products and put them on the market; then they can pay for the raw material.

It seems to me, from the standpoint of agriculture, that we should open up these markets and make them available by extending credit. That paper is perfectly good; it could be marketed in such form as to make it perfectly good. I think it is a mistake to add anything that would really restrict our export trade. We want to dispose of the surplus in foreign countries, and to do that we must be able to finance on comparatively long time, say, four or five or six months. This will enable us to handle that situation; otherwise we can not dispose of the surplus, because the foreign purchasers have not the cash to pay for it and we will be unable to handle it. The markets of all the world can be opened up if sufficient time is given, and the paper can be secured in a satisfactory way to enable a safe business to be done and to give ample time. I think this is one of the most important provisions of the bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I merely wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we are very anxious that the House of Representatives concur in the amendment of the Senate, because if they do not concur and the bill goes to conference there will probably be quite a long delay in connection with this measure. For that reason I should think, as this provision was in the conference report, that we voted for it in the original bill, and was substantially in the House bill and was left in the conference report, that unless it is a matter of extreme importance we should not debate it and strike it out or make any other amendments to this bill.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I do not know how important it is, but I want to say that this is the only provision in this bill that even aims to be very helpful to agriculture. In its original form it included cotton, but the Senators from cotton States got together and agreed to have cotton eliminated. We agreed to it. Now I wish they would leave the northern products alone.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORBECK. Yes.

Mr. DILL. This provision may very easily become destructive of the market for wheat as well as to make a market for wheat. At the present time, if the Farm Board had the credit and the authority to sell the wheat which they have to China, they would absolutely destroy our market for western wheat this year on the Pacific Coast. I think myself that if the Farm Board are to have this power we ought to give it to them specifically, and not through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. NORBECK. There is an extra check on it here. I do not know that they will get any money under this bill. That is what is worrying me, but I am sure it is the only thing in the bill that gives any hope to agriculture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama to strike out subsection (c). [Putting the question.] The Chair is unable to decide.

Mr. BLACK. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. DICKINSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair and its transfer as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. METCALF (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SCHALL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SHORTRIDGE (when his name was called). Again announcing my general pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], and not knowing his views, I, of course, may not vote. If at liberty to do so, I should vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE], and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McNARY. I find that I can transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN]. I do so, and vote "nay."

Mr. HATFIELD. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MORRISON]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. DALE. Respecting my pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], I have to withhold my vote.

Mr. BULKLEY. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GLENN. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], and refrain from voting.

Mr. DAVIS. I am informed that my pair would vote in the same way that I desire to vote. Therefore I am at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. KING (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW], and will permit my vote to stand.

Mr. HOWELL. I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HULL], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] are detained on official business. I desire to further announce a general pair between the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HULL].

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 44, as follows:

YEAS—17

So Mr. BLACK'S amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, by direction of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 15, after line 10, it is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 208. (a) The first sentence of section 3 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act is amended effective at the expiration of 10 days after the date of enactment of this act to read as follows: "The management of the corporation shall be vested in a board of directors consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury (or in his absence, the Under Secretary of the Treasury), who shall be a member ex officio, and six other persons appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

(b) Nothing in this section shall be construed to affect in any manner the terms of office of the appointed members of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, nor to require their reappointment.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, briefly the explanation of this amendment is that it develops that two members of this board—to wit, the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board and the Farm Loan Commissioner, Mr. Bestor—are unable to give their time and attention to the business of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. One of these gentlemen was admonished by his friends at the very beginning that if he should successfully discharge the duties already devolved upon him in the position which he then held he would have all that any man, even of his superior capacity, could attend to. The other ex officio member, while not occupying such an important position or one that requires such constant thought and consideration, is pretty much in the same position. In short, one of these gentlemen has been worked so constantly, night and day, that his health has become jeopardized; and this draft of an amendment to the bill which I have presented by direction of the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate was sent up by the President of the United States, and has his full approval.

While I consented to offer the amendment by direction of the committee, I reserved the right to say that it is my own judgment that the numerical membership of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation board should not be increased. In my view, it is just another job for another man with another salary for the taxpayers to pay, together with the necessarily increased expense of the position itself in the employment of further clerical force of various sorts. Nevertheless, I present the amendment, as directed by the Banking and Currency Committee, for the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I may say that the amendment is perfectly acceptable to me, and I think to the other members of the committee.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Virginia a question?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I find nothing in the text of the amendment referring, for example, to the partisan division in the membership. Is that covered elsewhere in the act?

Mr. GLASS. That remains in the act as it is now, and I understand that the President has given assurance that the additional member will be a Democrat.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, as I recall the provision in the law, it is that not more than four members of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation board of directors shall belong to any one political party.

I must supplement the statement made by the Senator from Virginia. No information has come to me disclosing the necessity for an increase in the membership of this board of directors, and I wish it distinctly understood that, so far as I am concerned, I am not prompted to accept this amendment on the theory that there will be another Democrat added to the board.

Mr. GLASS. That does not interest me at all.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move to modify the amendment so as to limit the number of members of the board to 6; to strike out "7" and insert in lieu thereof "6."

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Mr. President, would that in any way affect the provision that no more than one member shall be appointed from any one Federal-reserve district?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; it would not. The only effect would be to eliminate two ex officio members who say they are overworked.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Virginia whether there was any discussion regarding the advisability of changing the requirement that not more than one member should come from any one Federal-reserve district?

Mr. GLASS. There was no discussion of that matter at all in the committee, and I assume that the law remains as it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment, to strike out "seven" and to insert "six."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I now desire to offer the amendment regarding the matter about which I previously spoke to the Senator from New York, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Connecticut offers the following amendment, on page 29, after line 8, to insert the following:

Albrook Field, Canal Zone: Technical buildings and installations, completion of, $293,000; gasoline-storage system, completion of, $25,000.

Barksdale Field, La.: Hangars, $350,000; headquarters and operations buildings, completion of, $89,200; gasoline-storage system, completion of, $20,000; paved aprons, $100,000.

Fort Benning, Ga.: Hangar, combination, $88,000; gasoline-storage system, $10,000; improvement of landing field and building area, $25,000; heating plant, $20,000; paved aprons, $20,000.

Benton Field, Alameda, Calif.: Completion of shops, including assembly and test hangars, dope storage, heating and engine test block, $605,500; depot warehouse, $500,000; administration building, $80,000; railroad spur, $8,000; quartermaster warehouse, maintenance and salvage building, $35,000; garage, $48,000; fire and guard house, $30,000; pier, $125,000; paint, oil, and dope storage and oil reclamation, $35,000; gasoline-storage system, $20,000; paved aprons, $80,000.

Fort Bliss, Tex.: Operations building, $10,000.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, these are the items which were in the bill when it passed the Senate as authorizations?

Mr. BINGHAM. I have made no change.

Mr. WAGNER. I am informed that the President of the United States approves the amendment which has been offerred, and under those circumstances I make no objection to it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, does not the Senator understand that this is in part at least a "pork-barrel" amendment? It sounds to me like an immense "pork-barrel" amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the Senator voted for it before, I believe, although I did not.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator did what?

Mr. BINGHAM. It was in the bill as it passed the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I voted against the bill as it passed.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then the Senator and I voted the same way; but it was in the bill as it passed the Senate before as an authorization, and since there was an omission due to the fact that it was overlooked, section 302 being merely an authorization, and the other items which are in the bill for military posts having been appropriated for in the bill, and since the Senate passed the authorizations, it seems to me that it would be well at this time to increase the amount for useful purpose, and increase the amount which could be used for unemployment, by these various items which have been approved by the committee and by the Senate.

Do I understand from the Senator from New York, if I may have his attention, that he has no objection to the amendment?

Mr. WAGNER. Under the circumstances mentioned, I have no objection.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I propose to offer an amendment to the amendment. I desire to add an item for hangars and housing for planes at the landing field at the Pensacola, Fla., air station, $500,000.

Mr. President, if we are to make this a regular "pork-barrel" proposition for Army posts and for naval air stations scattered throughout the country, then I think all stations should be dealt with justly and fairly. At Pensacola we have one of the major air stations of the country, and the improvements which are proposed are very badly needed there. I have not checked up on the various items for Army posts and for various naval activities in different sections, but I am confident that a close scrutiny of those various items would show that many of them are the height of extravagance and a waste of public funds.

We have throughout this session been talking about economy, trying to trim off here and there, a little everywhere, and the people of the country are getting tired of the excessive taxation. Yet in this bill the Senator from Connecticut proposes to extend the policy inaugurated as to Army posts, to naval stations, and air stations, dealing with the most lavish hand of extravagance, and the public is going to have the freight to pay.

I am familiar with this project at Pensacola, Fla., and I am sure that it is as worthy an enterprise as the Government can contribute to. It is for that reason that I offer this amendment, proposing that $500,000 be appropriated for hangars and housing for planes at the landing field at the naval air station at Pensacola, Fla. That is the substance of the amendment.

Of course, if we are not going to treat the entire situation fairly, then I am going to make a motion to strike out all of the items for Army posts and for naval air stations and for navy yards that are written into this bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I desire to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Would the Chair hold that this bill is in the nature of an appropriation bill, and, therefore, that an item might not be added to it that had not been reported from a committee, or authorized by the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has not made any ruling of any kind. The question has never been asked. This is not an appropriation bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the items which I have offered, and which the Senator from Florida has denominated as "pork-barrel" items, I do not think can fairly be so considered. Certainly my object in offering them was not to benefit my own State in any degree, which is generally considered to be the brand of something that might be labeled "pork." There does not happen to be a single item among the Army posts or the aviation stations which I have just offered as an amendment which concerns the State of Connecticut.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, what is to hinder anybody from offering a "pork-barrel" amendment to this?

Mr. BINGHAM. I was about to make a point of order against the amendment of the Senator from Florida because the item which he has offered has not been considered by a committee or authorized by the Senate. The items which I have offered have all passed the Senate in the form of an authorization.

I make a point of order against the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order would not lie against the amendment on a bill of this kind. The point of order applies only to a general appropriation bill.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Connecticut the total amount involved in the amendment?

Mr. BINGHAM. A little over $7,000,000. The total amount allotted for public works is $322,000,000 of which in the bill something over $15,000,000 has been allotted for the construction and installation at military posts of buildings and utilities. This would add to that sum $7,456,000, making it necessary to change the total in the bill on page 22, if this amendment is agreed to, so that the total of $15,000,000 would be increased to something over $22,000,000.

Mr. BLAINE. May I inquire of the Senator whether or not an appropriation would not have to be made for this purpose?

Mr. BINGHAM. Title III is actually an appropriation bill. The only reason why I made the point of order in relation to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida was the fact that Title III is virtually an appropriation bill, and if we started offering amendments to it to cover everything in which we were interested in our own particular States, it is quite obvious there would never be an end to it. However, the point of order has been overruled, and therefore the amendment of the Senator from Florida is in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I was very sorry indeed that we could not make a point of order against the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut. I do not think that is the proper way to consider legislation, within a few moments of adjournment, without any discussion at all, particularly when it proposes to carry $7,000,000. The appropriation bills have all been passed. Some of the items proposed have been rejected by the Appropriations Committee and also by the Senate itself. I can only express the hope that it will not be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I have the attention of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]? I want to ask for an interpretation. I am asking about the language on page 5, line 12, describing certificates which must be made before a municipality qualifies for a loan. The language is that the certificates must be like unto the certificate provided in subsection (c). I am inquiring of the Senator whether that means that the certificate must indicate that the municipality has exhausted its resources or that the State has exhausted the State resources eligible for aid to the municipality.

Mr. WAGNER. It means that the municipality has exhausted its resources and has no available method of securing any further resources.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That was my understanding of the language. If the language stands then as indicated, it is the governor who certifies as to the municipal condition?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am asking the Senator whether he does not think it would be wise also to require a municipal certification along with the governor's certificate so the authority is definitely pinned to the municipality?

Mr. WAGNER. The governor undoubtedly will require such a certification to be made to him. The Federal Government can not deal with the mayor of every municipality throughout the country, so we are proposing to deal with the governor alone.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have no objection to that, but I am asking the Senator whether or not the practice which he now says he assumes would be followed might not wisely be required in the following language, making the requirement read as follows:

> A like certificate as provided in subsection (c) as to the State or Territory, together with a like certificate from the chief executive officer of such municipality or political subdivision.

Mr. WAGNER. The difficulty is, I think, that we are going to add more red tape to the procedure, which we want to make as simple as possible so as to make the availability of the fund as expeditious as possible.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is not conceivable that the governor of the State would certify that the municipality was without funds and unable to secure the same if the mayor took a contrary view of it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. As the Senator knows, in many of the larger cities there is continual controversy as to whether the city is or is not at the end of its resources. It seems to me that the executive officer of the city should be the one who is required to take the initial responsibility in dealing with the governor, not only for our sake but for the governor's sake and for the ultimate sake of pinning the responsibility. What would be the objection to requiring the governor, when sending in a municipal certification, to accompany it with a direct certificate from the city?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I would not have the slightest objection to that, provided the relationship of the corporation was with the governor and not with the mayor.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is my view likewise.

Mr. WAGNER. That simply means that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation must insure that the governor is certifying the truth because his statement is to be corroborated by a certificate from the mayor of the city. I think it is entirely unnecessary.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think the Senator misinterprets my thought. It is not a question of integrity. It is a question of judgment. In many cities there is a decided difference of opinion as to whether or not the city has exhausted its own resources. There are groups which insist that a city ought to go farther without seeking outside aid.

Mr. WAGNER. We are making the governor the judge of all that, and that ought to be sufficient. He certainly will not certify until after he has made investigation of the condition of the particular municipality and whether or not there are other sources from which they can get funds to help the needy in a particular municipality. I do not see much point to the proposal. It is too insignificant.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Having so frequently demonstrated my interest in the particular phase to which the Senator from Michigan addresses himself and after hearing his observations, I should like to ask my friend, since his view, I take it, is to make assurance that the city seeking relief from the Government is really presenting the facts that disclose the need for relief through the officials of the city, would not the mere fact of the application being made by the mayor and officials itself be sufficient certificate of the governor's faith, honesty, and appropriateness?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I find nothing in the bill that requires the request to come from the mayor or official spokesman of the city.

Mr. LEWIS. Does our eminent friend from Michigan assume there is any other way by which a governor would recognize a community without recognizing its officials as one of the agencies of the State?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes. I am thinking of a situation in which there might be unemployment-relief organizations which might be considered to have a prior right of consultation in a situation of this kind.

Mr. LEWIS. I think I catch quickly the point. The Senator seeks to avoid, first, a conflict; second, requests from unreliable sources which might be yielded to, and to prevent the clash of that same expression coming from officials of the city.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is my sole purpose.

Mr. WAGNER. The funds are not to be advanced to a municipality unless the municipality gives security to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, so certainly no irresponsible body in any municipality can make a request effective.

Mr. LEWIS. That is the way it affected me.

Mr. WAGNER. In line 21, page 15, it is provided:

(2) Such municipality or political subdivision enters into an agreement with the corporation for the repayment to the corporation of the amount so paid, with interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator thinks it would be inadvisable to require an additional certificate?

Mr. WAGNER. I think so. I think we are adding to the red tape, which we want to avoid.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have no desire to press the matter if the Senator thinks the situation is cared for.

Mr. WAGNER. I think it is, although I am not vigorous in my opposition to the suggestion of the Senator.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Senator has no serious objection, I should like to move to amend, after the word "territory," in line 14, page 5, by adding the following language:

together with a like certificate from the chief executive officer of such municipality or political subdivision.

Mr. WAGNER. I do think it adds to the red tape. By saying I did not vigorously object I wanted simply to be polite.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator for his courtesy.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, it seems to me this is a case where we might be a little generous with red tape. Some of these cities will receive millions of dollars under the bill. To require the signature of the mayor ought not to be an overdraft either on his time or his services. There is one town in Connecticut—Watertown, I believe—which has developed a system of dealing with the depression and unemployment. It imposes a tax or contribution on the wages and income of its citizens ranging from 1 to 3 per cent. It administers the fund to the unemployed. But no one receives a dollar without rendering services in return. I understand the system has worked admirably. I think it ought to be adopted here. The pending question deals with the $300,000,000 being appropriated for dole or alms or charity.

Mr. President, it would require every bale of cotton raised in the United States this year to pay this single appropriation of $300,000,000. The present estimated wheat crop at farm prices will pay about two-thirds of this generous appropriation. It seems to me that the signature of the mayor might well be required. Of course, ink is a little high, red ink in particular; there has been an overdraft upon the supply of red ink; but it does seem to me that where we are dispensing $300,000,000 of public funds it really is not asking too much to require that the mayor affix his signature to the requisition before the stricken taxpayers of the country are called upon to honor the draft. Nobody seems to remember the taxpayer.

Mr. GLASS. He is the "forgotten man."

Mr. GORE. Yes; he is the "forgotten man."

Mr. President, the practice of bleeding a patient in case of illness is an ancient practice. It began centuries before the birth of Christ and has been practiced down to our own time. In my childhood I saw it practiced. It has been applied in many ages; it has been applied to many diseases, has been applied to many patients, has been applied by many physicians; but I believe that in all the history of therapeutics, in all the history of the art of healing, this Congress is the first practitioner that has ever resorted to bleeding in a case of pernicious anemia. [Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 20, line 20, after the figures "$15,500,000," insert the following:

Provided, That of said sum $272,000 shall be available for expenditure on flood-control emergency construction on works at Nogales, Ariz., as provided in Senate Document No. 44, Seventy-second Congress, first session.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment here because all the annual appropriation bills have passed, including the last deficiency bill. The proposal is to carry out a recommendation made by the American commissioner on the United States-Mexican Boundary Commission. The city of Nogales is divided at the international line by a street. About one-half of a total population of 20,000 live in Mexico and the remainder in the United States. A complete flood-control project would require considerable work in Mexico, but I have eliminated from the amendment all construction on the Mexican side of the line so that it would only apply to emergency work on the American side of the line. There have been a number of very serious floods in Nogales. In 1930 five people were drowned. Only last Friday there occurred the largest flood ever known. Earnest appeals have been made to me that an appropriation for emergency construction be obtained at this session of Congress. I must use this bill as the only vehicle whereby it may be obtained.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I am very much in sympathy with the proposal of the Senator from Arizona, but all through the bill we have refused to designate particular works not heretofore authorized. It is totally impossible to accomplish the object of the bill if we make any exceptions. If we ever expect to have the bill passed we can not include unauthorized items. Therefore I shall have to oppose the Senator's amendment, much as I dislike to do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAYDEN. I ask leave to include in the RECORD as a part of my remarks certain telegrams on the subject covered by the amendment offered by me.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NOGALES, ARIZ., July 9, 1932.

Senator CARL HAYDEN,
Capitol Building, Washington:

One and sixty-three one-hundredths inches rain fell, starting 5 to-day, flooding twin cities of Nogales. Unable estimate damage as yet; conservative place at seventy-five thousand. Flood season just starting and overcast skies indicate continued storms. Main streets ran 3 feet deep for two hours; Joffroy warehouse, one of largest, completely demolished; railroad tank car turned over in rush of waters. If no more rain to-night, will require days to clear débris. Large section of recently installed fence on line demolished. People of city fearful lest further damage and loss of life will occur. Please advise Senator ASHURST and Congressman DOUGLAS we are all hopeful that flood-control measure may be put through this session.

H. R. SISK,
President Chamber of Commerce.
H. J. KARNS, Mayor.

NOGALES, ARIZ., July 11, 1932.

Hon. CARL HAYDEN,
Capitol Building, Washington:

American Red Cross has completed survey damage in Nogales, Ariz., result flood. They advise 66 homes flooded, 206 persons involved, relief required probably over $5,000. This figure does not include damage to business houses, Government property, or expense in removing débris. Understand representative of boundary commission has made survey to-day; his report now in State Department. Suggest you obtain copy of same, which we feel sure will show immediate need for action. Volume of flood waters estimated to be higher than any time previous. Damage kept to a minimum through energetic action of American citizens and fact that flood occurred during daytime.

H. R. SISK,
President Chamber of Commerce.
H. J. KARNS, Mayor.

NOGALES, ARIZ., July 11, 1932.

Senator CARL HAYDEN:

Flood of Friday, the 8th, left deposits of débris through entire city of Nogales, Ariz. We consider this condition particularly in-sanitary and unhealthful and constituting a serious health menace, likely to cause pestilence. We fully realize that no one but Federal Government has power to act on this situation, and urge you do everything possible looking to immediate action before Congress adjourns. Let us not measure economy with disease and death.

SANTA CRUZ COUNTY MEDICAL SOCIETY,
E. C. HOUSE, President.
C. S. SMITH, Secretary.
A. L. GUSTETTER,
City and County Health Officer.

NOGALES, ARIZ., July 9, 1932.

Hon. CARL HAYDEN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Terrific floods Nogales to-day, resulting great property damage. Our company supplying gas and electricity, vital part of community existence. We have suffered severe loss at power plant and throughout distribution system. Flood control in accordance plans sponsored by yourself immediately and urgently necessary prevent further loss life and property. Please do everything in your power to secure definite action and appropriation this session.

W. H. GROVER,
Manager Public Utilities Consolidated Corporation.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I move an amendment, on page 19, in line 17, after the word "Interior," to insert "military parks under the jurisdiction of the War Department." I understand the Senator from New York does not object to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I do not think there is any real difference between the purpose of the Senator from Virginia and mine, and certainly I would be the last one to stand in the way of the development of the historic places in the wonderful Commonwealth of Virginia, but here is an appropriation based evidently on long preparation.

Mr. GLASS. May I interrupt the Senator to say if he is going to object I will withdraw the amendment?

Mr. NORBECK. If the Senator will be patient with me for a little while, I am not going to object at all. I am going merely to suggest that the amendment, as he proposes it, leaves the matter rather wide open. Which department is to expend the money, and how much is each to expend? I have previously talked to the Senator from Virginia about it. He thinks that only a small part of the total sum provided will be necessary, and I am simply suggesting that the amount for the purpose he has in mind be limited so as to avoid argument between the two departments, so that each of them will not want the $250,000. Would the Senator from Virginia be willing to limit the amount to be used for the purpose indicated to $250,000?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; I will agree to limit it in that way.

Mr. NORBECK. Very well, and if the Senator thinks that will not do I will agree to a larger sum, but that is very satisfactory.

Mr. GLASS. I will offer the amendment so that the provision will read:

in the national parks and the national monuments under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior, and $250,000 in military parks under the jurisdiction of the War Department.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, do I understand that the amendment proposes to increase the amount now carried in the paragraph?

Mr. GLASS. No. I am asking for $250,000 for the purpose indicated, from the $5,000,000 appropriation which is provided.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. HAYDEN. Where is the $5,000,000 item in the bill?

Mr. GLASS. If the Senator will just look at the bill he will see it on page 19, line 13, "$5,000,000."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I very seriously dislike to object to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia. If it were an addition to the appropriation, I would not object. Why does not the Senator add $250,000 for military parks?

Mr. GLASS. For the simple reason that I do not want to add any further burdens upon the taxpayers of the country; that is the reason. The Senator wants the whole $5,000,000 expended in his section of the country, and I want the modest sum of $250,000 expended in mine.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I challenge the attention of the Senate to 100 Army posts scattered recklessly and needlessly, many of them, throughout the United States. They are mentioned on pages 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, and 29, and appropriations are carried in this bill aggregating $15,164,000. I move to strike out all the items beginning on line 15, page 22, and all the rest of that page and all of pages 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, and down to and including line 14, on page 29.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I had contemplated making a similar motion because I feel this assessment of over $15,000,000 upon the taxpayers of the country could be much more wisely and judiciously expended with the object and purpose of taking care of the unemployed either on river and harbor improvements or on public-building improvements. Our Army posts should be maintained at a reasonably fair standard as to equipment and buildings; but I am confident that many of these items represent absolute extravagance and expenditures that are not essential for the maintenance of the proper equipment and facilities at Army posts.

If we are going to throw away some money in our anxiety to try to stimulate industry in the country and to bring about employment of the unemployed, why not use the money in directions where it will accomplish more and where it will come nearer reaching the centers of unemployment instead of placing it in these Army posts? Of course, we have provided rather liberally for public buildings, but there are many towns throughout the country where public buildings would serve a better purpose than the improvements that are contemplated at Army posts. Furthermore, there are river and harbor projects that have been indorsed and recommended by the Board of Army Engineers that could be undertaken and the accomplishment would be much more advantageous to people who, in the finality, have to pay the freight, the taxpayers. I should like to see this section stricken out and the money devoted to public buildings, for river and harbor improvements, and for even a greater contribution toward relief funds.

We are going to have terrible conditions in the country next winter. I am not a pessimist; I do not like to speak of unfavorable conditions, and I have done very little of that in the Senate. I think we have had entirely too much talk about our troubles upon the floor of the Senate and throughout the country. I noticed in a newspaper the other day a statement that the people of a certain State agreed practically unanimously that they would try and spread a little cheer, a little encouragement, instead of constantly talking disaster and depression. While, of course, that will not bring prosperity it will come far nearer bringing it than this constant pessimism that prevails throughout the country. However, we are going to have a serious situation; in fact, we have a serious situation now; and I would rather take $8,000,000 of this amount and place it in the relief fund to take care of people in actual distress and those who will be in actual distress as time goes on to even a greater extent probably than they are at present.

A great deal of this amount is going to be used for the purpose of providing officers' quarters. Some of the officers are living in fairly comfortable quarters, which probably many of us would be delighted to have the advantage of occupying. In many cases they are far superior to the habitations of many of us, but a large part of the amount provided goes for that purpose. I should like to see the money used for some more practical purpose if we are going to require the taxpayers of this country to contribute $15,000,000, and I am heartily in favor of such relief.

Consider the first item. It provides an appropriation of $609,000 for officers' quarters at one post. That is for commissioned-officers' quarters, and for noncommissioned officers $252,000 more are provided. That represents $861,000 in the very first item we find in this particular paragraph for officers' quarters. Do we not all realize and do not we believe that this amount of money could be expended in other directions that would be more helpful toward furnishing relief of the distress which prevails throughout the country? It is for that reason that I am supporting the motion to strike out this section, because I think if we are going to expend $15,000,000 and require the taxpayers to make that contribution, we could use it to more helpful purpose.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. I assume the purpose of the bill is to give employment. I had nothing to do with formulating the bill, but last year we provided a half a million dollars for certain repairs at West Point. I happen to live very near West Point, and it was very interesting to me to ascertain the number of carpenters and painters and masons of the neighborhood who were employed on that work. I know nothing about the particulars of the items in the bill, but I have no question that by the expenditure of this money there would be provided a tremendous amount of common labor and skilled labor by craftsmen, and that, I dare say, is the purpose of it.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I think there will be afforded some opportunity for private employment in connection with this item; I fully appreciate that; but I am under the impression that the same fund could be used in other directions to accomplish more good toward relieving unemployment.

This particular paragraph is also illustrative of the lack of consideration of the subject with which the committee was dealing when it made the provision found in this particular section. If it were the object and purpose of the committee to make a distribution of public funds and to give people employment, why did they restrict the appropriations to Army posts throughout the country, when there are a great many navy yards in the United States improvements on which could employ equally as much labor, dollar for dollar, and probably more? There are also naval air stations scattered throughout the country, but those were just passed by. One trouble with the legislation that we enact is that there is about it too much special favoritism for particular enterprises or for particular interests or particular localities.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BINGHAM. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that on page 21, line 18, $10,000,000 are provided for the construction of projects by the Navy Department under the Bureau of Yards and Docks.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Yes; that is in connection with the Bureau of Yards and Docks.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does not the Senator think that is a rather liberal provision for the purpose? As a matter of fact, in proportion, I think it is quite as liberal as the amount for Army construction.

Mr. TRAMMELL. There is some provision made there, but it is not proportionate to the appropriation for Army posts. At this session of Congress, with the taxpayers of the country prostrate and crying for relief instead of further tax burdens, I have witnessed the Army bill come into the Senate and pass the Senate with practically no reduction of any consequence, whereas in almost every other line of endeavor with which Congress deals there has been a 10 per cent reduction or a 15 per cent reduction or a 20 per cent reduction. It seems, however, that with many the Army activities of the country are so sacred that their expenditures must not be reduced at all, comparatively speaking. A great many items which should have been eliminated from the Army appropriation bill remain in it. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I want the Senate to go on record, if I can get them to go on record, with respect to this item.

Everyone knows that the highways and the byways and the parks are filled with unemployed people. They are sleeping out on the outside. Men, women, and children are lacking proper housing and food and other necessities of life. Let me point out just a few of the items that this bill carries.

On page 22, line 18, begins the first item of the $15,000,000 we are appropriating. The first item is an appropriation for the Canal Zone, where it does not do so much harm if people have to sleep outdoors; but here is a post exchange, a theater, and a gymnasium, costing in the aggregate $42,000.

Take Barksdale Field, La.: There is $609,000 for officers' quarters—officers who already have quarters. We have millions of men, women, and children sleeping outdoors, who are unable to pay rents, and yet we are appropriating money for this purpose, while resisting a dole!

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. COUZENS. Just a moment.

Mr. KING. I just wanted to say that the Senator omitted two hundred and some odd thousand dollars more for officers at the same place.

Mr. COUZENS. That is true. I am not going to take up much of the Senate's time, however. I want the Senate, if they will, to go on record as to whether or not they are going to approve the motion of the Senator from Utah to eliminate from the bill the provisions referred to by him.

For instance, at the same place there is $225,000 for the completion of a hospital. There is $30,000 for the completion of a garage. We can find money to house cars, but we can not find dollars to house men, women, and children. Every attempt to get any appropriation, even for the District of Columbia, for the relief of human beings is protested and vigorously fought, and yet here we attempt to slip through at a moment's notice an appropriation of $15,000,000 for things that are absolutely unnecessary!

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

Mr. COUZENS. Here is $15,000 for a quartermaster warehouse, to warehouse goods, while we can not even house human beings. We can not have a dole; that is prohibited; but we can have millions of appropriation for housing cars, for improving housing facilities for Army officers, for theaters, and for recreation buildings.

I want to point out that there is an appropriation for Fort Benning, Ga., for barracks, of $650,000—barracks that unquestionably can be gotten along without, so long as men, women, and children have to go without housing facilities in America.

Now, we go on to Bolling Field in the District of Columbia: Noncommissioned officers' quarters, $54,000; post exchange, theater, and gymnasium, $45,000; officers' mess, $50,000; enlargement of heating plant, $95,000. While men, women, and children are unable to get housing, we appropriate all of this money. You can go down through the entire bill and you will find appropriations for service clubs, for theaters, for gymnasiums.

I do not desire to delay the Senate at this late hour at night; but I am unwilling to let this matter go by without a protest.

On page 24 we have $20,000 for a quartermaster maintenance building, and another $40,000 for a garage to house cars. We can not find any money to house people, but we can find money to house automobiles.

At Fort Du Pont we have $60,000 for noncommissioned officers' quarters.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COUZENS. Certainly.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator has said that we are not able to find money for housing people. What particular proposal has he in mind? I do not remember ever voting against any such proposal, or even being confronted with it.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator knows that every conceivable obstacle has been placed in the way of getting appropriations for the District of Columbia. I remember that the President asked for $650,000 to care for the unemployed in the District of Columbia, and after weeks and weeks of delay the Congress cut it down 50 per cent. More than the $650,000 which we were asked to appropriate to care for the people of the District of Columbia, and which we could not appropriate, is appropriated in this bill for theaters, for service clubs, for garages, for the purpose of housing things that do not need to be housed at this time.

Mr. WAGNER. I am certainly in sympathy with the Senator's proposition to house people in the District of Columbia. This proposal is to put people to work; and it was put in, as I was informed, after an investigation by the War Department of the necessity of these projects that sooner or later will have to be built. After an investigation by the Committees on Military Affairs in both the House and the Senate of the necessity of these projects, it was determined that they were immediately available, and that they could put people to work now.

My theory is that if these projects are to be constructed by the Government, this is the time to do it, when it will put people to work. If the committee and the conferees have been misinformed as to the merits of these proposals, of course then the Senator ought to enlighten the Senate. The idea of this provision is to put people to work upon necessary projects. If they are unnecessary, and if the Senator will convince the Senate of that, I am sure they will be eliminated.

Mr. COUZENS. I am satisfied that they are unnecessary at this time. I am satisfied that there are more necessary projects and more desirable projects to employ labor.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. COUZENS. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator knows that right along I have been in favor of a much larger public-works program than the program proposed here. This is the very minimum which the Government ought to do to help put people back to work.

Mr. COUZENS. I have not been in disagreement with the Senator's efforts. I have been sympathetic with his efforts along lines of unemployment relief.

Mr. WAGNER. I acknowledge the Senator's sympathy and cooperation.

Mr. COUZENS. On employment exchanges I have not been out of accord with him. I assume that he is not personally responsible for all of these items in the bill; but I do not believe that Congress can justify itself in passing this bill with $15,000,000 included in it for the purposes enumerated here.

It is perfectly obvious that the Army will get all the money it can get. Does anybody know of any department of Government that does not get all the money it can secure, whether it is the Navy or the Army or any other? I assume that I shall have to vote for this bill; and I am unwilling to go on record without a protest to the effect that this Government is unable to find money for the relief of men, women, and children, and yet can find money to build theaters, gymnasiums, service clubs, garages, and other items referred to in this bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President——

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have a great deal of sympathy with the position taken by the Senator that it is rather an extravagance to build all these different items; but they have been carefully worked out and provided for as part of the national defense.

Mr. COUZENS. Will the Senator tell me what service clubs, theaters, and all that have to do with the national defense?

Mr. BINGHAM. That is a matter which has been considered by the Military Affairs Committees of both Houses. I am not a member of the Military Affairs Committee; but may I call the Senator's attention to the fact that on page 22 is also $100,000,000 for public-building projects, not one of which, so far as we know, is any more necessary than the various things which the Senator objects to, like quartermaster maintenance buildings and noncommissioned officers' quarters? One hundred million dollars are to be spent for emergency construction of public projects. What is the object? It is not because the buildings are needed. It is not because they are going to shelter anybody. It is, as I understand, because it puts somebody to work.

Mr. COUZENS. That is not the only reason. A lot of these buildings are being built to stop the payment of rent. A lot of these buildings are being built to take the place of privately owned post offices and other public buildings, and this appropriation is for the purpose of stopping the payment of rent in lots of places where we now rent buildings.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. COUZENS. Yes.

Mr. REED. In just exactly the same way the building of quarters for officers and noncommissioned officers stops the payment of rent, because as long as they are out renting housing the Government pays them a rental allowance. This will save money for the Government in that way.

Mr. COUZENS. It has also been charged that the janitor service, the upkeep, and the maintenance even of many of these Federal buildings will be in excess of the rent we now pay for the rented quarters.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator yield there?

Mr. COUZENS. Certainly.

Mr. REED. There is no janitor service in these Army-post buildings, because the troops supply their own janitor service.

Mr. COUZENS. I was speaking of the Federal construction program. When Speaker GARNER proposed his bill, a general protest went up throughout the country that in the case of many of these buildings the maintenance of them, the cost of janitor service and upkeep and elevator service, amounted to more than the rent now being paid for private quarters. I am not charging that elevator service and janitor service will be required in these buildings; but the Senator from Pennsylvania knows that when all of these theaters and all of these service clubs are built, there will be appropriations every year for maintenance charges. There is no question about that; and all through the bill there are evidences of appropriations for unnecessary activities.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COUZENS. Certainly.

Mr. BINGHAM. On page 20 the Senator will find the following item:

> For the prosecution of river and harbor projects heretofore authorized, $30,000,000.

Of course, it is very difficult to find any fault with that, because we do not know the details. May I submit to the Senator that if we had a list of all the little projects, scattered all over the United States, that are going to make up that $30,000,000, it would be just as easy to make fun of the appropriation and show the unnecessary character of a great deal of it, as the Senator is doing with regard to the Army.

Similarly with regard to flood-control projects, for which $15,500,000 is appropriated: None of them are specified, and we do not know what it is all about; but we are asked to vote for the same amount of money, only it is not specified as to how it shall be spent. Therefore it is difficult to find fault with it.

Mr. COUZENS. I admit that I can not find fault with things I do not know about, but I can find fault with things I do know about. I do not claim to know it all. I do not know what all this money for flood control is going to be used for; but when I pick up the bill, I find that at Bolling Field we are going to have a post exchange, a theater, a gymnasium, an officers' mess, and all those things. While people in the District of Columbia are living on the ground, right at Bolling Field we are going to put up a theater, a post exchange, and a gymnasium—for what purpose? For an unnecessary purpose, at least at this time.

I dislike very much to delay the Senate; but I wish the Senate would go on record by a roll call as to whether they want to appropriate $15,000,000 for the purposes I have already enumerated, and at the same time let the people of the District of Columbia sleep on the ground.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. REED. Mr. President, is it necessary for the Senate to run on such hours as this in the consideration of this bill? It seems to me very doubtful whether we have a quorum. I should like to have this question passed on by a full Senate. Therefore, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. WAGNER. I hope that motion——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President——

Mr. BLAINE. The motion is not debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion is not debatable.

Mr. COUZENS. I desire to move, as a substitute, that the Senate adjourn until 9 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the substitute motion proposed by the Senator from Michigan, namely, that the Senate adjourn until 9 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, which is that the Senate recess until to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

Mr. REED. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE] and vote "yea."

Mr. SHORTRIDGE (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement of my general pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], I must refrain from voting. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. I understand that he would vote as I intend to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HOWELL. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. I understand if present, the Senator from West Virginia would vote "nay"; and if permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]. I understand that if present, he would vote "nay." I would vote "yea" if permitted to vote.

Mr. DALE. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. I am informed that he would vote as I intend to vote, and therefore I vote "nay."

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]; and

The Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES].

Mr. HATFIELD. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MORRISON]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. JONES (after having voted in the negative). I voted inadvertently, but since have been informed that my pair, the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], would vote as I have voted. Therefore I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BULKLEY. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] and vote "nay."

Mr. KING (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING], and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. DICKINSON (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. I am informed that if that Senator were present, he would vote as I have voted, and therefore I permit my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 37, as follows:

YEAS—25

Austin	Capper	Kean	Steiwer
Bailey	Connally	Keyes	Stephens
Barbour	Costigan	McNary	Townsend

So the Senate refused to take a recess.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the items proposed to be stricken out by the Senator from Utah are items which have met with the approval and recommendation of the War Department; have been studied by the Military Affairs Committee of the House, which has had a representative visit every single post that is listed in these items; have been studied by the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate; have been passed by the House of Representatives, in the bill recently vetoed by the President; were adopted by the Senate and agreed to by the conferees on that bill; and have been approved in every sense by the appropriate committees and by both Houses of Congress. They were put into this bill largely because they would furnish unemployment relief in every part of the United States, and would give the best kind of unemployment relief, in furnishing employment to thousands upon thousands of men in the construction of the facilities called for.

Being approved, being necessary, furnishing employment, as they would, it seemed a particularly appropriate time to build these facilities, because they can be built cheaper now than they could have been built at any time within the last 15 years, or perhaps a longer period than that.

Every one of these buildings is necessary for the proper housing and functioning of the Army. Let me take a single illustration. The Senator from Michigan picked out the item on page 22 for Barksdale Field, La. That is a comparatively new aviation field, at which is centered a large pursuit group. Pursuit planes, as the Senate knows, are the combat planes, the single-seaters, which require the very highest degree of skill to operate, particularly in formation.

The young men who fly those planes are mostly lieutenants, living on very low incomes, which we have recently reduced by our economy bill; and since that field is a new field, all of those young men are compelled to go out and rent private quarters at rents far beyond what the Government allows them for rental allowances.

They are taking bigger chances than any other men in our Military Establishment to-day, they are poorly housed, they have low incomes, recently reduced, as I have said, and the housing that would be provided for them by this provision would certainly be no more than common justice would demand that we give them. This project down there would furnish work to all sorts of building laborers, and the buildings when completed would house people to whom we owe everything.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. On page 26 there is an appropriation authorized for Fort Meade, S. Dak., for a riding hall, $25,000. How necessary is that riding hall?

Mr. REED. If the Senator will think of the climate of that State in the winter months, he will realize that some place like this hall is almost imperatively necessary for the exercising of the animals and the proper training of the men.

Mr. BYRNES. Have they any riding hall?

Mr. REED. No; they have not. It is a cavalry post. This is meant to be a very economical building obviously. To build a riding hall for $25,000 is a pretty inexpensive performance. It has been recommended as necessary by the committees, particularly in view of the weather conditions at the post.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COPELAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. DILL. Can the Senator tell me who made up the list?

Mr. REED. It was made up originally by studies prepared at the War Department, which were carefully checked by the representatives of the House Committee on Military Affairs. They made a trip to every one of the posts.

Mr. DILL. The reason why I ask the Senator is that I am not familiar with any State except the State of Washington. I note on page 25, near the bottom of the page, line 19, they have included Fort Lawton, noncommissioned officers' quarters, $30,000. That post is practically abandoned. I am informed it is intended to abandon it. It seems to me that sort of an expenditure is a waste of money if that be true. It is in my own State and I suppose I should say, from the standpoint of the "pork-barrel" theory, that it is a proper expenditure, but I can not see it in any other light than that it is a mistaken use of money.

Mr. REED. If the Senator will notice at the top of page 26, appropriations are made there for Fort Lewis.

Mr. DILL. That money will be very well spent at Fort Lewis, but I am complaining about Fort Lawton, where it seems to me to be a mistake to spend $30,000 at a place which is about to be abandoned.

Mr. REED. I am not familiar with Fort Lawton, and I am very much obliged to the Senator for the suggestion. I think it would be well to transfer that item to Fort Lewis. I would be willing to do that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Were these items included in the Budget? Did they come before the Senator's committee this year?

Mr. REED. Not in the shape of a Budget recommendation. They came to us from the House in the other relief bill, and they came in a separate authorizing bill which the House committee reported.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, the usual and ordinary way would be for all these matters to come before the Committee on Military Affairs and before the Subcommittee on Appropriations dealing with the appropriations for the War Department, but none of them ever passed through that route at all.

Mr. REED. No; I believe not.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then is it not true that last year quite a large amount was appropriated in the way of extraordinary appropriations that were made for projects for employment purposes?

Mr. REED. No; it was not a large amount. I do not remember the exact figure, but it was not large.

Mr. McKELLAR. My recollection is that it was a very considerable figure, though, of course, it was nothing like $15,000,000.

Mr. REED. No; it was nothing like this.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will ask the Senator to look at page 26, where there is an appropriation for noncommissioned officers' quarters, $118,000; bakery, $15,000; incinerator, $10,000; enlisted men's service club, $50,000; theater, $40,000; sewage-disposal plant, $40,000; fence, $31,000; quartermaster gasoline storage, $3,000; magazine, $15,000; officers' mess, $50,000; cold-storage and handling system, $70,000; roads, walks, and surface-drainage system, $86,000.

It seems to me that is a very great extravagance and certainly ought not to be put in the bill in this way without the committees going into it very carefully, both the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. REED. The Senator will realize that this is in exactly the same position as all the other public buildings in the bill which have not been passed upon by the Appropriations Committee and which are not even listed here.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. REED. I do not want to prolong the discussion, but I am glad to yield to the Senator from Utah before I take my seat.

Mr. KING. A number of officers have spoken to me during the past four or five years with reference to the multiplicity of posts throughout the United States and have urged that most of them be abandoned; that we concentrate our military forces in the United States in 8 or 10 posts. I recall one officer particularly who said it is impossible to teach military tactics and engage in proper maneuvers with the small number of men at the ordinary military post. He thinks we should have a limited number of posts where we could concentrate from 5,000 to 15,000 troops and engage in the proper military maneuvers. My primary objection is that the bill is proposing to anchor and perpetuate more than 100 military posts throughout the United States, most of which should be abandoned. I do not object to the expenditure of money during the depression, but we propose to appropriate $15,000,000 to rehabilitate some of these almost abandoned posts and appropriate money for their continuance, and there will be more appropriations called for as the years go by, and we will find difficulty in abandoning them, and this money will be largely wasted.

Mr. REED. The Senator is exactly right in stating that a good many posts ought to be abandoned, and I am glad to be able to say to him that the process of abandoning them has been very much accelerated. We have abandoned about 20 of them in the last year. Typical of these is Fort Hunt, down the Potomac River, opposite Fort Washington, an old Civil War fort. We had no business keeping it going. Undoubtedly it is better for the troops to get them in large groups. There was only a small headquarters detachment at Fort Hunt. That process is going on all the time. So far as we know—and the exception of Fort Lawton in Washington is the only exception I have noticed—there are no posts listed here that ought now to be abandoned, but there are many that can be and will be abandoned as the process will continue during the coming year. The Senator is right about that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am not going to make an argument about the question, but I ask unanimous consent, in lieu of an argument, to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks the items contained in the bill between line 15, on page 22, and the end of line 8, on page 29. The very enumeration of the items is sufficient reason for my voting for the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The list is as follows:

(11) For the construction and installation at military posts of such buildings and utilities and appurtenances thereto as may be necessary, $15,164,000, as follows:

Albrook Field, Canal Zone: Quartermaster maintenance building, $20,000; post exchange, theater, and gymnasium, completion of, $42,000.

Barksdale Field, La.: Noncommissioned officers' quarters, $252,000; officers' quarters, $609,000; barracks, $474,000; hospital, completion of, $225,000; garage, completion of, $30,000; quartermaster warehouse, completion of, $15,000.

William Beaumont General Hospital, Texas: Noncommissioned officers' quarters, $7,000; warehouse, $15,000.

Fort Benning, Ga.: Barracks, $650,000.

Fort Bliss, Tex.: Noncommissioned officers' quarters, $50,000; officers' quarters, $150,000.

Bolling Field, D. C.: Noncommissioned officers' quarters, $54,000; dispensary, completion of, $30,000; post exchange, theater, and gymnasium, completion of, $45,000; officers' mess, $50,000; enlargement of central heating plant to provide for quarters area, $95,000.

Fort Bragg, N. C.: Barracks, completion of, $40,000; noncommissioned officers' quarters, $160,000.

Carlisle Barracks, Pa.: Heating plant, $200,000.

Chanute Field, Ill.: Noncommissioned officers' quarters, $137,000; central heating plant for technical and quarters area, $200,000.

Camp Devens, Mass.: Roads and sidewalks, $75,000; service club, $30,000; post exchange and gymnasium, $50,000.

Fort Douglas, Utah: Noncommissioned officers' quarters, $15,000.

Dryden, Tex.: Barracks, $20,000.

Duncan Field, Tex.: Quartermaster warehouse, $40,000; quartermaster maintenance building, $20,000; garage, $40,000; fire and guard house, $25,000.

Fort Du Pont, Del.: Noncommissioned officers' quarters, $60,000.

Edgewood Arsenal, Md.: Noncommissioned officers' quarters, $70,000.

Fitzsimons General Hospital, Colo.: Gymnasium, recreation and social hall, $150,000.

Hamilton Field, Calif.: Officers' quarters, $215,000; noncommissioned officers' quarters, $120,000.

Fort Hamilton, N. Y.: Noncommissioned officers' quarters, $100,000.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I want to submit a few remarks in view of the statements made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] with reference to the abandoning of Army posts. I disagree with the Senators. I do not see how it is economy to abandon posts that the Government already owns, and concentrate a number of those posts in a larger post requiring the building of new quarters and new establishments. I am familiar with the argument advanced by the Senator from Utah. Of course every Army officer will urge that course. He wants a big post up near some large city where the Army can have war maneuvers. That is the attitude of the Chief of Staff.

As a result of this policy of the War Department, it is proposed to abandon several fortresses along the Mexican border which have been there for years and years and which are needed for the protection of the Mexican border against bandits and against incursions from without. Fort Brown, at Brownsville, Tex., was originally tentatively established by General Taylor when he invaded Mexico. There has been a fortress there for a great many years, though I am not accurate as to the exact time. I visited it last summer. Of course, the buildings are old, but they are livable. The Government owns the property. It is on the Mexican border where it serves usefully a national purpose, and yet the War Department, under the pretext of economy, proposes now to abandon that fort and take the troops somewhere else and call upon the Treasury for more money to build more modern quarters and absolutely abandon that old fort on the border.

There are other border forts along the Mexican border which it is proposed to abandon under the same policy. They want during peace times to play at war; they want to hold great maneuvers. Instead of performing the real peacetime service of an army, that of patrolling the border and preserving the country from attack from without, the policy of the War Department at the present time is to concentrate all troops in a few great camps.

I wholly disagree with the idea that there is any national economy in any such policy. It is a fraud and a pretense. It is not for the purpose of economy, but to enable them to hold great maneuvers in great camps and to carry on an imaginary war with some imaginary great power. When I suggested to the Secretary of War and the Chief of Staff that these posts ought to be preserved for the purpose of protecting the border, what do you suppose, Mr. President, the Chief of Staff said? He said that it is no function of the Federal Government at all to protect the Mexican border. He said that is the duty of the State Government. He said the only contingency which would require Federal protection of the border would be in case a national force, a national army from Mexico, should come over the border, and in that event it would be the duty of the Federal Government to intervene; but so far as lawless bands are concerned, so far as depredations and raids from a foreign country are concerned, he said it was no duty of the War Department to render protection to the citizens of my State or to the citizens of the United States. It is such a policy as that that makes it desirable from that viewpoint that some of these forts should be abandoned. It is not because of economy. It is because of an autocratic militaristic policy that actuates the directing powers of the War Department.

Mr. President, I take the liberty of injecting these remarks into the debate because I do not want the statement of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the eminent chairman of the Military Affairs Committee [Mr. REED] to go unchallenged, that the idea of abandoning these forts is to save money. It is not to save money. There is no more extravagant department of the Government than the War Department.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, everyone knows there has been great difficulty in balancing the Budget. Everyone knows there have been hundreds of faithful old employees laid off for the purpose of economizing. Everyone knows that we have discharged married women to economize. Everyone knows we have done hundreds of other things which, as employers, we dislike to do, and now, after having done all of them, I want to point out a few things I have not heretofore pointed out which are contained in this bill, and I want to emphasize them.

We talk about "pork barrel," and perhaps some of the Members of Congress voted for the bill, because they have an appropriation in the bill which relates to their particular State or district. Let me take Selfridge Field, in Michigan. There is provision there for a gymnasium and theater $80,000, while 25,000 people in the city of Detroit, within a few miles of Selfridge Field, are almost pauperized. In the same item we have provision for a garage, $40,000; quartermaster maintenance building $20,000; post exchange, $45,000; officers' mess, $60,000; enlisted men's service club, $50,000; bakery, $15,000; roads and utilities, $75,000. I venture to say that Selfridge Field, Mich., can get along without all of these items.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. COUZENS. Certainly.

Mr. REED. Why is it not just as praiseworthy to build roads at Selfridge Field as it is to appropriate $120,000,000 for public highways anywhere else?

Mr. COUZENS. The difference is that this item is for a special purpose and the highway appropriation is for public use. The service clubs, sidewalks, and so on, that I am now talking about are simply for soldiers. I think there is a great difference in carrying on construction projects of that sort and construction work which the public apparently uses.

Take Camp Devens, Mass. For that camp there is an item for sidewalks and roads of $75,000; service club, $30,000; post exchange and gymnasium, $50,000.

I do not wonder that the Senator from New York looks rather sheepish when these items are mentioned, because I know that he himself would prefer to see other items in the bill than items of that kind.

At Fitzsimons General Hospital, Colo., there is an item of $150,000 for a gymnasium, recreation and social hall.

The sum of $150,000 is proposed for a social hall, when everybody knows that in every city in the Union men, women, and children are suffering. I dislike to discuss "sob stuff," but, Mr. President, we are now dealing with facts and not anything else.

For Fort Huachuca, Ariz., there is an item of $100,000 for a post exchange, gymnasium, and service club.

For Jefferson Barracks, Mo., there is an item of $65,000 for noncommissioned officers' quarters and of $55,000 for additions to kitchens and mess halls.

At March Field, Calif., there is an item of $15,000 for a bakery, $60,000 for a laundry, $50,000 for an officers' mess, and $40,000 for a theater.

At Fort Meade, S. Dak., there is an item of $25,000 for a riding hall.

At Mitchel Field, N. Y., there is provided, as the Senator from Tennessee has enumerated, $40,000 for a theater, $20,000 for a sewage-disposal plant, $31,000 for a fence, $70,000 for cold storage, and a number of other items of similar kind, when we can not even find housing facilities for the men, women, and children of this country.

For Plattsburg Barracks, N. Y., we find an item for addition to barracks of $25,000, and then another item reading, "barracks, $255,000." I do not know what the second item for barracks means. Perhaps the Senator from Pennsylvania can explain it.

Mr. REED. The item of $25,000 is for an addition to one of the existing barracks buildings, while the other item is for new barracks to take care of men who are now housed in temporary wooden shacks.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COUZENS. Certainly.

Mr. BINGHAM. I notice on page 20 an item for the Hoover Dam of $10,000,000. As I recall, we recently appropriated $10,000,000 for that purpose, and this bill carries $10,000,000 more. Does the Senator think that that is necessary at this time, in view of the shortage of money and the necessity for economy?

Mr. COUZENS. I confess I do not know the condition of the contracts, but I assume that the contracts are being let for work on the Hoover Dam project that will require this amount.

Mr. BINGHAM. We took care of that in the deficiency appropriation bill; we provided all the necessary money needed by the contractors. After hearing the contractor the committee recommended, and there was appropriated, sufficient money to take care of that project for the contracts for the ensuing year, but here are $10,000,000 more provided at this time when the need for economy is great.

Mr. COUZENS. Would the Senator prefer to have that amount taken out of the $15,000,000 for theater service, clubs, and so forth, at Army posts?

Mr. BINGHAM. I think the Senator's position is quite correct, that in these days when economy is necessary we ought not to be expending the great amount of money mentioned in this bill; but, as I have called to his attention previously, there are in this bill $30,000,000 for river and harbor works and $15,500,000 for flood control, and there are no details as to how the money shall be expended, whether Mud Creek or some little harbor somewhere which may be used two or three times a year by a yacht is going to be improved by the expenditure of $40,000. It makes it a little bit unfair for the Senator simply to pick on the War Department items, because they are almost the only items in the bill that are given in detail. The bill carries over $100,000,000 for public buildings, but we do not know anything about where the money is going to be spent or what it is for. I should like to join with the Senator in voting against the entire appropriation.

Mr. COUZENS. I am quite satisfied that in the expenditure of the appropriation for the Hoover Dam the money will be expended for construction work and none of the appropriations will be spent for such buildings as theaters, service clubs, social halls, and buildings of that kind for a special class. I think the Senator from Connecticut is raising an issue that is not comparable to what I am complaining about. Perhaps some of the other items are too large; perhaps we can not afford them, but I assume the money is going to be used for practical and useful purposes for the people of the United States, while the appropriations to which I have been referring are such, for example, as an appropriation at Fort McClellan, Ala.—

Recreation hall, $35,000; gymnasium, $45,000.

That makes $80,000 for recreation purposes at Fort McClellan, Ala.

Mr. President, I dislike to keep repeating statements as to the condition of the country and to refer to the campaign we have been through for balancing the Budget, and then come along and approve an appropriation for such purposes as these. There has been no Senator more vigilant and more earnest in his effort to balance the Budget than the Senator from Pennsylvania; he has prayed to God on the floor of the Senate here that we do not go off the gold standard, and all that sort of thing, and now here comes an appropriation of over $15,000,000 for things that may be dispensed with, for the time being at least.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. In view of the statement made by the Senator from Connecticut, which I am sure he made without a very close examination of the facts—and I am sorry that he makes statements without examining the facts—let me say that the public-building projects which are provided for in this proposed legislation have already been allocated and approved by the Treasury Department; the amount which each building is to cost has been estimated; the information has been transmitted to the Congress, has been printed as a congressional document, and is referred to in this very bill. So that when the Senator states that he has no idea where these buildings are to be constructed or what they are or how much they will cost, he is mistaken, because the very document referred to gives him all that information.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I am glad to know that. Has the Senator also got a list of the $30,000,000 worth of river and harbor projects?

Mr. WAGNER. No; except that the money is to be spent upon projects which have heretofore been authorized by Congress.

Mr. BINGHAM. But the items to which the Senator from Michigan has objected have not only been authorized by Congress but they have been approved by the committees of both Houses and passed on by both Houses.

Mr. WAGNER. I supported these particular appropriations because I have been satisfied, in spite of what the Senator from Michigan read upon my face, that they are necessary. I mean that ultimately this work is going to be done by the Government, and I would rather see it done now when, in the first place, the Government can do it cheaper and, in the second place, at a time when we want to absorb some of the unemployment.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, does the Senator believe that there is more practicable work that the Government can do in the way of improving rivers and harbors, and so on, than in building theaters and service clubs and riding halls and structures of that character?

Mr. WAGNER. There is a good deal more that the Government can do; and I wish the Senator and myself had the say as to what the Government ought to do in helping relieve unemployment. In that event, relying primarily upon the knowledge and experience of the Senator from Michigan rather than mine, I do not think we would be in this mess. But these items have been proposed, and it seems an investigation has been made by the War Department, by the committee of the Senate, by the committee of the House, and all of them have agreed that these are not only desirable but are necessary projects that eventually the Government will build anyway; and, if that is so, it ought to be done at this time.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator does not want the Senate to understand that he favors appropriations for theaters, riding halls, service clubs, and all that sort of thing in preference to road construction or river and harbor work, does he?

Mr. WAGNER. I certainly agree with the Senator that I prefer the other projects, of course.

Mr. COUZENS. Then let us eliminate this entire $15,000,000 for the purposes designated and use it on rivers and harbors or some other projects that will be of more benefit to the general public.

Mr. WAGNER. May I say to the Senator as to river and harbor projects that we put in the maximum amount which the head of the department in charge of the work said he could use this year, and that is what we were interested in, to accelerate these projects this year so as to employ more of the unemployed now, and that is the maximum sum which they said they would be able to use this year.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I should like to have the Senator from New York tell us who told him that they could not spend any more money economically?

Mr. WAGNER. I think it was General Brown, and that it was in a conversation with the Senator from Montana. I am quite sure it was General Brown who gave us the information.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. In the Army apropriation bill there was $31,000,000 appropriated for rivers and harbors and in this bill there are $30,000,000. That makes a total of $61,000,000.

Mr. WAGNER. Is not the Senator mistaken? I understood that the total appropriation is $60,000,000 outside of this particular bill.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Oh, no; the House provided $60,000,000 and the Senate cut it to $54,000,000, and of that everything above $31,000,000 is for maintenance. So there are only $31,000,000 for construction. There are $30,000,000 in this bill for construction, making a total of $61,000,000, and General Brown's testimony before the Committee on Commerce was to the effect that he could economically expend, if given authority and the money, $100,000,000 this year and $150,000,000 next year, and employ 160,000 men for 120 days every season at I do not remember how much a day.

Mr. COUZENS. Let us transfer this $15,000,000 item here to that sort of work instead of this kind of work.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have an amendment that I am going to offer to make available some of these funds for the development of inland waterways as to which the authorizations and appropriations are already exhausted. There are two projects that can not get five cents out of this appropriation, projects that have already been adopted by Congress on which the work has been started but can not be continued because of the fact that the authorizations and appropriations are exhausted. The Senator said he agreed with the Senator from Michigan that the money could be spent for far better purposes, and so I hope he will accept the amendment.

Mr. COUZENS. I merely wish to recite a few more items of the bill. On page 27 I note the following items:

Randolph Field, Tex.: Barracks, completion of, $56,000; gymnasium, completion of, $70,000—

I take it that has already been started and some money has already been spent on it, and $70,000 additional is provided.

roads and utilities, $243,000

Then I find for Fort Sill, Okla., an item of $875,000 for barracks for Army officers.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the Senator does not mean to say that Army officers live in barracks, does he?

Mr. COUZENS. I mean enlisted men.

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes. But what is the Senator's objection to spending $875,000 of this money to employ artisans, carpenters, painters, bricklayers, masons, architects, and so on, in building proper barracks for the soldiers of the Army? I can not understand the Senator's position in that regard.

I understand that he objects to spending public money for amusement halls for the soldiers in winter evenings, which are called here theaters, or for social halls, where they may meet and where their morale may be benefited, and prefers to have it spent on river and harbor projects, that nobody knows about and which will probably go to some place where some one has a "pull," but I do not understand the Senator's objection to spending at least a few million dollars of the large appropriation here in building proper housing facilities for the officers and men of the United States Army. Such expenditures will give employment to artisans of all kinds; it will afford a market for building material; it will help employment in a direct fashion, far more than spending a lot of money for a big dredge out in the middle of a river, where two or three men are employed in dredging.

Mr. COUZENS. No one that I know of is desirous of making our Army live in uncomfortable and disagreeable quarters. I am just discussing whether this is the appropriate time to supply all of these additional luxuries and facilities to the Army. They have gotten along without them. They have gotten along without them during prosperous periods. Now we come to a time when everybody wants to balance the Budget, and everybody wants to get along with expending as little money as possible, and we find it utterly impossible to appropriate money for relief work, although we are appropriating here millions of dollars for facilities which in ordinary times I would not care to deny the Army. These, however, are extraordinary times, and I can see no justification for these items at this time.

In addition to the $875,000 for barracks at Fort Sill, Okla., there is $48,000 for gun sheds; there is $30,000 for stables; there is $10,000 for a vehicle shed, and $72,000 for noncommissioned officers' quarters. So, all through the bill, millions and millions of dollars are enumerated for facilities that are not needed at this time.

If we are unable to balance the Budget, I do not see why we should appropriate money for things of this sort. If we are to appropriate money to give employment, certainly we can give employment on more utilitarian things than these.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the amendment.

Mr. COUZENS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Austin	Dale	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.
Barbour	Davis	Jones	Robinson, Ind.
Bingham	Dickinson	Kean	Sheppard
Black	Fess	King	Shipstead
Blaine	Frazier	La Follette	Shortridge
Bratton	George	Lewis	Steiwer
Brookhart	Glass	McGill	Thomas, Idaho
Bulkley	Glenn	McKellar	Townsend
Bulow	Goldsborough	McNary	Trammell
Byrnes	Gore	Metcalf	Tydings
Capper	Hale	Moses	Vandenberg
Cohen	Hastings	Norbeck	Wagner
Connally	Hayden	Nye	Watson
Copeland	Hebert	Patterson
Costigan	Howell	Pittman
Couzens	Hull	Reed

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the amendment.

Mr. COUZENS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BULKLEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. GLENN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], who is absent. Therefore I am not at liberty to vote.

Mr. GORE (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and withhold my vote.

Mr. HOWELL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. I understand that if he were present he would vote "nay." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea." I withhold my vote.

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). Announcing my pair and its transfer as on the previous roll call, I vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], who, if present, would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay." In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. TYDINGS (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN], and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HATFIELD. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MORRISON]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DALE. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]; but being informed that he would vote as I intend to vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. DICKINSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], who is absent on account of death in his family. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], and will permit my vote to stand.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY]. Not knowing how she would vote, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. COUZENS (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to change my vote from "yea" to "nay" in order that I may file a motion to reconsider.

Mr. KING (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING]. Since I am unable to secure a transfer, I am compelled to withdraw my vote.

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS];

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE]; and

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES].

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 30, as follows:

So Mr. KING's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, which I desire to offer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Alabama proposes to amend by striking out the quotation marks at the end of section 204, line 14, page 14, and adding thereto the following:

That when any money is loaned by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or any renewal of an existing loan is made to any corporation, company, or business enterprise, such corporation, company, or business enterprise shall agree in writing with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that after such loan is made, and until such loan is paid, the corporation, company, or business enterprise shall pay no salary, directly or indirectly, nor pay a salary, which combined with any bonus shall be greater in amount than $25,000 per annum.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I do not desire to do more than explain the effect of this amendment. The amendment, if adopted, would prohibit the making of a loan to any business enterprise under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act unless an agreement were made that no salary should be paid to the employees of the company securing the loan in excess of $25,000 a year.

I simply want to call attention to this fact: That I offered this amendment when the appropriation was originally made for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Since that time we have seen fit to reduce the salaries of Government employees. We have reduced the salaries of the Members of the Senate and of the House of Representatives. We have reduced the salaries of the employees all up and down the line, either by the furlough system, or otherwise. We pay no $135,000 salaries to men working for the Government. Yet the records show that one of the railroads which has borrowed a stupendous sum of money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, money which must eventually, most likely, be paid by the taxpayers, is paying its president a salary of $135,000 a year. Not only is that railroad paying $135,000 a year to its president, but numerous employees of other business enterprises which have borrowed the taxpayers' money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are paying salaries in excess of $100,000 a year.

If it is necessary for us to engage in economy—and we all agree that it is—by reducing the amount of the taxpayers' money paid to Government employees, why should we not also require that when a failing business enterprise obtains the taxpayers' money to run its business it should also pay salaries somewhere within reasonable bounds and within reasonable limitations?

That is the sole issue raised by this amendment. I do not claim that the Government should attempt to fix the salaries of those working for business enterprises if the business enterprises supply the money to operate their own businesses, but the taxpayers are supplying the money to operate many of these businesses. Some of them are on the verge of going into bankruptcy, some of them are right on the verge of being put into the hands of receivers, and the only reason why they are not in the hands of receivers to-day is because the money of the taxpayers of this country has been used to supply the operation of their business.

We are not only supplying money for the operation of the railroads but we are supplying money to-day to run steamship lines, when the taxpayers' money pays the dividends and when the officials are drawing salaries of $100,000 a year, and they could not draw a dollar out of the operation of the business if the Government of the United States did not supply the money to operate the steamship lines.

Mr. President, if the Government is going into the business of supplying the money to operate failing business enterprises, what excuse can we offer to the taxpayers if we say, "We will let them take your money to operate their business, but we will permit them to pay salaries ranging from $100,000 to $135,000 a year," which salaries could not be paid if the taxpayers of the United States did not supply the money?

That is the question, Mr. President. That is the issue, squarely presented. This amendment provides a limitation of $25,000 a year if the money of the taxpayers is used to operate the business.

It seems to me it is a vain and useless thing for us to reduce the salaries of Government employees in order to save money for the taxpayers, and take that same money that has been taken away from a Government employee and put it into the pocket of another man, working for a private business, supplied with taxpayers' money, and give him $135,000 a year, which has been taken out of the pockets of Government employees.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I think the Senator has misunderstood the purpose of the legislation. The salaries of these Government employees have been reduced so that these big men might not have to stand cuts.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is absolutely correct. We are supplying the money, by this enterprise, to operate failing businesses in the United States. If one of these businesses should fail, they could not pay the salaries of $135,000 they have paid. But the businesses have not failed, and they have not failed because we impose taxes upon the taxpayers of the United States to supply the money to operate them.

Now, the taxpayers' money is being used to pay these gentlemen, who draw salaries of $135,000 a year, and similar salaries. I have the record here showing salaries of $125,000 a year, $115,000 a year, $100,000 a year, $90,000 a year, $75,000 a year. Where do they get the money? It comes from the taxpayers of the United States.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator referred to very large salaries. Are they paid to officers of steamship companies which have borrowed from the United States?

Mr. BLACK. Many of the salaries are drawn by the officers of steamship companies which have borrowed from the United States, as well as to officers of railroad companies which have borrowed from the Government. As I understand it, for instance, the Pennsylvania Railroad has borrowed a rather large sum from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and we find that the president of the Pennsylvania Railroad is drawing $135,000 a year, the vice president of that road is drawing $58,000 a year, and various other officials are drawing various other amounts.

I have simply offered the amendment for the consideration of the Senate. I do not claim that we should attempt to fix the salary of any man working for any private business in the United States if the private business obtains its money from private sources. I do claim, however, that if we supply the taxpayers' money, we should come somewhere within striking distance of the same rule we apply to Government employees, because if the taxpayers' money operates the business, why should there not be some kind of restriction on the salaries that are paid the employees?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. BLACK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Austin	Copeland	Hebert	Patterson
Bailey	Costigan	Hull	Pittman
Barbour	Dale	Jones	Robinson, Ark.
Bingham	Davis	Kean	Robinson, Ind.
Black	Dickinson	King	Sheppard

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I want to offer the only amendment that has been offered so far that is agreeable to the Republican administration and the Democratic candidate for Vice President. I have reference to the loan feature. Speaker GARNER, of course, is favorable to a very broad loan plan. When I talked with him the other day he said, "Get it as broad as you can under the President's message." It was written by the Treasury Department and I desire to offer it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. Insert at the proper place in the bill the following:

To any corporation organized under the laws of any State or of the United States and having resources adequate for its undertaking for the purpose of enabling it to finance the construction, replacement, or improvement of an economically sound and useful project which is self-liquidating, the construction, replacement, or improvement of which will provide employment at an early stage for a substantial number of persons subject to the limitations of section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act as to the periods within which the corporation may make such loans and the amount thereof. For the purposes of this subdivision a project shall be deemed to be self-liquidating if the construction cost thereof will be returned within a reasonable period through profits or savings from the use thereof, and if not less than one-half of the construction cost thereof shall be furnished by the corporation through funds obtained otherwise than through the loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I want to offer a very short amendment. On page 16, line 4, before the word "in," insert the words "for a period of two years," so that the sentence would read:

For a period of two years, in unusual and exigent circumstances—

And so forth.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the Senate, in my judgment, is in undue haste to pass the pending measure. However, I understand some of the reasons, and will endeavor to accommodate myself to the prevailing desire, subject to the reserved right to discuss briefly the general problem of unemployment relief.

The present Congress, like the runner who has finished his race, shows signs that it has spent its strength. It is highly regrettable that the bill we are considering, by concerted agreement, implied if not expressed, between leaders on both sides of the Chamber and the Chief Executive at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue, is regarded as the hurried prelude to the assured and prompt adjournment of this session of Congress. In contrast, I wish for one, to go on record at this time as opposed to adjournment while present farm, industrial, and business distress continues unabated. A brief recess of Congress, if necessary, yes, but no adjournment should be sanctioned until we may face our home folks and the general public with self-respect arising from legislative relief efficiently and constructively extended to millions of Americans, encompassed by want and distress in every part of our unhappy country. Indeed, if our eyes were, as they should be, undimmed, our spirits unflagged, our hearts intelligent and undaunted, we must think only and unrestingly of necessary steps, however unprecedented and original, for conquering our economic depression.

THE PRESENT CRISIS

It ought to be evident to all of us that present economic conditions may not indefinitely continue their disastrous downward course without eventually threatening our self-governing traditions and institutions. Conservatively estimated, more than 10,000,000 of our countrymen, who crave work, not charity, are to-day marking time in enforced and despairing idleness in this naturally fairest, richest, best organized, most capably populated land of the globe. Adding dependents to the unemployed, approximately one-fourth of our far-flung, resourceful, and loyal people know not where to turn to gather the barest necessities of life by willing toil.

Such facts spell indescribable misfortune and grief. They no longer need interpretation. Their mandate is as resistless as it is alarming. Confronted by them, no responsible person will longer hesitate.

It is my purpose to vote for the pending measure, whether praise for it goes to Democratic leadership or to the administration, because of the conviction that it is on the whole acceptable to the Senate, and, in spite of manifest and various defects, comes nearer the sort of legislation we should have enacted six or seven months ago than any which Congress has approved in that period.

OBLIGATIONS OF CONGRESS

My chief objection to the pending bill is that it promises to be inadequate for the attainment of its great ends. If it had been enacted months ago, it might have pressed us nearer its designed purpose. Unfortunately, in the months since this Congress assembled industrial and other economic conditions have continued downward until there is reason to believe that no legislation Congress now plans will do more than render fleeting benefits in the midst of our present widespread anxiety and distress.

It was our clear duty when we met last December, after more than two years of panic conditions and in the midst of intolerable suffering due to unemployment among our citizens, to put through without delay two classes of remedial Federal undertakings.

First, we should have given substantial Federal aid to States and municipalities—not in the form of loans, as provided by the bill on which we are to vote to-night, but through direct Federal grants—to bridge the present unemployment emergency and provide the necessities of life for stricken victims of our unprecedented depression. Some of us at the beginning of this session of Congress vigorously, but vainly, urged such action on an unresponsive Senate and on short-sighted industrial leadership. One almost despairs of the ability of America's industrial and political generals to save America in its present crisis when it is remembered that it has taken more than six months to convince our leadership of the necessity for action and to whip into shape for immediate passage this grudging and compromise measure for Federal aid to idle and suffering but self-respecting Americans. Yet doubtless there is reason for some thanksgiving that we are doing, however poorly, in July what we should have done, but did not do, in better fashion in the preceding January.

Such facts spell indescribable misfortune and grief. They no longer need interpretation. Their mandate is as resistless as it is alarming. Confronted by them, no responsible person will longer hesitate.

The second legislative commitment we should long ago have made, and which to-day we are only partially conceding, is for immediate construction of needed public works, calculated to give direct and indirect employment to idle persons in every part of America. Such public construction, if early undertaken and consistently pressed in the past few months, would doubtless have done much to start the restoration of industrial activity and to promote farm and other community benefits through higher commodity prices, stimulated by the demand for necessaries of life from newly employed workers and by moderate and controlled credit expansion due to useful governmental expenditures.

It is deplorable that these legislative measures, long retarded and now only haltingly and half-heartedly favored, have been so long delayed. Indeed, it is questionable whether, coming now, they will operate to produce a fractional part of the benefits which would have accrued from their early and large-scale initiation. Let us, however, be grateful for relatively small achievements and rejoice that the educational process has so far advanced that public opinion at last begins to recognize the necessity for Federal participation. Perhaps by the time Congress again meets to consider the state of our public business economic events beyond our control will have convinced the most conservative that heroic legislative remedies are necessary to deal with the unemployment demands of our economic catastrophe.

Our greatest difficulty and danger spring from the limitations of large-scale government. Our education too often trails behind our need for action. Federal aid to States and municipalities and a comprehensive building program to be most effective should have been launched not less than seven months ago. Some saw then what all recognize now. Those precious months have been lost. Confidence and morale have been repeatedly shocked and shattered. To-day we are prepared to move on old lines, even when later necessities drive us in new directions. Unless we face our changing environment, Congress next December may find our present campaign plans wholly insufficient to cope with gathering storms. Certain it is that the indirect methods which we have pursued during the seven months of the present session of Congress have failed to halt the advance of the depression.

FAILURE OF RELIEF PROGRAM

Some outstanding reasons for the downfall of the administration's program ought now to be evident to all. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation was the first legislation urged on the attention of Congress by the administration, with its half-billion dollars of capital stock subscribed by the Federal Treasury, and with authority to extend credit through notes or other obligations in the amount of one and one-half billion dollars, which will doubtless be increased under the latest relief bill. The Reconstruction Finance act was designed to aid banks, trust and insurance companies, and other financial institutions, so that they might in turn extend credit to corporations experiencing business troubles by loaning money to assure industrial activity.

The Glass-Steagall bill was enacted shortly thereafter for the purpose of increasing the discounting and loaning capacities of banks associated with the Federal reserve system. Its definite aim was to release frozen assets of member banks and thus permit large bank credits so that business men and manufacturers may have less difficulty in procuring loans.

These two measures furnish the key to the administration's reconstruction program, which, by various legislative devices, looks to the extension of credit at the top of our industrial structure, and among a limited number of industrial and business leaders, on the assumption that if they are bolstered up by Federal credit they will pass along to general business and through industrial circles the advantages of their own improved and more or less guaranteed financial status.

CREDIT TO PURCHASING POWER

It now is evident that the program is fundamentally defective in that it fails to extend credit, except in a highly restricted way, to countless farmers and workers and ordinary business men, the overwhelming majority of our people, on whom rest the final burdens of taxation and from whom springs our ultimate hope of revived industrial prosperity. Granting credit to production, we have held it back from purchasing power. Never has America so vividly proved as in the last three years the indispensable importance of the many to the few. Those who believe that America's prosperity is controlled by the well-being of a few financial and industrial leaders have been repeatedly refuted by the events of recent months. Manifestly something more fundamental is needed than a further bolstering up of bankers and industrialists. Modern industrial prosperity is as surely rooted in the people as is genuine political democracy.

One of the apparent explanations of the breakdown of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been its occasional surrender to industrial and financial selfishness under the spur of "rugged individualism" and "individual initiative." Certain unexpected and unduly preferential loans by that corporation—several million dollars out of more than $17,000,000 to take care of prior advances by Morgan & Co. and other New York financial concerns, and the shockingly discriminatory loan of $80,000,000 to save and bolster up the Illinois bank of former Vice President Dawes, recently retired head of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation—are regrettable illustrations of one reason why the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has done less good by far than it might have achieved. Private profit, as too often in our history, has been permitted to subordinate general welfare.

Notwithstanding these almost unbelievable abuses of public confidence, the Federal Reconstruction Corporation has in fact done much to prevent a collapse of banks, including savings banks, insurance companies, and other financial institutions, in which, after all, the hard-won earnings of the American people are largely stored. Yet its possibilities for public service, as already indicated, were limited because the restoration of farm, business, and general industrial activities depends increasingly upon the revival of purchasing power among the many millions employed and unemployed in this country. The vicious circle is known to everybody. Those who are idle can not buy, and without consuming markets our industries will not produce. Resumption of industrial activity, therefore, depends on revival of purchasing power. Everyone knows that we have in America to-day the same mechanical equipment, the same natural resources and as much available labor as we had in the hurried days of boasted prosperity of 1928 and early 1929. Yet many of our factories are silent, our food is unsold, and the hungry walk our streets. Plainly, what we in part require is an adequate stimulus to purchasing power, accompanied by confidence in the country's early recovery before our industrial wheels may be expected once more to begin to revolve with increasing rhythm and efficiency.

CONSUMERS' CREDIT

What I have said is preliminary to stating that my main object in rising at this late hour is to make brief reference to the type of legislation which Congress should consider enacting before it concludes its labors and adjourns. Less than two weeks ago, on July 1, the able Representative from New York, Mr. LAGUARDIA, and I introduced in the two Houses of Congress a measure sponsored by the Railway Labor Executives' Association of this country. That association represents, as Members of the Senate know, the 21 standard railroad labor organizations of America.

The purpose of the legislation, as briefly explained heretofore to the Senate, is through a corporation analogous to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, to extend credit to the unemployed heads of families throughout the United States. I ask leave to place in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks, for brevity and without enlarging on the discussion, a copy of the bill which has been introduced, together with a statement including a brief review of its contents, section by section, as recently given, in testimony before the Manufactures Committee where the bill is pending, by an exceptionally equipped representative, the chief counsel, of the railroad brotherhoods of this country, Attorney Donald R. Richberg of Chicago. Mr. Richberg is largely responsible for the form in which this measure has been drafted and has appeared in support of it before the Senate Committee on Manufactures on behalf of the 21 standard railroad labor organizations and other groups of American citizens who desire the enactment by Congress without delay of some such Federal legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

(See Exhibits A and B.)

SENATE BILL 4947

Mr. COSTIGAN. The bill to which I have referred, and which Mr. Richberg clearly summarizes, as shown in the material appended to my remarks, is known as S. 4947. I shall not repeat what Mr. Richberg has more adequately stated beyond saying that the corporation to be created under the measure is similar to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It is termed "the United States Exchange Corporation." Its capital stock is the same as that of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and is similarly subscribed by the Federal Treasury. The number of directors to be appointed, outside of certain ex-officio members, would be approximately the same as for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The bill provides for a quick survey of the pressing need for necessaries of life, the products of our industries, on the part of the now unemployed workers of the country, and provides for an extension of credit to such unemployed workers for a six months' period of $300 per family head, or not to exceed $500 per family. Such credit is to be extended concurrently with the giving of notes for repayment by the heads of families, and deductions to apply on the notes will be made from wages when earned. The credit certificates to be issued by the corporation, if the bill becomes law, would be available for the purchase and movement of necessary commodities from those manufacturers and transporters of goods who would consent, under licenses for that purpose, to accept the credit certificates in payment. The bill provides for the issuance of debentures and other obligations by the corporation, and without any involved procedure being specified would look to the use of State and municipal agencies to assist in achieving the ends of the legislation.

Aware, as I am, of the insistent desire for an early recess or adjournment this evening, let me merely add to these hasty references to the contents of this Senate bill now before the Committee on Manufactures, that its underlying purpose, as stated in the recent hearing held concerning it, is to utilize Federal support as the only adequate source of credit available substantially to increase purchasing power and to stabilize general business. Increased commodity prices and rapidly enlarged employment are expected to result from the legislation as a result of the orders which will be placed for the long-delayed necessaries of life. The bill is an effort to translate consumers' needs into purchasing power by means of Federal credit for all the idle heads of families who are normally employable. This means giving credit to purchasing power where purchasing power counts.

VIEWS ON RELIEF FROM DEPRESSION

In support of what has been outlined as to the desirable next legislative step, permit me to say that there is growing agreement among many thoughtful persons to the effect that only by the use of credit on a national scale to bring about a large increase in purchasing power may we hope to check the continuing downward spiral of our depression.

Let me briefly quote some recently expressed views, without, of course, attempting to commit the authors to any particular remedial legislation. Speaking at the University of Virginia on July 11, Mr. Paul Mazur, an investment banker of New York, associated with Lehman Brothers, voiced the following views:

> Unless the volume and price level of American business improve within the next year, there is nothing to prevent a holocaust among bondholders that will beggar description and be as free from the administration's protection as the unemployed are apparently free of its assistance.
> There are those, called deflationists, who sitting in well upholstered chairs, secure in their possession of tax-exempt and gold securities, look upon an angry and hungry world, and preach with equanimity the necessity of complete liquidation, bare subsistence levels for labor, and cancellation of private industry debts to bondholders, leaving only gold and Government securities secure and untouched.
> These men are enemies of our present economic system, for there is danger in their assumption that starvation will be accepted with equanimity by the masses. They are foolish capitalists, for they fail to realize that the profits of the capitalist are in the long and short run dependent upon the welfare of the masses. And they are foolish hoarders or owners of Government securities, for gold will be of little value in a crippled social economy, and governments will become hopelessly bankrupt in a state that is semiparalyzed economically.
> Capitalism has failed to realize that economics is still concerned with the barter of goods, that money and credit are mechanisms to facilitate the exchange of products; that production is fundamentally for consumption, and not consumption for production.
> We have built production machinery with religious fervor and we have neglected consumption, upon which the output of production is finally dependent. We have created a banking and financial policy to stimulate production without parallel development of the consumption mechanism.
> The demand for credits was diminished by a thoroughly contracted business and thoroughly contracted business converted usually acceptable risks into unbankable transactions. The Federal reserve has purchased over a billion dollars of securities from Government bondholders and during the period of purchase business has continued in its uninterrupted trend downward.
> Who is going to do the necessary buying to stimulate demand, to make business better, prices higher? Individualism apparently offers little prospect of enticing even the heroic industrial leader who believes in the principle of improving business through his own activities but who can not risk his cash reserves for an individual effort that is too likely to prove entirely inadequate.
> Government alone has the power of credit. It alone can have the courage to embark upon a plan of stimulating activity. It is collectivism and as such it has the instruments and the power to do what should, what must, be done, but what no individual man or corporation may dare to do.

At a special meeting in New York City of the Taylor Society, April 14, 1932, Dr. Virgil Jordan, economist of the McGraw-Hill Publishing Co. and for some nine years chief economist of the National Industrial Conference Board, among other things, said:

> All of the administration measures so far taken * * * are endeavoring to support security values or debt claims by use of public credit and to put into operation again the old stock market investment banker theory of prosperity, which is as dead as the dodo.
> They have failed completely, and their collapse has demonstrated the fundamental defect in the principle of stabilization by general credit control; namely, that it is quite as important who uses bank credit as how much there is. In other words, the effect of bank credit on price levels, production, consumption, and employment depends upon the channels in which it circulates, and it can influence them only through the consumer market.

In a similar vein Dr. William T. Foster, the economist, addressing the meeting of the Taylor Society in April of this year, said:

> Industry fails to employ more men and produce more goods solely because it can not sell the goods. It can not sell the goods considered as a whole at the going price level—this, of course, does not apply to every commodity—solely because the consumers who want the goods lack the currency and credit wherewith to buy the goods.

Mr. President, coming more immediately to the proposed legislation, Senate bill 4947, I have just received from Dr. Isador Lubin, one of the highly regarded and able economists associated with the Institute of Economics in this city, a letter which forcefully presents in understandable terms the argument for the type of measure sponsored by Representative LAGUARDIA and myself. The particular measure I am discussing is urged to supplement the relief legislation the Senate is now considering. With the permission of the Senate, I quote from Doctor Lubin's letter three suggestive paragraphs:

> The passage of the Wagner bill [referring, I believe, to the measure now before the Senate] will in a measure be a move in this direction. The use of Federal credit in mobilizing stagnant and frozen purchasing power and the distribution of this purchasing power through governmental expenditure on public works and unemployment relief should result in the immediate demand for commodities and should stimulate productive activity. If those in whose hands is vested the administration of the provisions of the Wagner bill will act with speed and alacrity much may be done during the coming months to offset the toboggan course which industry has taken during the past six months. (As you probably already know, the Index of Manufacturing and Mineral Production, as published by the Federal Reserve Board, fell from 72 in January, 1932, to 61 in May, 1932, a decline of almost 15 per cent.)

I believe, however, that the procrastination and delay that have attended the passage of the Wagner bill have to a significant degree lessened the efficacy of this measure and that it will have to be supplemented by further action. If the Federal Government would transfer its credit to its citizens, so that they might purchase those commodities essential to the maintenance of their health and efficiency, an immediate stimulation of industry should follow. Such an extension of credit should result in a greatly stimulated demand for consumption goods and the employment of labor in those industries which produce, transport, and distribute such goods. It should revive also those industries which produce raw materials used in the making of consumption goods. The reemployment of labor which should follow such action would at the same time create the wherewithal to liquidate the loans advanced by the Federal corporation which you seek to create. As such loans were liquidated the corporation, by retiring its bonds, would turn back into its normal channels such credit as it had absorbed, making it available to meet the demands of private industry as revival progressed. There will, of course, be losses, but these, I am convinced, will be insignificant as compared with the gains that would inure if revival is hastened by even a single week.

In conclusion may I emphasize that without a radical upward turn in the price level I see no way of averting further economic disintegration. There is nothing on the economic horizon which presages such an upward turn. I am persuaded further that automatic adjustments have already proceeded to a point where reflationary measures would yield handsome results in greater production, larger employment, and increased tax revenues. The creation of an exchange corporation to transfer the credit of the Federal Government to consumers until such time as the latter find reemployment would be an effective mechanism in bringing about the necessary rise in prices.

Mr. President, it is doubtless desirable to have the entire letter of Doctor Lubin printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter entire is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 12, 1932.

Senator EDWARD P. COSTIGAN,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In reply to your request for my opinion on the probable effectiveness of S. 4947 in alleviating the present economic stress, let me state at the outset that in the limited time available I have been unable to give much thought to the administrative features of the bill. I must confine my remarks to the economic aspects of your plan to make consumer credit available to those whose purchasing power has been depleted.

The economic fraternity is to-day divided into two schools of thought. The first holds that the present depression will come to an end only after deflation has run its complete course. Behind this philosophy lies the idea that the Government should play no part in checking the course of economic events and that the so-called automatic process of readjustment should be permitted to go on uninfluenced by "artificial" factors. This automatic process, as is patently evident, will involve tremendous losses and acute suffering. It will require a degree of deflation far more widespread and devastating than has yet occurred. Not only will it require further drastic reductions of wage rates and public-utility rates but also a radical cutting down in all fixed charges. Under our existing economic system these things can be accomplished only by widespread insolvency and financial reorganization. With the drastic deflation of all costs and the cutting down of fixed charges, it is held, private industry will find opportunities to produce more profitably, thus increasing employment and the demand for credit.

The situation in which we find ourselves to-day is certainly an anomalous one. On the one hand, the so-called automatic process is at work; on the other, such governmental action as has thus far been taken tends to freeze one set of prices and thus force other prices lower than they might otherwise have to go. I have in mind particularly the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, whose actions, by keeping certain of our industries solvent, result in keeping certain fixed charges from being cut down or eliminated through bankruptcy, thereby keeping costs up, while other industries, ineligible for Government aid, find receiverships the only means of relief. This is not to say that the policies embodied in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act are not to be commended. However, in the realization of the constructive results of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation's policies, as, for example, the savings of the equities of educational and philanthropic institutions, of bank depositors and insurance policy holders, we should not forget that we are delaying the readjustment which, according to the upholders of the philosophy of the "automatic process," can come only after overhead charges have been deflated sufficiently to bring the operating costs of those industries which are being saved from bankruptcy by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation into line with existing commodity prices.

In contrast to the so-called automatic school are those economists—and I venture to say that they are in the majority—who insist that our civilization can avoid the chaos and suffering which must necessarily accompany further deflation and bankruptcy by raising the level of those prices which have been drastically deflated to a point where they will be in line with those prices which have not felt the full force of the present deflation. In other words, the "reflation" school holds that by injecting sufficient purchasing power into the economic system the demand for the products of our industries will be so increased that production will once more become profitable.

Opinion varies as to the manner in which such purchasing power should be injected into the economic system. Suggestions along this line are too numerous to be elaborated at this point. The most prominent of the measures that had this end in view were, of course, the Glass-Steagall Act and the open-market purchase activities of the Federal reserve system. Both of these were based on the theory that if sufficiently large reservoirs of credit were created, the banks of the country would be in a position to advance loans to industry in sufficient quantities to stimulate the demands for raw materials and labor and thereby hasten business revival. The failure of these expedients to stimulate industry is, as I see it, to be explained by the fact that private industry will not assume the risks involved in borrowing even under easy conditions at a time when it sees little prospect of an outlet for its products. Moreover, easing the conditions of our banks avails little when, because of uncertainty as to future prices, everyone, including the banks themselves, strive to get out of debt. The failure to raise prices and stimulate output through the medium of enlarging the reservoir of credit available to industry necessitates an attack upon the problem from the other end. That is to say, if credit can not be injected into the system through the factory and the mine, it should be injected through the channels of ultimate consumption. This, as I understand it, is the purpose of your bill.

The passage of the Wagner bill will in a measure be a move in this direction. The use of Federal credit in mobilizing stagnant and frozen purchasing power, and the distribution of this purchasing power through governmental expenditure on public works and unemployment relief should result in the immediate demand for commodities and should stimulate productive activity. If those, in whose hands is vested the administration of the provisions of the Wagner bill will act with speed and alacrity, much may be done during the coming months to offset the toboggan course which industry has taken during the past six months. (As you probably already know, the Index of Manufacturing and Mineral Production, as published by the Federal Reserve Board, fell from 72 in January, 1932, to 61 in May, 1932, a decline of almost 15 per cent.)

I believe, however, that the procrastination and delay that have attended the passage of the Wagner bill have to a significant degree lessened the efficacy of this measure and that it will have to be supplemented by further action. If the Federal Government would transfer its credit to its citizens so that they might purchase those commodities essential to the maintenance of their health and efficiency, an immediate stimulation of industry should follow. Such an extension of credit should result in a greatly stimulated demand for consumption goods and the employment of labor in those industries which produce, transport, and distribute such goods. It should revive also those industries which produce raw materials used in the making of consumption goods. The reemployment of labor, which should follow such action, would at the same time create the wherewithal to liquidate the loans advanced by the Federal corporation which you seek to create. As such loans were liquidated, the corporation, by retiring its bonds, would turn back into its normal channels such credit as it had absorbed, making it available to meet the demands of private industry as revival progressed. There will, of course, be losses; but these, I am convinced, will be insignificant as compared with the gains that would inure if revival is hastened by even a single week.

In conclusion, may I emphasize that without a radical upward turn in the price level I see no way of averting further economic disintegration. There is nothing on the economic horizon which presages such an upward turn. I am persuaded further that automatic adjustments have already proceeded to a point where reflationary measures would yield handsome results in greater production, larger employment, and increased tax revenues. The creation of an exchange corporation to transfer the credit of the Federal Government to consumers until such time as the latter find reemployment would be an effective mechanism in bringing about the necessary rise in prices.

As I have stated above, I have not gone into the question of the administration of such a corporation. If the necessary machinery can be worked out for the practicable administration of such a corporation, I believe that such a plan as you have proposed would be one of the most speedy and effective means for stimulating revival that has thus far been publicly discussed.

Cordially yours,

ISADOR LUBIN.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Without saying more, suffice it for the moment to let the argument in behalf of the kind of legislation which should be enacted rest at this point.

Mr. President, in addition, I request the incorporation in the RECORD, as part of my remarks, of a number of telegrams and other measages from different parts of the United States in support of the proposed legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PATTERSON in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit C.)

EXHIBIT A

A bill (S. 4947) to provide emergency financing facilities for unemployed workers, to relieve their distress, to increase their purchasing power and employment, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby created a body corporate with the name of United States Exchange Corporation (herein called the corporation), whose principal office shall be located in the District of Columbia, but which may establish or designate agencies or branch offices in any location within the United States under regulations prescribed by the board of directors.

SEC. 2. The corporation shall have capital stock of $500,000,000 subscribed by the United States of America, payment for which shall be subject to call in whole or in part by the board of directors. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500,000,000 for the purpose of making payments upon such subscription when called. Receipts for payments by the United States of America for or on account of such stock shall be issued by the corporation to the Secretary of the Treasury and shall be evidence of the stock ownership of the United States of America.

SEC. 3. The management of the corporation shall be vested in a board of directors consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Labor, who shall be members ex officio, and six other persons fairly representative of the interests of labor, management, and ownership in the principal economic activities of the Nation, who shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Of the nine members of the board of directors not more than five shall be members of any one political party. Each director shall devote his time not otherwise required by the business of the United States principally to the business of the corporation. Before entering upon his duties each of the directors so appointed and each officer of the corporation shall take an oath faithfully to discharge the duties of his office. Nothing contained in this or in any other act shall be construed to prevent the appointment and compensation as an employee of the corporation of any officer or employee of the United States in any board, commission, independent establishment, or executive department thereof. The terms of the directors appointed by the President of the United States shall be two years and run from the date of the enactment hereof and until their successors are appointed and qualified. Whenever a vacancy shall occur among the directors so appointed, the person appointed to fill such vacancy shall hold office for the unexpired portion of the term of the director whose place he is selected to fill. The directors of the corporation appointed as hereinbefore provided shall receive salaries at the rate of $10,000 per annum each. No director, officer, attorney, agent, or employee of the corporation shall in any manner, directly or indirectly, participate in the deliberation upon or the determination of any question affecting his personal interests, or the interests of any corporation, partnership, or association in which he is directly or indirectly interested.

The corporation shall have succession for a period of 10 years from the date of the enactment hereof, unless it is sooner dissolved by an act of Congress. It shall have power to adopt, alter, and use a corporate seal; to make contracts; to lease such real estate as may be necessary for the transaction of its business; to sue and be sued, to complain and to defend, in any court of competent jurisdiction, State or Federal; to select, employ, and fix the compensation of such officers, employees, attorneys, and agents as shall be necessary for the transaction of the business of the corporation, without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers or employees of the United States; to define their authority and duties, require bonds of them and fix the penalties thereof, and to dismiss at pleasure such officers, employees, attorneys, and agents; and to prescribe, amend, and repeal, by its board of directors, by-laws, rules, and regulations governing the manner in which its general business may be conducted and the powers granted to it by law may be exercised and enjoyed, including the selection of its chairman and vice chairman, together with provision for such committees and the functions thereof as the board of directors may deem necessary for facilitating its business under this act. The board of directors of the corporation shall determine and prescribe the manner in which its obligations shall be incurred and its expenses allowed and paid. The corporation shall be entitled to the free use of the United States mails in the same manner as the executive departments of the Government. The corporation, with the consent of any board, commission, independent establishment, or executive department of the Government, including any field service thereof, may avail itself of the use of information, services, facilities, officers, and employees thereof in carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 4. The policies and regulations of the corporation shall be determined by the board of directors with the aid and advice of an advisory council consisting of at least 18 and not more than 27 persons appointed by the President from nominations made, in such manner as the President shall direct, by organizations generally recognized as representative of the respective interests of labor, management, and ownership in the principal economic activities of the Nation (such as agriculture, manufacturing, mining, marketing, banking, and transportation). Members of the advisory council shall serve without compensation, but the expenses of the council and of its members in the transaction of its business shall be allowed and paid, on the approval of the board of directors of the corporation, under regulations prescribed by the board.

SEC. 5. It shall be the duty of the board of directors, with the aid and advice of the advisory council, immediately to make a survey, through existing public and private agencies of charitable relief, through State and municipal channels of information, and by means of its own delegated or established agencies, of the existing demands upon essential industries for the necessaries of life which are not being supplied because of the unemployment and lack of purchasing power of those persons responsible for self-support or for the support of dependents, and capable of such support. The nature and quantity of the goods and services thus in demand but not supplied shall be ascertained so far as possible, and classifications shall be made for the purpose of estimating—

(a) The character and volume of purchases which would result from the creation of a purchasing power of $500 for each of said unemployed persons to meet their urgent needs during the succeeding six months.

(b) The approximate increases of present employment which would result from creating sufficient purchasing power to satisfy the said existing demand for the respective goods and services so classified as to character and volume.

SEC. 6. On the basis of this preliminary survey, which shall be completed so far as possible within 30 days after the organization of the board of directors and the advisory council, the corporation shall arrange through its local agencies to extend credits as hereinafter provided to unemployed adults responsible for and capable of self-support in the amount of not more than $300 for individual support, plus not more than $100 for each dependent, but not exceeding a total of $500 for each household (as defined by general regulations of the corporation) for the specific purchase of goods and services designated in such manner and such detail as the corporation shall determine, for the purpose of combining so far as possible the satisfaction of the most urgent needs of said households with the maximum increase of employment through the increase of purchasing power so provided. Such credits shall be extended only upon promises to repay such advances in the manner and upon the terms hereinafter provided.

SEC. 7. In order to arrange to extend credits for the purchase of goods and services, the corporation through its agencies shall license all producers and distributors and transporters who will agree to accept its credit certificates at face value and to conform to its published regulations concerning the terms and conditions under which purchases shall be made and goods or services produced. No purchases shall be made or goods or service supplied on credit extended by the corporation or by its agencies except through such licensees; but all responsible producers, distributors, and transporters shall be entitled to become and to remain licensees upon the making of and during compliance with the aforesaid agreement with the corporation, and upon and during compliance with all other agreements with or regulations prescribed by the corporation.

SEC. 8. All licensees of the corporation shall be required to agree that wage scales and basic wage rates for employees shall not be reduced while acting as a licensee below the wage scales and basic wage rates effective on June 1, 1932, and that all employees shall be free from any form of employer coercion operating to prevent or hamper said employees in their efforts to organize themselves, to choose their own representatives, and by collective bargaining to fix the terms and conditions of employment (subject to the limitations upon compensation hereinbefore provided). This freedom from coercion shall not be subject to waiver by the employee as a condition of employment or otherwise. No licensee shall be required or permitted by virtue of any provision of this paragraph to modify or abrogate the provisions of any contract (or any modification thereof) now in effect or hereafter put in effect between an employer and its employees as the result of collective bargaining as heretofore described. These requirements shall be imposed in addition to conformity with any other regulations which the corporation shall make, and which the corporation is hereby directed and authorized to make, for the purpose of requiring goods and services to be furnished without discrimination at reasonable prices, which shall not exceed the cost of labor and materials and the lowest percentage of profit consistent with maintaining the solvency of a conservatively financed and economically operated enterprise.

SEC. 9. All applicants for credits extended by the corporation shall sign a note for each purchase from a licensed distributor in the form provided by the corporation, promising to pay to the corporation on or before 10 years after date the amount of the purchase with interest, for the first year at 1 per cent, for the second year at 2 per cent, and for the third year at 3 per cent, and thereafter at 4 per cent until paid, which note, together with a credit certificate in the same amount signed by an accredited agent of the corporation, must be deposited with the distributor upon ordering goods or services and transferred to the distributor by an indorsement on the note upon delivery of the goods. The aggregate amount of all credit certificates issued by the corporation agents in any State shall not exceed the total allotment of credit by the corporation to that State, and the total alloted credits for consumers shall be apportioned among the several States in approximately the proportion which their several populations bear to the total population of all the States according to the fifteenth decennial census, unless the corporation shall find and establish a more accurate method of apportioning relief in accordance with volume of demand. Proration of applications necessary because of insufficient credit to fill all demands, and other reductions or limitations necessary to apportion available credits most fairly to meet most urgent needs, shall be regulated by general regulations without any discrimination or preference between individuals or localities, except in accordance with such general regulations.

SEC. 10. Every licensee of the corporation shall agree, and all other persons (natural or corporate) shall also be required, when employing any person during the life of the corporation, to ascertain whether such person is indebted to the corporation upon a note or notes and shall require any such person so indebted, in accordance with the terms of his or her indebtedness, to authorize said employer to deduct 10 per cent of the wages, or 10 per cent of the current money value of any other compensation, paid from every payment to said employee and to remit the same to the corporation to be applied on said indebtedness. The corporation is hereby authorized to enforce this requirement by appropriate regulations to the full extent permitted or authorized by the laws of the several States and of the United States. The corporation shall give public notice of the termination of said requirement when no longer necessary to reimburse the corporation for all moneys expended.

SEC. 11. To aid in creating employment through extending the credits herein provided, the corporation is authorized to make loans to any licensed producer for the employment of workers or the purchase of materials to the extent of 75 per cent of the producer's interest in orders received from licensed distributors based on credit certificates. Such loans must be secured by assignment of the entire interest of the producer in the orders so received. Credit certificates accompanied by the corresponding purchasers' notes when presented to the corporation by licensed distributors in multiples of $50 will be honored by payment in cash or at the option of the corporation by transfer of the corporation bonds in the amount of the face value of said credit certificates and notes without interest. Any interest due on the transfer of the corporation bonds shall be accounted for by a credit or cash payment to the corporation. The corporation shall require satisfactory assurances that transporters and distributors have been or will be paid their share of the consumers' payment. The corporation is authorized by regulations duly published to provide for honoring credit certificates and notes in the hands of distributors or transporters when receiving satisfactory assurances that producers and transporters have been or will be paid their share of the consumers' payment.

SEC. 12. The corporation is authorized and empowered in its discretion to make loans to railroads and to other corporate enterprises essential to meet the reasonably anticipated future demand for necessary goods or services (when eventual payment is adequately secured in the judgment of the board of directors by the obligation of the borrower, with or without any collateral as may be deemed necessary) for the purpose of financing deferred maintenance of existing properties which will be essential to supply a reasonably anticipated future demand for necessary goods or services, but only upon the express condition that the proceeds of such a loan must be used exclusively for employment of additional labor and the cost of necessary additional supplies to be used by such labor, and on the further condition that such a borrower will conform to the standards required of licensees as hereinbefore provided in section 8 of this act.

No such loans shall be made except after a public report by a delegated agent of the corporation, or a report of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the case of railroads, showing the need for the proposed maintenance work and an estimate of the extent of increased employment which would result directly from the loan under consideration. No more than an aggregate amount of $250,000,000 shall be loaned for such purposes and no such loan shall be made after one year from the effective date of this act, unless previously applied for. Loans may be made by use of cash or bonds in the same manner as credit certificates may be honored, as provided in section 11 of this act and provision shall be made for their payment within not more than 10 years in equal annual or semiannual installments, and they shall bear interest at not less than 4 per cent or more than 6 per cent as may be fixed by the corporation from time to time by general regulation.

SEC. 13. The corporation is authorized and empowered, in its discretion and within its credit limitations, to make loans to responsible States or municipalities or their responsible agencies for the purpose of purchasing necessary goods and services for the charitable support of persons incapable of self-support and without adequate support from private sources when such persons because of incapacity for present or future self-support can not obtain credit under the provisions of this act or otherwise, when such responsible public agencies have exhausted other sources for public credit provided by State or Federal law and available to meet such needs. Such loans may be made upon the direct obligations of such public agencies upon such terms as may be fixed by general regulations of the corporation but not in an aggregate amount exceeding $250,000,000.

SEC. 14. The corporation is authorized and empowered, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to issue and have outstanding at any one time in an amount aggregating not more than five times its subscribed capital its notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations, such obligations to mature not more than five years from their respective dates of issue, to be redeemable at the option of the corporation before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated in such obligations, and to bear such rate or rates of interest as may be determined by the corporation: Provided, That the corporation, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may sell on a discount basis short-term obligations payable at maturity without interest. The notes, debentures, bonds, and other obligations of the corporation may be secured by assets of the corporation in such manner as shall be prescribed by its board of directors: Provided, That the aggregate of all obligations issued under this section shall not exceed five times the amount of the subscribed capital stock. Such obligations may be issued in payment of any loan authorized by this act or may be offered for sale at such price or prices as the corporation may determine with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. The said obligations shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed both as to interest and principal by the United States, and such guaranty shall be expressed on the face thereof. In the event that the corporation shall be unable to pay upon demand, when due, the principal of or interest on notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations issued by it, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the amount thereof, which is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and thereupon to the extent of the amounts so paid the Secretary of the Treasury shall succeed to all the rights of the holders of such notes, debentures, bonds, or other obligations. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, is authorized to purchase any obligations of the corporation to be issued hereunder, and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use, as a public-debt transaction, the proceeds from the sale of any securities hereafter issued under the second Liberty bond act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under the second Liberty bond act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of the corporation's obligations hereunder. The Secretary of the Treasury may, at any time, sell any of the obligations of the corporation acquired by him under this section. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the Secretary of the Treasury of the obligations of the corporation shall be treated as public-debt transactions of the United States. Such obligations shall not be eligible for discount or purchase by any Federal reserve bank.

Any and all notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations issued by the corporation shall be exempt both as to principal and interest from all taxation (except surtaxes, estate, inheritance, and gift taxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States, by any Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority; except that any real property of the corporation shall be subject to State, Territorial, county, municipal, or local taxation to the same extent according to its value as other real property is taxed.

In order that the corporation may be supplied with such forms of notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations as it may need for issuance under this act, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to prepare such forms as shall be suitable and approved by the corporation to be held in the Treasury subject to delivery, upon order of the corporation. The engraved plates, dies, bed pieces, and so forth, executed in connection therewith shall remain in the custody of the Secretary of the Treasury. The corporation shall reimburse the Secretary of the Treasury for any expenses incurred in the preparation, custody, and delivery of such notes, debentures, bonds, or other obligations.

When designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury, the corporation shall be a depositary of public money, except receipts from customs, under such regulations as may be prescribed by said Secretary; and it may also be employed as a financial agent of the Government; and it shall perform all such reasonable duties, as depositary of public money and financial agent of the Government, as may be required of it. Obligations of the corporation shall be lawful investments, and may be accepted as security, for all fiduciary, trust, and public funds the investment or deposit of which shall be under the authority or control of the United States or any officer or officers thereof.

SEC. 15. Upon the expiration of the period of two years within which the corporation may extend credit and make loans, or any extension thereof by the President under the authority hereby conferred to extend said period, the board of directors of the corporation shall, except as otherwise herein specifically authorized or authorized by further act of Congress, proceed to liquidate its assets and wind up its affairs. It may with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury deposit with the Treasurer of the United States as a special fund any money belonging to the corporation or from time to time received by it in the course of liquidation or otherwise, for the payment of principal and interest of its outstanding obligations or for the purpose of redemption of such obligations in accordance with the terms thereof, which fund may be drawn upon or paid out for no other purpose. The corporation may also at any time pay to the Treasurer of the United States as miscellaneous receipts any money belonging to the corporation or from time to time received by it in the course of liquidation or otherwise in excess of reasonable amounts reserved to meet its requirements during liquidations. Upon such deposit being made, such amount of the capital stock of the corporation as may be specified by the corporation with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury but not exceeding in par value the amount so paid in shall be canceled and retired. Any balance remaining after the liquidation of all the corporation's assets and after provision has been made for payment of all legal obligations of any kind and character shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts. Thereupon the corporation shall be dissolved and the residue, if any, of its capital stock shall be canceled and retired.

If at the expiration of the 10 years for which the corporation has succession hereunder its board of directors shall not have completed the liquidation of its assets and the winding up of its affairs, the duty of completing such liquidation and winding up of its affairs shall be transferred to the Secretary of the Treasury, who for such purpose shall succeed to all the powers and duties of the board of directors of the corporation under this act. In such event he may assign to any officer or officers of the United States in the Treasury Department the exercise and performance, under his general supervision and direction, of any such powers and duties; and nothing herein shall be construed to affect any right or privilege accrued, any penalty or liability incurred, any criminal or civil proceeding commenced, or any authority conferred hereunder, except as herein provided in connection with the liquidation of the remaining assets and the winding up of the affairs of the corporation, until the Secretary of the Treasury shall find that such liquidation will no longer be advantageous to the United States and that all of its legal obligations have been provided for, whereupon he shall retire any capital stock then outstanding, pay into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts the unused balance of the moneys belonging to the corporation, and make the final report of the corporation to the Congress. Thereupon the corporation shall be deemed to be dissolved.

SEC. 16. All the business of the corporation shall be public business and all decisions, regulations, and actions taken shall be public, except that executive sessions of the board of directors and advisory council may be held and the deliberations upon or tentative plans and administration of the details of its business need not be made public. The corporation shall make and publish a report quarterly of its operations to the Congress, stating the aggregate credits extended or loans made in each class of such credits or loans and the number of debtors by States in each class. The statement shall show the assets and liabilities of the corporation, and the first report shall be made on December 1, 1932, and quarterly thereafter. The report shall also show the names and compensation of all persons employed by the corporation whose compensation exceeds $400 a month.

SEC. 17. The corporation and its agencies shall be authorized to enlist the aid of volunteer workers employed without compensation to carry out the detailed administration of its business, but no such volunteer worker shall have any authority as an agent of the corporation, or of any of its agencies, to enter into any obligation binding upon the corporation except upon and after ratification in writing of such an obligation by a duly authorized agent of the corporation.

SEC. 18. (a) Whoever makes any statement knowing it to be false, or whoever willfully overvalues any security, for the purpose of obtaining for himself or for any applicant any loan, or extension thereof by renewal, deferment of action, or otherwise, or the acceptance, release, or substitution of security therefor, or for the purpose of influencing in any way the action of the corporation, or for the purpose of obtaining money, property, or anything of value, under this act, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both.

(b) Whoever (1) falsely makes, forges, or counterfeits any note, debenture, bond, or other obligation, or coupon, or credit certificate, in imitation of or purporting to be a note, debenture, bond, or other obligation, or coupon, or credit certificate, issued or authorized by the corporation; or (2) passes, utters, or publishes, or attempts to pass, utter, or publish, any false, forged, or counterfeited note, debenture, bond, or other obligation, or coupon or credit certificate, purporting to have been issued or authorized by the corporation, knowing the same to be false, forged, or counterfeited; or (3) falsely alters any note, debenture, bond, or other obligation, or coupon, or credit certificate, issued or purporting to have been issued or authorized by the corporation; or (4) passes, utters, or publishes, or attempts to pass, utter, or publish, as true any falsely altered or spurious note, debenture, bond, or other obligation, or coupon or credit certificate, issued or purporting to have been issued or authorized by the corporation, knowing the same to be falsely altered or spurious, or any person who willfully violates any other provision of this act, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

(c) Whoever, being connected in any capacity with the corporation, (1) embezzles, abstracts, purloins, or willfully misapplies any moneys, funds, securities, or other things of value, whether belonging to it or pledged or otherwise intrusted to it; or (2) with intent to defraud the corporation or any other body politic or corporate, or any individual, or to deceive any officer, auditor, or examiner of the corporation, makes any false entry in any book, report, or statement of or to the corporation, or, without being duly authorized, draws any order or issues, puts forth, or assigns any note, debenture, bond, or other obligation, or draft, bill of exchange, mortgage, judgment, or decree thereof; or (3) with intent to defraud participates, shares, receives directly or indirectly any money, profit, property, or benefit through any transaction, loan, commission, contract, or any other act of the corporation; or (4) gives any unauthorized information concerning any future action or plan of the corporation which might affect the value of securities, or, having such knowledge, invests or speculates, directly or indirectly, in the securities or property of any company, bank, or corporation receiving loans or other assistance from the corporation, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

(d) No individual, association, partnership, or corporation shall use the words "United States Exchange Corporation," or a combination of these four words, as the name or a part thereof under which he or it shall do business. Every individual, partnership, association, or corporation violating this prohibition shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.

(e) The provisions of sections 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, and 117 of the Criminal Code of the United States (U. S. C., title 18, ch. 5, secs. 202 to 207, inclusive), in so far as applicable, are extended to apply to contracts or agreements with the corporation under this act, which for the purposes hereof shall be held to include loans, advances, discounts, and rediscounts; extensions and renewals thereof; and acceptances, releases, and substitutions of security therefor.

The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved. If any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall for any reason be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder of this act, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

EXHIBIT B

STATEMENT OF DONALD R. RICHBERG, COUNSEL FOR THE RAILWAY LABOR EXECUTIVES' ASSOCIATION, AND OTHER ORGANIZATIONS SUPPORTING THE BILL

(Before a subcommittee of the Commitee on Manufactures of the United States Senate (Senators COSTIGAN, chairman, LA FOLLETTE, HATFIELD, CUTTING, and SHEPPARD).)

(Hearings upon "A bill to provide emergency financing facilities for unemployed workers, to relieve their distress, to increase their purchasing power and employment, and for other purposes" (S. 4947).)

This bill (S. 4947) which has been introduced by Senator COSTIGAN (and simultaneously by Representative LAGUARDIA (H. R. 12885)) undertakes to give immediately a purchasing power of from $300 to $500 to some 7,000,000 unemployed heads of families whereby they will be able to buy the necessities of life for themselves and their dependents during the next six months. It follows the lines of a bill which was recently indorsed by the Railway Labor Executives' Association. Since I had much to do with the drafting of that bill I should like to make it clear that the program for relief of unemployment and unemployment distress embodied in the bill before this committee is not the product of any one individual or any one organization. It is the product of the thought and labor of many economists, lawyers, bankers, and civic and industrial organizations which was finally translated into this bill by its official sponsors, Senator COSTIGAN and Representative LAGUARDIA.

Without committing anyone to the support of this measure, except those who formally have approved it, let me state that in my own work upon this bill I have consulted with and utilized the aid of not only the railway labor organizations and representatives of the American Federation of Labor, but also representatives of farm organizations, of the American Legion, of civic and charitable relief agencies, of the unpaid Chicago teachers, and individual leaders in finance and business, including the heads of some of the largest banks and business enterprises in this country. Therefore before discussing the details of this bill let me summarize the ideas which underlie this legislative proposal.

There is to-day general agreement upon two essential principles which are the foundation of this bill.

First, credit which is normally used to increase production should be used to increase purchasing power in this period of unprecedented business stagnation.

Second, the only remedy for unemployment is to put men to work.

In all the relief measures which have been given the serious consideration of Congress up to date are certain unhappy limitations:

1. Direct charitable relief only partly alleviates misery. It does not stop the continuing production of misery. A comprehensive national "dole," providing mere subsistence indefinitely for the unemployed, would not lift us out of the depression. A partial "dole" will only serve to dull our consciences and to detour our good impulses.

2. Loans to banks, railroads, and business enterprises may delay bankruptcies and receiverships but will not increase employment or purchasing power. The values of stocks and bonds are not enhanced when a corporation goes farther into debt. A bank is not made solvent by borrowing money with which to pay depositors. The loans of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may postpone but will not prevent disaster. Other more constructive forces must be invoked to reverse the downward trend.

3. Loans for new public or private construction should stimulate employment and increase purchasing power. But the merit of such a program depends largely on its volume and its speed, which are both uncertain. A little new work, a trickle of added purchasing power, will not bring about a general business revival. And without the stimulus of a rapid, widespread improvement it will become more and more difficult to induce either public or private borrowing for new production. There can be little encouragement to launch new self-sustaining, income-producing projects when billions of capital now invested in existing enterprises are idle and profitless because of the lost purchasing power of the masses.

The statements just made summarize the difficulty of financing new employment in order to create new purchasing power. The bill before you aims at eliminating this difficulty by reversing that economic process. This bill proposes to finance a new purchasing power and thereby to create new employment. It has one supreme merit in that its primary objectives will be attained and its primary benefits will reach the masses of the people. It will positively relieve the distress of a vast majority of the unemployed. It will furnish a nation-wide insurance against privation in the coming winter. It will increase employment rapidly and provide work in the near future for a large percentage of the unemployed. We may debate over its ultimate effects, but we can not argue long over the immediate results of its enactment.

Let us summarize the bill by sections:

Sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 create a corporation known as the United States Exchange Corporation, similar in organization and method of functioning to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation but having for its purpose putting credit behind purchasing power instead of behind productive power.

The corporation will have a board of directors consisting of the Secretaries of the Treasury, Commerce, and Labor and six presidential appointees. Also there will be an advisory council representative of all interests in the principal economic activities of the Nation. We may call this corporation USEC, which initials stand not only for its official name but also for its object—United States emergency credit.

Section 5 provides that the first duty of USEC will be to make an emergency survey (within 30 days) of the existing demands upon essential industries for the necessities of life which are not being satisfied because of lack of purchasing power, in order to determine the character and volume of purchases which would result from establishing a credit of $500 each for unemployed heads of households, and the maximum increases of employment which could be produced in response to such purchasing power.

Section 6 provides that on the basis of this survey USEC will arrange through local agencies to extend credits to cover six months' necessary purchases for unemployed heads of households in amounts not exceeding $300 for an individual, plus $100 for each dependent, but not exceeding a total of $500 for each household head.

Section 7 provides that USEC will license producers, distributors, and transporters who will agree to accept its credit certificates at face value and conform to regulations concerning the terms and conditions under which purchases shall be made and goods or services produced. All purchases on credits must be made through such licensed producers, distributors, and transporters.

Section 8 provides that such licensees must agree (1) not to reduce wage scales below those effective June 1, 1932, and (2) to conform to other regulations to insure the furnishing of goods and services at reasonable prices under proper conditions.

Section 9 provides that credit will be extended to applicants signing notes for repayment on or before 10 years after date, with a low but increasing rate of interest—1 per cent first year, 2 per cent second year, 3 per cent third year, and 4 per cent thereafter.

Payments will be made for goods by such notes accompanied by corresponding credit certificates signed by local agents of USEC. Credits shall be allotted to States either in accordance with their populations or the need for relief. If the total requests for credit exceed $3,000,000,000, reductions in amounts allotted to the States will be made proportionately.

Section 10 provides that borrowers employed during the life of USEC will agree, and their employers will be required, to deduct 10 per cent of wages, to be paid to USEC until any notes of such borrowers have been paid.

Section 11 provides that USEC will be authorized to extend credits to licensed producers for the employment of additional workers to fill orders received. Credit certificates after orders have been filled, accompanied by purchasers' notes, will be honored by USEC and paid either in cash or by transfer of USEC bonds equal in value to the face value of such credit certificates.

Section 12 provides that USEC will be authorized to make loans to railroads and other essential enterprises to finance deferred maintenance of existing properties essential to supply a future demand for necessary goods or services, the amount of such loans not to exceed an aggregate of $250,000,000. This will stimulate the immediate employment of several hundred thousand men.

Section 13 provides that where State or municipal relief agencies apply for credits to meet charitable relief needs for those incapable of self-support, after the exhaustion of other sources of relief, credits may be extended upon the notes of such State or municipal bodies, if the credit facilities of USEC have not been exhausted, to the extent of not more than $250,000,000. This will provide additional funds for direct charitable relief for those incapable of self-support.

Section 14 provides that USEC will be authorized to issue notes, debentures, and bonds to the amount of not more than five times its initial capital of $500,000,000, thus providing a total revolving fund of approximately $3,000,000,000.

Section 15 provides for winding up the affairs of USEC after a period of two years.

Section 16 provides that all business of USEC shall be public business and its actions shall be public.

Section 17 authorizes USEC to employ volunteer aids, without authority to obligate the corporation.

Section 18 makes provisions similar to those in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act for the protection of the operations of USEC from fraud or forgery and for enforcement of its regulations.

Permit me to repeat my conviction that the passage of such a bill as this will furnish a nation-wide insurance against privation in the coming winter, will increase employment rapidly, and will turn the tide of depression, restoring confidence and security to millions of American homes.

EXHIBIT C

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., July 12, 1932.

Hon. EDWARD P. COSTIGAN,
United States Senate:

I most heartily indorse Senate bill 4947 and respectfully urge its enactment into law before the adjournment of Congress. This character of legislation is urgent and necessary in order to meet the demands of the most serious unemployment situation.

WILLIAM GREEN,
President American Federation of Labor.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, July 6, 1932.

Hon. EDWARD P. COSTIGAN,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

The Railway Labor Executives' Association has unanimously indorsed your bill (S. 4947) to create the United States Exchange Corporation, to finance the purchase of necessities by unemployed heads of families. In addition let me personally assure you that the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, with 50,000 of its members now unemployed, appreciates and will support with its full power your bill as the only measure presented to Congress which makes adequate provision to relieve nation-wide distress and to revive industry through creating a new purchasing power for the suffering masses of the people.

D. B. ROBERTSON,
Chairman, Railway Labor Executives' Association, President Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, July 6, 1932.

Senator EDWARD P. COSTIGAN,
Chairman Subcommittee on Manufactures:

Respectfully urge that you do everything possible to expedite hearings and bring about passage before Congress adjourns of bill providing credit to unemployed workers. In my opinion the enactment of such bill will be materially helpful to the existing unemployment situation, and the same has the united support of our brotherhood and other railway labor organizations. Such organizations will be represented at the hearing before your subcommittee.

A. F. WHITNEY,
President Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen.

CHICAGO, ILL., July 7, 1932.

Hon. EDWARD P. COSTIGAN,
Chairman Subcommittee of Committee on Manufactures,
United States Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

The federated trades, representing hundreds of thousands of railroad employees, have been and are suffering unprecedented conditions, not having averaged more than 12 days' work per month during this depression. Approximately one-half have no employment. Those employed have loyally assisted their unemployed brothers. These workers have sacrificed and shared with their unfortunate brothers, thus bearing the burden of this depression, until they have reached, if not passed, the breaking point. Many unemployed after months of suffering were forced to accept outside charity. Outside relief funds are practically exhausted. Railroad employment is decreasing, not increasing. These highly trained, loyal workers do not want doles or charity; they want jobs in their industry, where they have dedicated their lives. The skill, experience, and loyalty of these and similar workers in industry everywhere constitutes at least as sound a basis of credit as any thus far recognized by our Federal Government. Senate bill 4947 constitutes the most constructive effort yet made to turn the tide of this depression, and we urge its immediate enactment into law.

B. M. JEWELL, President,
J. M. BURNS, Secretary,
Railroad Employees Department of the American Federation of Labor.

DETROIT, MICH., July 6, 1932.

Senator EDWARD P. COSTIGAN,
Senate Office Building:

In behalf of the 405,000 railroad maintenance-of-way workers employed on class I roads in the United States in the year 1929, of whom 200,000, or approximately one-half are now totally unemployed, with the others still in service working only part time, many of whom are on three days a week, I urgently appeal to your subcommittee for prompt and favorable consideration of Senate bill No. 4947 providing credit to unemployed workers. Our national headquarters is being overwhelmed with reports of intolerable distress on the part of our workers in all sections of the country. Immediate relief is imperative in the interest of humanity and our national security.

BROTHERHOOD OF MAINTENANCE OF WAY EMPLOYEES,
F. L. JOZDAL, President.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 6, 1932.

Hon. EDWARD P. COSTIGAN,
United States Senator,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

The International Association of Machinists urgently requests favorable action by Congress before adjournment on Senate bill 4947, the purpose of which is to extend credit to the unemployed workers of the Nation. Congress has extended relief in abundance to banks, industry in general, and the railroads. It is about time that the human element should receive some consideration and the extension of credit to unemployed heads of families will immediately put into circulation a chain of purchasing that can not fail to stimulate all industry. Starving women, children, and men must not be denied a reasonable opportunity to survive in this great country overflowing with everything but a little applied common sense and consideration for suffering humanity.

A. O. WHARTON, President,
International Association of Machinists.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, July 6, 1932.

Senator EDWARD P. COSTIGAN,
Senate Office Building:

Am advised that hearing has been called by Senate committee in connection with bill 4947, extending credit to unemployed workers. The many thousands of employees whom I represent urge you to do everything possible to expedite the hearing and pass the bill before Congress adjourns. The enactment of this measure into law will in a great measure relieve the present desperate situation of thousands of deserving citizens of the Republic and avert impending economic disaster.

GEO. M. HARRISON,
Grand President Brotherhood of Railway Clerks.

CHICAGO, ILL., July 6, 1932.

Hon. EDWARD P. COSTIGAN,
Chairman Subcommittee of Committee on Manufactures, United States Senate,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

The Chicago Federation of Labor heartily indorses Senate bill 4947 and urges its immediate consideration by your committee and passage before the adjournment of the present Congress. Hundreds of thousands are unemployed and the worst is yet to come. The passage of this bill will at least make it possible for them to secure the necessities of life without recourse to charity.

BUFFALO, N. Y., July 6, 1932.

Hon. EDWARD P. COSTIGAN,
United States Senate:

I understand hearings on bill to provide credit to unemployed workers will be held to-day. This bill holds out a ray of hope for the unemployed worker and appears to be the most practical move not only to assist the unemployed but to relieve the terrible stagnation of business throughout the country. I request that you do everything possible to expedite hearings in order that this bill may be passed before Congress adjourns.

THOMAS C. CASHEN,
President Switchmen's Union of North America.

CHICAGO, ILL., July 6, 1932.

Hon. EDWARD P. COSTIGAN,
Senate Office Building:

Alarming increase in unemployment demands heroic measures to prevent intolerable conditions developing coming winter. Some form of credit must be provided unemployed householders just as credit is now supplied corporations. Congress must act before adjournment. Our national credit can maintain population during crisis. Other means have utterly failed. Therefore must use national credit and Senate bill 4947 best way yet devised. Honest skilled workmen must be provided capital to carry on.

M. O. FISCH, Secretary.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, is there an amendment pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no amendment now pending.

Mr. CONNALLY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, line 3, it is proposed to strike out all of Title II down to and including line 10, on page 15.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to inquire the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, this amendment proposes to strike out all of Title II, with the exception of the amendment of the Senator from Virginia, which is section 208, and section 207, which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to sell obligations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. DILL. The Senator does not mean to strike out the amendment I offered, does he?

Mr. CONNALLY. To Title II?

Mr. DILL. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. No; it would not reach the Senator's amendment, because the amendment which I offer begins with Title II and strikes all out down to section 207 on page 15.

Mr. President, I offer this amendment because I have heretofore voted in the Senate for the appropriation of $300,000,000 for direct relief contained in Title I. It seems to be the desire of the Senate to retain Title III with relation to public works, and, so far as public works are concerned, I think that it is entirely justifiable to spend the Government's money on those that are desirable and necessary; but I am not in favor of increasing, by more than a billion additional dollars to what it already has, the spending power of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I am unwilling to vote to tax the American people to spend money on self-liquidating corporations such as those which are proposed; for instance, the building of a bridge across San Francisco Bay; the digging of a tunnel under the Hudson River, which, as I understand, is contemplated, and possibly the building of a bridge across the Mississippi River. The burdens of the taxpayers are already heavy; we have made them heavier, and I do not believe that we can bring prosperity back by taxing the people and squandering the money on so-called self-liquidating corporations which can not stand on their own legs and which as investments are not sufficiently attractive to secure private money for the purchase of their bonds. So I offer this amendment and ask for a vote.

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, all that I wish to say is that if this amendment shall be adopted there will be nothing left in the bill practically except $300,000,000 for relief of the destitute.

Mr. LONG. It would destroy the bill.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I quite agree with the statement of the Senator from New York.

Mr. LONG. It would ruin the bill.

Mr. McNARY. It would ruin the bill, of course.

Mr. WAGNER. May I make this added observation and then I am through, for this is not a time for discussion. This is one section the provisions of which are not a burden upon the taxpayers. This section provides for projects which will pay for themselves. It is the one section of the bill which does not mean any burden upon the taxpayers.

Mr. CONNALLY. I did not want to say anything further, but the remarks of the Senator from New York and the Senator from Oregon prompt me to say that I agree with them that if Title II be stricken out, there will be nothing left but the $300,000,000 and the public-works provision, and that is why I am offering the amendment. The Senators say that this is the only section of the bill that provides for projects which are self-liquidating and which will pay for themselves. If that be true, why have they not already been built? Why is it necessary to come to the Federal Treasury and get Federal money to build them? They are not self-liquidating, and all the bonds the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will float which will go into these self-liquidating corporations are obligations of the Government of the United States. Not a dollar's worth of these bonds for so-called liquidating corporations can be sold unless they bear the signature of Uncle Sam, and when the signature of the Government is attached to them they are put on the backs of the taxpayers of the United States, in addition to the burdens we have put on them through the bill we have passed imposing taxes on almost every conceivable source of revenue. That is why I offer the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas to the amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Austin	Dale	Hebert	Nye
Bailey	Davis	Hull	Patterson
Barbour	Dickinson	Jones	Pittman
Blaine	Dill	King	Robinson, Ark.
Bratton	Fess	La Follette	Robinson, Ind.
Bulkley	George	Lewis	Sheppard
Bulow	Glass	Long	Shortridge
Byrnes	Glenn	McGill	Steiwer
Cohen	Goldsborough	McKellar	Tydings
Connally	Gore	McNary	Wagner
Costigan	Hatfield	Moses	Watson
Couzens	Hayden	Norbeck

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Has the second call of the roll been made?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The call of the absentees has not been made. Nevertheless, the request made by the Senator from Arkansas is in order, no quorum having been developed upon the first call.

The clerk will call the names of the absentees. In the meantime, however, the order has been entered to carry out the purpose of the Senator from Arkansas.

The Chief Clerk called the names of the absent Senators; and Mr. BLACK, Mr. CAPPER, Mr. THOMAS of Idaho, Mr. TOWNSEND, and Mr. VANDENBERG answered to their names when called.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. FESS. I ask unanimous consent that the further operation under the order to the Sergeant at Arms be vacated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be entered.

The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] to the amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the proper place in the bill:

That there is hereby appropriated to the Treasury Department for the Public Health Service for special studies of and demonstration work in rural sanitation, including the purchase and distribution of medical supplies, and personal services for the fiscal years 1932 and 1933, $3,000,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for demonstration work in rural sanitation unless the State, county, or municipality agrees to pay such proportion of the expenses of such demonstration work as shall be required in regulations to be prescribed by the Public Health Service, in which due consideration shall be given to State and local economic conditions and human needs, the extent and circumstances of such cooperation in each case to be reported to Congress at the beginning of each regular session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia to the amendment.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, this work was commenced in 1927, following the Mississippi-flood disaster. The appropriation in that year from the Federal Government amounted to $385,000. There was contributed to the fund $1,000,000 from the Rockefeller Foundation.

This work has continued down to the present time. Twenty-one States were taken into the rural-sanitation work in 1930. The work has gone along, and the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service states that more effectual work has been carried on and there is less communicable disease among the citizenship of this country than at any other time. He accounts for this accomplishment because of the organization that has been made through this rural-health work.

I trust that those who are responsible for the bill will accept this amendment and that it will be the pleasure of the Senate to adopt it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, on page 8, line 16, after the words "convict labor," I move to insert: "(except those on probation or parole)." The purpose of that amendment is to carry out the policy that exists at the present time with respect to convict labor, which gives those who are on probation or parole an opportunity for rehabilitation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by providing for and expediting a public-works program."

Mr. WAGNER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be reprinted with the amendments of the Senate numbered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Mr. BLAINE introduced a joint resolution (S. J. Res. 201) defining "annual leave" of Panama Canal and Panama Railroad Co. employees on the Isthmus of Panama, which was read twice by its title and ordered to lie on the table.

RECESS

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 8 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, July 13, 1932, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JULY 12, 1932

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. James A. McCarl, of the St. Aloysius Church, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Creator and Redeemer of the human race, we, Thy children, remembering that no one who has had recourse to Thee, implored Thy help, or sought Thy intercession was ever abandoned in this hour of turmoil, stress, and depression, raise our hearts and minds to Thee to ask Thy aid and assistance. Turn Thine eyes of mercy toward us, enlighten our understanding, guide our wills that we, who in human society have the grave responsibilities of the Government, may with Thy unfaltering assistance bring order out of chaos, peace out of restlessness, prosperity out of poverty. Grant, O Lord, to Thy children assurance of freedom and immunity from harm, give peace and order to all nations, and make the earth resound from pole to pole with one cry, "Praise be to God, our Almighty Father; to Him be glory and honor forever." Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for six minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had intended to recognize the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] for the purpose of calling up a conference report. After the conference report has been disposed of, it is the opinion of the Chair that the House might resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and allow the membership of the House, who desire to address the committee, to do so. That will give everybody equal opportunity.

The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Mississippi.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 11897) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes; and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, pending that, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-two Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 114]

Davis	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pratt, H. J.	Wingo
Doutrich	Kennedy	Ragon	Withrow

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and twenty-one Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi calls up a conference report on the bill H. R. 11897 and asks unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11897) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 20, 41, 45, 57, and 86.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 5, 6, 9, 19, 23, 25, 26, 27, 29, 30, 31, 33, 35, 37, 38, 39, 40, 46, 48, 49, 50, 53, 55, 56, 59, 63, 77, 83, 84, and 85, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "including not to exceed $2,365 for necessary per diem and traveling expenses in connection therewith"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to H. R. 11897, a bill making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 21, 22, 24, 28, 29, 30, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 42, 43, 44, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 58, 59, 61, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 81, 82, 83, 84, and 85: Redistributes to the appropriations from which transferred by the House the several amounts proposed by the House to be merged into a single appropriation for travel and restores the language with respect to travel omitted by the House by reason of such merger, as proposed by the Senate, applying, however, in each instance, except as to river and harbor and flood-control appropriations, a limitation that not to exceed the amount restored shall be available for travel expenses. The action recommended in the accompanying conference report preserves intact the total reduction of $1,129,745 proposed by the House. Amendments Nos. 59, 77, 78, and 82 involve other matters, as hereinafter explained.

On Nos. 9 and 17, relating to the appropriation for "Pay, etc., of the Army": Strikes out the qualification "of the line and staff," as applied to pay of commissioned officers, as such qualification might be construed to exclude the pay of officer instructors at the Military Academy, as proposed by the Senate; strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, the limitation proposed by the House on the detail of officers as military aides to civilian officials; limits the number of military attachés to 37, instead of 50, as proposed by the House, and no limitation, as proposed by the Senate, and reduces the number of Army bands to 83, as proposed by the House.

On No. 19: Strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, the House provision respecting the compensation of retired officers filling civil offices or positions. The matter is covered by section 212 (a), Part II, of the legislative appropriation act for the fiscal year 1933.

On No. 20: Strikes out the proposal of the Senate to permit officers of the Army to give approval to the issuance of publications in the interest of athletic contests or recreation at military posts.

On No. 23: Appropriates $30,000 for the apprehension of deserters, etc., as proposed by the Senate, instead of $110,000, as proposed by the House.

On No. 25: Strikes out the limitation proposed by the House upon the purchase of electric ranges for use where gas is available.

On No. 26: Appropriates $6,300,000 for clothing and equipage, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $6,776,519, as proposed by the House.

On No. 27: Appropriates $3,709,251 for incidental expenses of the Army, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $3,809,251, as proposed by the House.

On No. 31: Excepts motor-propelled vehicles procured solely for experimental purposes from the limitation upon the purchase of such vehicles, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 33, relating to the appropriation "Military posts": Continues available until expended unexpended balances of appropriations totaling $803,000 made available for construction at Marin County, Calif., by the second deficiency act, fiscal year 1931, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 41, relating to the appropriation for the Army Air Corps: Restores the proposal of the House fixing the minimum amount for expenditure for aviation fuel and oil, and for the repair and maintenance of airplanes and their equipment, spare parts, and accessories.

On No. 45, relating to the appropriation "Ordnance service and supplies, Army": Provides for the purchase of five convertible armored tanks, as proposed by the House, instead of for the procurement of tank or combat cars, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 46, relating to the appropriation "Repairs of arsenals": Makes such portion of $20,000 as may be necessary available for dredging, as proposed by the Senate, instead of setting aside such sum exclusively for such purpose, as proposed by the House.

On Nos. 56 and 56, relating to the National Guard: Qualifies the text, as proposed by the Senate, and authorizes the Secretary of War, as proposed by the Senate, instead of directing him, as proposed by the House, to make issues of surplus or reserve stores.

On No. 57, relating to the Reserve Officers' Training Corps: Restores the proposal of the House looking to the ultimate abolition of Air Corps, Medical Corps, Dental Corps, and Veterinary Reserve Officers' Training Corps units.

On No. 59, relating to the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice: Appropriates $33,650, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $28,650, as proposed by the House, an increase of $5,000, of which $3,750 is owing to the redistribution of travel funds, previously explained.

On No. 63, relating to the appropriation "Cemeterial expenses": Strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, the House provision prohibiting payment for steamship accommodations reserved and not used in connection with the pilgrimage of Gold-Star Mothers and World War widows.

On No. 77, relating to Alaska roads and trails: Appropriates $494,310, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $354,310, as proposed by the House, an increase of $140,000, of which $4,268 is owing to the redistribution of travel funds, previously explained.

On No. 78, relating to rivers and harbors: Appropriates $60,000,000 instead of $59,277,095, as proposed by the House, and $54,000,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 82, relating to flood control, Mississippi River and tributaries: Appropriates $32,000,000 instead of $31,773,775, as proposed by the House, and $31,500,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 86: Restores the House provision excepting the Secretary of War from the restrictions imposed upon the use of Government-owned motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles and prohibiting the assignment of such vehicles for exclusive use to other than medical officers on out-patient medical service, instead of the Senate substitute subjecting the Secretary of War to the restriction on using the vehicle assigned to him for other than official purposes and imposing no restriction upon the assignment of vehicles for exclusive use.

The committee of conference report in disagreement the following amendments of the Senate:

On Nos. 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, and 18, relating to the appropriation "Pay, etc., of the Army," being related to the question of the number of commissioned officers of the Regular Army on the active list to be provided for.

On No. 32, relating to the transportation of privately owned automobiles and the transfer of automobiles from the Regular Army to the civil components thereof or to nonmilitary activities.

On No. 54, relating to the interchange of appropriations.

On No. 60, relating to the manufacture and/or production of wearing apparel for enlisted men of the Regular Army in Government factories or establishments.

On No. 62, relating to the employment of a retired officer as superintendent of Arlington National Cemetery.

On No. 79, relating to the modification of the existing project for the improvement of the Miami River, Fla.

On No. 80, relating to the modification of the existing river and harbor project at Monroe Harbor, Mich.

On No. 87, relating to the conduct of post exchanges, branch exchanges, or subexchanges.

ROSS A. COLLINS,
HENRY E. BARBOUR,
FRANK CLAGUE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question upon the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. STAFFORD. Before the gentleman does that will the gentleman make some explanation of the agreed portion of the conference report that we may know just what was accomplished in conference and not rush it through in this pell-mell manner?

Mr. COLLINS. I shall be pleased to, but I thought the reading of the statement was for this purpose, I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SABATH. Does the gentleman actually believe any Member was able to obtain any benefit from the reading of the statement?

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, the chief points of difference are the amendments with relation to the commissioned-officer strength of the Army and an amendment placed on the bill in the House at the instance of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] relating to the manufacture of clothing for the Army. These are the two principal matters in disagreement, although there are some others.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. As to amendment No. 87, which bans the post exchanges from entering into a general department-store business, what attitude did the conference take?

Mr. COLLINS. It is my purpose to recede and concur with an amendment.

The matter to which the gentleman from Wisconsin refers is an amendment offered by Senator THOMAS. It contains a proviso that all branch exchanges and subexchanges located off of Government lands and outside of Government reservations and operated by private contract or agreement on a commission basis shall be closed and terminated as to such contract or agreement immediately.

We did not believe this provision should be in the amendment for it might provoke litigation and claims against the Government. We felt this part of the amendment should be eliminated.

With reference to the management and operation of post exchanges the amendment provides that these conveniences shall be for enlisted men and troops only. The conferees felt these conveniences should be extended to their families so that if a housewife wanted a bar of soap, for example, she would not have to go 2 or 3 miles to town to get it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Assuming the housewife also would like to have a radio or a piano, as was called to the attention of the special committee investigating Government competition with private business, would the amendment authorize a continuance of this practice?

Mr. COLLINS. The provision, in my judgment, does not allow any such practice as the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. STAFFORD. I rose largely to have the gentleman make some brief explanation of the conference report that has been agreed to, not of those items which are in disagreement.

I notice from a reading of the statement, for instance, amendment No. 57 as to Reserve Officers' Training Corps, that the endeavor of the House in seeking to curtail the activities of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps was virtually agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. COLLINS. That is right. The proposition relates to Air Corps, Veterinary, Dental, and Medical Corps units.

The position of the present Chief of the Air Corps and of the former Chief of the Air Corps is that air activities should not be continued as a part of Reserve Officers' Training Corps instruction. As to the other units, the House Committee on Appropriations took the position that we should not further train medical students, veterinarians, and dental students because there was not anything the Army was giving them that they did not already get, and therefore we ought to get rid of this expense. There seemed to be no opposition to this either in the House or on the part of the conferees of the Senate.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to make an inquiry as to a matter that was not referred to while the bill was under consideration in the House, namely, as to the appropriation providing for the pilgrimage of the gold-star mothers. Amendment No. 63 has some reference to transportation.

Can the gentleman inform the House when the pilgrimage that was authorized by the last Congress will be virtually ended so the Government will not be put to further expense for transporting the gold-star mothers to the battlefields of Europe?

Mr. COLLINS. As I understand it, available funds will become exhausted this year. The bill carried an amendment—and I assumed at first it was the amendment the gentleman had in mind—providing that steamship companies could not collect from the War Department for transportation reserved and not used.

The War Department advised the House Committee and also the Senate Committee on Appropriations that they have already entered into a contract reducing the cancellation period to 15 days before sailing, in view of which we permitted this amendment to go out.

Mr. STAFFORD. So it is the understanding that with this year the pilgrimages of gold star war mothers will end?

Mr. COLLINS. I would not say that. My impression is that there will be no funds available after this year.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. May I direct the gentleman's attention to amendment No. 21, which deals with the travel proposition. The gentleman will recall that an attempt was made in the House to reduce the original amount recommended by the committee. Through a great deal of misrepresentation and misunderstanding, as I believe, the amendment was voted down. Now, the Senate reduced that amount. Why did not the conferees recede and accept the Senate amendment?

Mr. COLLINS. Here was what occurred, I will say to the learned gentleman from New York: The House gathered together all travel items that appeared in the estimates and consolidated them into one item, so we could keep check on travel expenditures. Travel in the Army had reached the point where it was around $9,000,000, independent of water transportation. We felt it was desirable, in order to keep this travel item down, to consolidate all of the travel items so we could see readily exactly how much we were appropriating each year for travel. When the bill reached the Senate the War Department objected, or the Chief of Staff objected and insisted that the travel items go back as originally carried, so that nobody would know how much was being appropriated or how much would be expended; so that the sky would be the limit on travel if they wished to make it the limit.

At the conference I stated, and the other members of the subcommittee of the House stated, that we wanted to keep this travel item down and that we had deducted 25 per cent from the amount recommended by the Budget.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That was a reduction of about $1,200,000.

Mr. COLLINS. One million one hundred and twenty-nine thousand dollars. The Senate acceded to that view, but for some unknown reason they stated they wanted the travel items to go back as they were in the bill but consented to put a provision on each one of them that the travel allowed for the Army would not exceed the amount allowed by the House, which, instead of being liberal treatment of the War Department, was more restrictive than the House provision. You see, there could be interchangeability between the various branches of the War Department under the House provision but as it is there is no interchangeability on travel items as agreed to by the conferees.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The fact remains, nevertheless, that there is an appropriation of $4,126,865 for travel.

Mr. COLLINS. The same amount the House bill carried.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And which I attempted to reduce. The gentleman concedes that does not include water travel.

Mr. COLLINS. That is right.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Therefore, the exchange of troops from tropical stations, like Panama, Hawaii, and the Philippines, is not included in this $4,000,000.

Mr. COLLINS. That only covers the cost when commercial carriers are employed.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Most of this travel is simply the exchange of troops from one post to another within continental United States.

Mr. COLLINS. I should say so.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does it not occur to the gentleman that in this period of extreme economy—economy carried to an absurd degree, if you please—we could at least hold the Army static for one year without the necessity of exchanging from post to post, thereby saving a great deal of money.

Mr. COLLINS. I quite agree with the gentleman and I supported his amendment when it was offered. However, I think there is a further restriction on the travel item in the economy bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The amendment found on page 16 of the bill, put in by the Senate, I assume under the agreement will go out and the House language will be reinstated. Am I correct in that?

Mr. COLLINS. The gentleman has brought up a very good illustration. The language goes in, but a provision also goes in that expenditures may not exceed the amount carried in the House bill, and all of the others are on all fours with that.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will say frankly that under the report as it comes in we have to vote the whole matter up or vote it down. I will concede my helplessness in this situation, but I want to point out to the House that in view of the fact that it has saved to a degree that will perhaps disrupt the normal living conditions of thousands and thousands of Government employees this travel of the Army could easily have been reduced 50 per cent.

Mr. COLLINS. I am in entire sympathy with the gentleman's view on that. I will say further I hope the President under the economy bill will see that is done.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It would be entirely within his power, because it is under Executive order that these transfers from post to post are made. May I ask the gentleman if amendment No. 45 reinstates the House language as to tanks?

Mr. COLLINS. The House language as to tanks is reinstated.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. So that we may continue the experimental work on tanks?

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, as I understand, this authorizes the purchase of five tanks. The Senate provision allowed the Ordnance Department to experiment, but this allows the purchase of tanks from the Christie Co.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. As I understand, that is still in the experimental stage.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, the hearings disclose that the Government was experimenting with its own manufacture of tanks at Rock Island. Recently there was on exhibit here a complete machine manufactured at Rock Island, while the language of the bill permits the purchase of tanks from the Christie Co.

Mr. COLLINS. But the ones that the Ordnance Department is experimenting with are dual-purpose tanks, and they are in every way comparable to the Christie tanks.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was very much impressed with the tank, manufactured at the Rock Island Arsenal, which was on exhibit at the House Office Building.

Mr. COLLINS. Only that was not a tank. That was an armored car.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think we are all of the same mind, but, perhaps, we are expressing ourselves differently; in other words, has the experimental work on tanks been discontinued in the Government arsenal?

Mr. COLLINS. There is nothing in here that prevents that.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Except the money.

Mr. COLLINS. No; they can use their money for that purpose.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. For experimental work on tanks?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. Do I understand we are buying these Christie tanks under this provision?

Mr. COLLINS. We put aside $200,000 exclusively for that purpose.

Mr. CONNERY. And the Christie tank will be bought?

Mr. COLLINS. We have set aside $200,000 exclusively for that purpose.

Mr. CONNERY. It does not have to be, but it will be.

Mr. COLLINS. I imagine it will be. I will say that the Christie tank is, in my judgment, the outstanding invention in warfare since the World War.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. True; but is there anything in this bill that commits the War Department or the Congress, as a matter of policy, to the continuance of this one particular type of tank regardless of what may be developed this year or next year?

Mr. COLLINS. I do not think it is the intention of the War Department, or ever has been the intention of the War Department to even manufacture or purchase any tank except a tank of the Christie type. The War Department claims to have the right to manufacture that particular type of tank. I understand Mr. Christie says they do not have that right.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This is what I am trying to bring out. The great argument that was urged on the floor of the House, and I believe in committee, in favor of the purchase of these five particular Christie tanks was that they had experimented, that they had built the dies and tools and jigs to manufacture them, and that unless this order was placed they would suffer irreparable losses. Now, next year the same argument may be made, that having developed their plant so as to manufacture these five tanks, we ought to place a larger order with them. What I want to know and make clear for the RECORD is that by this appropriation neither Congress nor the department is committed, morally or in any other way, to a continuance of the use of this particular type of tank, if a better tank is developed in the meantime. Am I correct in this statement?

Mr. COLLINS. The gentleman is absolutely correct about that.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WOODRUM). The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 8: On page 8, line 24, after the word "of," insert "not to exceed an average of 12,000 commissioned officers up."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. COLLINS moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 8, and concur in the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Not to exceed an average of 12,000 commissioned officers up to and including September 30, 1932, and after such date up to and including June 30, 1933, of not to exceed 11,000."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I want to state to the House that amendment No. 8 and amendments Nos. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, and 18 all relate to one proposition, namely, the size of the commissioned strength of the Army. Whatever we do on amendment No. 8 should govern our action on all the other amendments referred to. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that our action on this amendment shall determine our action on the other amendments involved in this proposition.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I yield.

Mr. BARBOUR. Would that be better than to ask unanimous consent that we vote on all of them at one time, as the vote on each one of them would be the same, aye or no, because they are all interdependent.

Mr. COLLINS. Each one will have to be reported separately.

Mr. BARBOUR. I do not think it makes any special difference. We can abide by the first vote.

Mr. COLLINS. That is what I intended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman state his request?

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that our action on amendment No. 8 shall determine our action upon the other amendments involved in this same proposition, namely, amendments Nos. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, and 18.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman does not state what the action will be subsequently on these amendments, but merely that it shall govern our action upon the amendments. Why not dispose of this amendment first and then take up the other amendments en bloc.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. As a matter of fact, if we have a vote on the first amendment, surely the House will submit to the will of the House with respect to that amendment and there should not be a roll call on the others that involve the same proposition.

Mr. COLLINS. They all relate to the same proposition.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not think it will require unanimous consent. I think the will of the House will be expressed by the first vote.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it makes any difference one way or the other. There will be one vote and that will end it.

Mr. COLLINS. Then let us have an agreement to the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. SNELL. I have no objection to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think this is a rather unusual procedure. I do not recall any such request's ever having been presented before. I think it will be accepted that the way the House votes on the first amendment will be accepted by the House in respect of the others.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request and yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY].

GENERAL RELIEF BILL

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have permission to introduce the relief bill at any time between now and 12 o'clock to-night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is too late. The Chair had stated there was no objection.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] asked unanimous consent to submit the relief bill. I would like to ask the gentleman if he did not have in mind submitting the report of the Ways and Means Committee on the relief bill.

Mr. RAINEY. Yes; I intended to say the report on the relief bill and the bill, too.

Mr. MAPES. I think it ought to be so understood.

Mr. RAINEY. That was the request.

Mr. STAFFORD. The request was to submit a privileged bill and the report on the privileged bill before midnight to-night.

Mr. RAINEY. That was the request.

Mr. MAPES. If that is the understanding, all right. I am quite sure the gentleman asked unanimous consent to submit the bill, and I think the House ought to understand the purpose of the gentleman.

Mr. RAINEY. I want to submit the report and the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the Ways and Means Committee may have until midnight to-night to file the general relief bill and the report thereon from the Ways and Means Committee. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, do I understand the Ways and Means Committee is going to file this report without any hearing?

Mr. RAINEY. We have been having hearings all the year.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No additional hearings?

Mr. RAINEY. None.

Mr. SABATH. They have heard from the President.

Mr. RAINEY. We have been giving the President a hearing.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I inquire whether it is the purpose of the gentleman to take up the bill to-morrow?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes; we expect to take the bill up to-morrow.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Does this bill cover the recommendations of the President yesterday to the Senate in regard to the change of membership of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

Mr. RAINEY. It will cover that. It will cover everything that the President wants.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is about the only wholesome report I have heard.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR].

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 8.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the gentleman can make that motion. I think the gentleman can amend the proposal that I have just submitted to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state that the motion of the gentleman from California to recede and concur is a preferential motion.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division of the question on recession and concurring.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin demands a division, and the question is on receding.

The question was taken, and the motion to recede was agreed to.

Mr. COLLINS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move to concur with the amendment which has already been reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOSS. The gentleman from Mississippi is limiting the number of officers to 12,000, while under the national defense act the number is limited to 16,000. That is legislation.

Mr. STAFFORD. But we are not considering what is existing law. We are considering the amendments of the House in disagreement, and the amendments of the Senate. The amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi is clearly in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in Senate amendment No. 8.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Mississippi to concur with an amendment is a preferential motion at this stage. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, the proposal before us is one about which most of the membership of this House is familiar. We have in the Regular Army 12,133 officers. We have in the National Guard 13,051 officers; we have in the Organized Reserve 108,210 officers; and in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps 127,667 young men, a large number of whom will be officers.

So I submit to the membership of this House that there is no dearth of Army officers in this country. In addition to that we have a large reservoir of men who held the position of officer during the World War. So it seems to me that there is not a human being who can justly make the claim that we are weakening the national defense one particle when we undertake to place 1,000 of the Regular Army officers upon an inactive status where they can be recalled at any moment, if their services are needed or can be used.

The Appropriations Committee of the House had lengthy hearings upon this subject covering about 1,250 pages. The Senate hearings covered approximately 50 pages. We spent weeks in the preparation of this bill in order to familiarize ourselves with the subject dealt with in the bill. The Senate spent a few hours on it. This bill was considered on the floor of the House for more than a week, and in the Senate it passed in a few hours, with very few questions asked, as I remember.

I submit to the country and to you that the House has considered this bill to a larger extent than the other legislative body. In addition to that we conferred with the Chief of Staff, Mr. MacArthur's personal counselor, Colonel Patterson, who prepared the MacArthur promotion plan. That promotion plan provided this: It starred those officers who ought properly to be on the promotion list, so that when a starred officer should go into a higher grade every officer between him and the next starred officer to him would be advanced at the same time. In other words, the promotion list of the Army, according to the Chief of Staff, is not properly constituted and needs to be corrected because of these unstarred officers, who are over age for their grades.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I do not yield. The MacArthur plan makes deadwood of these men; carries them as so much dead weight. The very fact that they are not starred shows that they have no business in the Army. I presented that promotion list to this House when this bill was under consideration before. Can this Congress, with such a picture as that before it, permit the continuance on the rolls of the Army men that the Chief of Staff does not star because of old age or other reasons? The object of this amendment is to eliminate the physically defective and the mentally inefficient, and in the elimination of them the now existing records in the War Department are to govern. It seems to me that is entirely fair to every one. Why is it in the interest of national defense to carry on the rolls of the Army men who could not be used if we had a war to-morrow?

From the standpoint of efficiency itself, we ought to get rid of these officers who are physically unable to do their duty, or who are mentally inefficient, so that younger men can take their places and serve this country properly as officers in our Army. We have a large number ranging from major down to first lieutenant who are blocking the progress of young men who have graduated from the Military Academy in recent years. Those men are blocking orderly promotion in the Army and will continue to do so.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I do not yield. They will continue to block promotion until about 1950. The men who are going to fight the next wars, if we should be so unfortunate as to have them, will be young men. I do not want to quibble with you and I am not going to quibble with anyone about the number of officers that we ought to have. I do not care how many officers we have in the Regular Army. What I am concerned about is that we have men in the Regular Army now who ought to be placed on an inactive status, because we could not use their services if we had a war, and there is not a man in this body who has given any thought to this subject who does not know that that is the case. A Member of this House who has had experience in the Regular Army told me that he would not object to this proposal in the least if he was assured that the War Department would not play politics in the elimination of these men. We ought to get rid of these men, and if we want to put other men in their places we can do so, but do not let us keep on the pay roll of this Government men that you know and I know could not be used in the event of war.

Let me just read to you the text of a letter that came to me from an Army officer, and I will say to the membership of this House that I have gotten about 400 like this:

> You would be amazed to discover that the great majority of active, aggressive, and patriotic Army officers are strongly in favor of the bill to reduce the Army by 2,000 officers. They regard it as an opportunity to weed out all the deadwood left by the well-known failure of the class B law and the operation of the single list.
> The press does not know it, the people do not know it, and apparently those high in the councils of the War Department do not know it, but the Army to-day contains a great many more than 2,000 officers who are doing nothing. Many are doing less than nothing because they prevent those below them from occupying their positions and accomplishing something.
> I am just an ordinary captain on an ordinary job, but I am familiar with the common knowledge of which press, people, and Cabinet members are entirely ignorant. I, and the rest of the men who are doing the every-day jobs of the Army, know how many old and broken-down officers are tucked away in corps area headquarters and assigned to reserve divisions. We know specifically how many Reserve Officers' Training Corps jobs and National Guard jobs are virtually 4-year vacations. We can point out the details that have four officers doing one officer's work. We know there are a hundred officers doing nothing but running post exchanges, which, except for isolated and foreign stations, are unnecessary to national defense and are in unfair and nontaxpaying competition with civilians.
> If war should break out to-morrow, a great many more than 2,000 officers would be retired within 24 hours for physical and other reasons. Why not get rid of them now? We got this way by the operation of the antiquated single list and the nonoperation of the class B law. This is as good a time as any for a clean-out; we need it. Besides being an Army officer I am a taxpayer. I am conscious that part of my money goes to pay these several thousand officers who contribute not one iota toward national defense.
> If there were work for 12,000 officers and they were all willing and able to do it, it would be weakening the national defense to reduce numbers. But as long as there is not enough work to go around—I have seen two Infantry companies combined as one for training purposes while on alternate days the company officers of one or the other company twiddled their fingers—and since there are at least 2,000 who would not be fit to do the work even if there were enough to go around, what is so wrong with such a reduction? We would have a smaller corps of officers, but we would get more done because we would be more efficient; national defense would gain rather than lose.
> The least that can be done is to clean out of the Army all those with physical disabilities, and there are several hundred of these already on a prepared list. I hope, however, that you will also allow the Army to be purged of its senile and its incompetent.
> We regard this reduction bill as the best thing that has hit the Army in 10 years.

I say to you, gentlemen, that I have received approximately 400 just such letters as that coming from Army officers.

Mr. BALDRIGE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman tell us who signed that letter?

Mr. COLLINS. The gentleman must think that I am a peculiar sort of human being. I would not tell the gentleman who signed any of these letters, because the gentleman knows as well as I do that the status of the man who wrote the letter henceforth in the Army would be on the down grade.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I did not ask who signed it; I asked whether this was signed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. The letter was written to Senator REED, and a copy of it was sent to me.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Was it signed?

Mr. COLLINS. The man would be a fool to sign it, and the gentleman knows it. I have received many that were signed.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I would not acknowledge any letter that was not signed.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman indicate——

Mr. COLLINS. I do not yield further.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman indicate whether the other 399 were anonymous letters?

Mr. COLLINS. I do not yield to the gentleman. I read the letter just as it came to me, and I say to you that I have received approximately 400 letters like it.

Mr. BRITTEN. Anonymous?

Mr. COLLINS. No. Some of them were and some of them were not.

Mr. BRITTEN. How many were?

Mr. COLLINS. I say this to the gentleman, that the former floor leader of the Republican Party had a talk with one of the best Army officers in this country, a general, and he will give you his name, and that former floor leader of the Republican Party told me that this general told him that the best thing that could happen to the Army would be the elimination of 2,000 officers.

Mr. BRITTEN. Who was the officer?

Mr. COLLINS. In addition to that, I may say that I had a conversation with another general, one of the best generals in this country, and I will tell you privately who he is; and he told me that this reduction of 2,000 Army officers was the best thing that could happen to the Army. One of the best Army officers connected with the District of Columbia told me that the best thing that could happen to the Army was a reduction of officer personnel by 2,000 men.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I do not yield to the gentleman, and I have told him that. I wish to proceed with my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. COLLINS. Now, what is the objection to the elimination of the over-age, incompetent, and physically infirm Army officers? The saving that will accrue will be approximately $10,000 per officer. Do you know what it costs to send one of them to school? According to the hearings held last year, at Leavenworth, Kans., about $8,000. The school at Leavenworth, Kans., costs approximately $2,000,000 to operate.

So we are proposing to retire these men upon three-quarters of their base pay and longevity, and in doing that we will save approximately $10,000,000 per year by retiring 1,000 of them.

I want to say in conclusion that you may vote as you please about this. That is a matter between you and your own constituencies; but I say to you that if you put this amendment on this bill, with the amount that is carried in the War Department appropriation bill, plus the amount of money carried in the relief bill for the War Department, the two added together will give the largest peace-time appropriation that has ever been made for the War Department, when there are between twelve and fourteen million people out of employment. Now, if you want to make fish out of the civilians and throw them out of jobs, and then worship at the shrine of some Army officer, and take care of the decrepit ones at the expense of the civilian population of the country, that is your business. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR].

Mr. BARBOUR. I would like to have a little time to yield.

A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARBOUR. How is the time controlled?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] has control of one hour.

Mr. BARBOUR. How much time is there remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi has consumed 20 minutes.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield to some one else first?

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield two minutes to me?

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR] five minutes.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is necessary to take very much time to discuss this matter. It was gone into thoroughly when the War Department appropriation bill was before the House of Representatives. The proposition then was to reduce the commissioned personnel of the Army by 2,000 officers. That carried on a motion to recommit, on a roll-call vote, by a majority of 19 votes. It went to the Senate, and the Senate by a vote of 51 to 16 restored the 2,000 officers. Now it comes back to the House as a proposal to reduce the commissioned personnel of the Army by 1,000 instead of 2,000.

The gentleman from Mississippi enumerated to the House a moment ago the number that he claimed were Army officers in the service of the United States, or equivalent to Army officers. The gentleman said there were over 12,000 Regular Army officers, from 12,000 to 13,000 National Guard officers, 108,000 officers in the Organized Reserves, and 127,600 officers in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps. We are considering only the Regular Army, which is a separate and distinct institution from all of these other organizations. National Guard officers are civilians. They do not depend upon the Government for a living. They draw no money from the Government, except when they attend drills or go to their camps. They are self-supporting civilians, who give a portion of their time to military training.

The Organized Reserves are civilians who devote a portion of their time to military training, purchase all of their own uniforms and equipment, and pay a large part of their expenses out of their own pockets, and the only time they draw pay from the Federal Government is when they spend two weeks on active duty in a training camp or a limited number for a longer period than two weeks, in active training with the Army. The 127,600 of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps are the college students throughout the country who are devoting a portion of their time to military training and who draw nothing whatever in the way of compensation from the Government unless they are ordered to the six weeks' training camp in the summer time, when they get 70 cents a day.

Now, we are here considering the Regular Army. The argument of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] is that this is the way to correct any defects there may be in the promotion system. Our contention is that this is not the way to correct defects in the promotion system. If there are any defects, we should correct them in the proper way by legislation and not attempt to legislate on an appropriation bill by simply cutting down the appropriation. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It should be the duty of the Military Affairs Committee to regulate this.

Mr. BARBOUR. It is the duty and responsibility of the Military Affairs Committee, of which the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] is a distinguished member, to bring in a bill here, and that question has been before the Military Affairs Committee for the last several years.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. It is a fact, is it not, that there are laws to eliminate old officers and worthless officers?

Mr. BARBOUR. The physically unfit that we were told about here.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. For instance, I am one of the old officers eliminated.

Mr. BARBOUR. But the gentleman is not physically unfit.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I have been eliminated. I am one of those decrepit old fogies they talk about.

Mr. BARBOUR. If they are all like the gentleman from Oregon so far as physical fitness is concerned, I will say we have a very fine commissioned personnel of the Army, both retired and active.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from California five additional minutes.

Mr. MANLOVE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield.

Mr. MANLOVE. The previous speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi, referred to the fact it cost a great deal of money to send Army officers to school and that, therefore, if we eliminate this number we eliminate that expense. Is it not a fact, just for the sake of ascertaining what the situation is, that all of those who would be eliminated have already had this schooling?

Mr. BARBOUR. I think a large number of these men already have had this training.

Mr. MANLOVE. Would there not be the same number of Army officers going to the schools each year?

Mr. BARBOUR. There would be the same number going to the schools each year. Whether we have 10,000 or 12,000 Army officers there will be the same number going to the Leavenworth school and to the Army War College. It will make no difference whatsoever.

In order to find out just what the financial aspect of this question is, let us look at the amount of money that is added to this bill to restore these 2,000 officers.

The gentleman from Mississippi contends we will save by eliminating these officers $10,000 per year per officer, that if we carry out this building program that is in the economy bill it will cost us $10,000,000 a year to put these officers back.

There is no use confusing this proposition with the economy bill. The Army housing program in the economy bill is dependent upon the certificate of the Secretary of the Treasury that the money is available in the Treasury and that it is advantageous to go ahead and construct these buildings. Otherwise not a dollar of it will be spent. So, what is the use of confusing that with this proposal?

We shall need to add to the bill to restore these 2,000 officers the sum of $3,784,414. But that is not the actual cost of putting these officers back. The actual cost is much less than that, because if we eliminate these officers, 2,000 or 1,000, they will be retired on three-quarters of their base pay and their longevity pay and will render no service whatsoever to the Government. So the money paid them as retired pay will be a total loss.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is it not possible if these 2,000 officers are eliminated that many civilians will have to be employed in their places to do the very work which they are now doing?

Mr. BARBOUR. Absolutely.

Mr. BRITTEN. You then have two items of expense, first the three-quarters pay to the retired officers and 100 per cent pay to the civilians necessary to carry on their work?

Mr. BARBOUR. Absolutely.

Mr. BRITTEN. So it is really extravagance rather than economy to eliminate these officers.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Can the gentleman tell us the ages of the officers who will be eliminated?

Mr. BARBOUR. The ages will range, I understand, all down through the various grades. According to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. MCSWAIN], they would be selected on a basis of efficiency.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Some of them would be in their thirties?

Mr. BARBOUR. Some would be in their thirties.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. They would be loaded on the Government for the duration of their lives?

Mr. BARBOUR. Some would be very young men.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman in control of the time has just indicated he would not yield me two or three minutes in order that I might have something to say about this bill. Therefore I will ask the gentleman from California a question.

Can the gentleman tell the House the name of any expert military authority in the United States who has publicly expressed himself in favor of this reduction of 2,000 officers?

Mr. BARBOUR. I know of none.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman knows of none?

Mr. BARBOUR. No. Now, we are told by the gentleman from Mississippi that this is a plan to get rid of the physically unfit and the inefficient. Every year these officers have to go through a rigid physical examination. They must pass this examination in order to stay in the Army. So there are no physically unfit in the Army, because they are very soon weeded out, and the inefficient are also weeded out by the class B board.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. I may say to the gentleman that one officer of World War experience in the Regular Army who has come along through the years would be worth a whole regiment if we were suddenly called to war, with his experience in lining up new men, drilling them, and training them.

Mr. BARBOUR. Absolutely; and the gentleman from Mississippi says if we have another war—and we all hope there will never be another—it must be fought by young men. True, it must be fought by young men.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from California five additional minutes.

Mr. BARBOUR. These trained men, these men who have had World War experience, will fit into the machine in a way nothing else possibly could.

If we get rid of these men, these efficient men, it means a dead loss to the Government and that is not economy.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. When the gentleman having charge of the bill was before the House he showed how promotions occurred, where a starred man way down the line was selected that, he said, would result in promoting everybody above him. Is it not a fact that the number of officers in the various grades are limited by law and that the condition referred to could not prevail?

Mr. BARBOUR. The national defense act limits the maximum number in each grade. The appropriation bills fix the amount of money that shall be paid for compensation of these officers, but the maximum number is fixed in the national defense act.

Mr. BRITTEN. That is true. So that if the so-called promotion board of the War Department went way down the line and placed a star in front of some officer's name which would mean his promotion that would not necessarily take all of the officers above him up and promote them?

Mr. BARBOUR. I believe the gentleman from Mississippi stated that if a man were a starred officer, all of the unstarred officers, up to the next starred officer went into a higher grade, that is, would go up with him.

Mrs. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mrs. KAHN. There seems to be some little confusion about the way the question is to be put. As I understand, those of us who desire to keep the 12,000 officers will vote no on the motion.

Mr. BARBOUR. That is a correct statement of the situation at this time. The question pending is the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi that we concur with an amendment and that amendment would fix the number at 11,000. I have made a motion that is still pending—that we recede and concur.

Mrs. KAHN. With an amendment.

Mr. BARBOUR. No. The next question to come up will be that of restoring the 2,000 officers and those who want to restore the 2,000 officers will vote no on the pending motion. Then the question will come up to agree to the Senate amendment and then the vote is aye, in order to restore the 2,000 officers.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. Since certain foreign nations who owe us billions of dollars are clamoring for further debt reductions or cancellations, while at the same time increasing their army and navy strength, would it not be most ridiculous at this particular time, in view of the present unsettled condition of the world, for us to reduce the effectiveness of our Army?

Mr. BARBOUR. I would say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that with the skeleton Army we have, and which we have maintained for years, it would not be advisable to further reduce it at this time, especially in view of conditions existing throughout the world. I will go even further and say that in my opinion if these foreign nations—which, according to the press, now desire the United States to cancel or practically cancel their war debts—would take a reasonable percentage of the money they are spending on armaments and apply it on their debts to the United States they could pay those debts without any difficulty whatsoever. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHAFER. And if the present condition of the Federal Treasury is such that we have to save a few million dollars by taking 1,000 employees off the Federal pay roll, would it not be more effective if this Government, and especially the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS], in view of the action of the last Democratic convention, would move to take off the Federal pay roll two or three thousand prohibition agents and thus make it possible to keep on the pay roll these additional Army officers, who will be needed in time of any future war?

Mr. BARBOUR. I feel the Members of the House are all familiar with the question now pending, so that it is not necessary to take any further time.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is it not a fact that the reduction of 1,000 officers, now suggested by the gentleman from Mississippi, is just as arbitrary and just as unreasonable as his first suggestion was for a reduction of 2,000 officers, and that there is no expert reason justifying it?

Mr. BARBOUR. There is no real reason for reducing the number by 1,000—no more reason than there was for reducing the number by 2,000. I do not think there is any good reason for reducing the number in this way. [Applause.]

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I want to see the House of Representatives do the right thing on this matter, and I want the House of Representatives to understand it. The Army, as the Navy had for a long time, has a large number of officers who are way over age in grade. The Naval Affairs Committee brought in a bill four or five years ago which eliminated a large number of the officers who were over age in grade and left the younger men, who were able to carry on and be useful officers, in the service. The Army has gone along, and they have carried their 12,000 officers without any corrective legislation or without any corrective action. There appears on page 104 of the hearings on the War Department appropriation bill a list of officers and their respective ages right straight down the line. For instance, there are 148 colonels above the age of 58; 107 colonels above the age of 59; there are 72 lieutenant colonels above the age of 54; there are 49 lieutenant colonels above the age of 55; there are 158 majors above the age of 50; there are 134 majors above the age of 51; there are 549 captains above the age of 46; there are 489 captains above the age of 47; there are 127 first lieutenants above the age of 42 and 97 above the age of 43.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question there?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I grant that the gentleman's statement is true, but is not the proper way to take care of that by legislation from the Military Affairs Committee in the same way that the Naval Affairs Committee took care of the surplus officers in the Navy?

Mr. TABER. We have been waiting 10 years for action, and no action has been taken. It is time that we met this situation. We have got a situation in the Army to-day, and the exceptions can be plucked by the selection board which will be established, where we can get along without a number of officers who are unable to perform usefully their functions.

Mr. SNELL. You have not remedied the situation, as I understand it, and will not remedy it unless we enact legislation that takes care of the situation.

Mr. TABER. This legislation provides for the elimination of officers who are not of useful age to be of service to the Army; and while it does not provide for putting any officers in their places, it is fair for us to try it out for a year and find out if we can get along without them.

Mr. SNELL. That does not answer the question at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield in that particular?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it not the fact that the only legislation reducing the Army personnel in the last 10 years has been in connection with the War Department appropriation bill? I recall the action in 1920 when we made drastic reductions in the officer personnel on the War Department appropriation bill, and the only way to accomplish it was by action on the appropriation bill, which is what we are attempting here to do.

Mr. TABER. There has been nothing done along this line in the last 10 years. I can not go back of that time.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is the gentleman suggesting to the House seriously that when a man gets over 47 or 50 years of age he loses his efficiency?

Mr. TABER. I am suggesting that he has not the physical stamina to be a successful, active company officer.

Mr. BRITTEN. How old is the gentleman himself?

Mr. TABER. I am too old to be a company officer.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman is very active and is in the prime of life.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CLAGUE].

Mr. CLAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I have no interest in this bill except to vote for what I believe to be for the best interests of our country. I happen to be a member of the War Department Appropriations Subcommittee and I listened to all the evidence that was introduced before our committee relating to every item on the bill. I think I attended every meeting and heard every witness testify.

There has been a good deal said during the past two or three years, not only before our committee but to various members of the committee and various Members of the House, about there being a hump in the Army officers. A large number of officers were taken in after the war.

I have carefully considered the evidence, and I have talked not only with the officers who appeared before our committee but with many Regular Army officers, some of the best officers in the Army, who have been in my room and have talked with me personally.

The gentleman from Illinois asked if we could name these men. I could name some of them, but these officers do not want to have their names mentioned. Why? Because, as the gentleman from Mississippi has suggested, if his name were made public, he would be afraid of receiving demerits.

A major general, one of the finest we have in the service to-day, sat in my office for about 30 minutes talking with me on this very question and told me that "500 to 1,000 could go out, which would improve the officer personnel." He further stated that there was a number of inefficient officers who should be retired for the good of the service, and that by eliminating these useless officers proper promotion could be brought about in the Army.

I have talked with many Army officers concerning the elimination of 1,000 officers, and with few exceptions they stated that cutting out of 1,000 officers would in no way injure the Army. Owing to this "hump" in the Army, a young man graduating at West Point this year, under the present system can not become a captain until 1951 or 1952.

We ought to have a systematic and an honest promotion list. I have been a friend of the Army, and I am a friend of the Army to-day. I want to see the Army officered by the best men we can find; and it is my honest judgment, if we will cut out 1,000 officers we will serve a useful purpose and tend to bring about proper promotion. I did not stand for the cut of 2,000 because I thought that was too heavy.

All I ask is that you consider this matter fairly and honestly and vote as you believe will be for the best interest of our country in this matter.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLAGUE. Yes; certainly.

Mr. BRITTEN. Does not the gentleman think that the proper manner to do this would be to follow the system the Navy has of selection up rather than by an arbitrary cut in the appropriations for salaries in order to throw a number of men out of employment?

Mr. CLAGUE. There has been legislation proposed here for 10 years, and it will probably wait for 20 years more before you ever get it. Here is an opportunity for the Members of the House to cut out at least 1,000 officers who are useless, men who can not do their work as it should be done. This is not to be permanent in the number. It is for one year, and then if we need more officers we will bring them in from the young men who can do the work. [Applause.]

Mr. COLLINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLAGUE. Yes.

Mr. COLLINS. And the proposal we are voting on is the proposal that the gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR] made himself.

Mr. BARBOUR. Now, will the gentleman yield to me, in view of that statement?

Mr. CLAGUE. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. I may say that that proposal was made in conference in an effort to find out if there were some possible grounds that the conferees could possibly get together on, when we were absolutely deadlocked over there, with neither side yielding.

Mr. CLAGUE. That is correct. The gentleman offered this as a compromise.

Mr. BARBOUR. As a suggestion.

Mr. CLAGUE. It was offered as a compromise measure.

This is not permanent law. The provision is effective for one year; and then if we need more officers, we can bring them up from the class of men we need for officers in the Army. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman have one minute more, that I may ask him a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time is under the control of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss].

Mr. GOSS. I will yield to the lady from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS. I am under the impression that proportionally a larger part of the Medical Corps would be dismissed under this plan than of any other corps in the Army. Everybody knows that this would work a tremendous hardship on the sick officers and enlisted men of the Army. Hospitals can not be properly run if there is not an adequate staff of doctors and nurses—and doctors and nurses can not be trained overnight.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That would be a sad commentary on the General Staff if that were true.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, it is difficult in this short time to say much about this proposal. The gentleman from Mississippi has said that the bill carries the largest appropriation of any bill passed in peace times. I want to call attention to the fact that $281,000,000 goes for the military activities, and the rest is for nonmilitary activities, and that he is comparing the bills that contain river and harbor appropriations and other matters, and the rest taken up in connection with unemployment relief programs.

I want to read to you what the Chief of Staff—and I am perfectly willing to follow him—has to say about cutting 2,000 officers from the list. Here is what he told the Military Affairs Committee at this session. He says:

> If you cut down 2,000 officers under the force that we believe is absolutely essential, which is 14,000, or over 2,000 short, it will be impossible to carry out the national defense act, and you will have to, unless you discard your responsibility as being the congressional group charged particularly with the national defense, the military national defense of the country—you will have to rewrite a new law.

He says further:

> The whole system will have to be revamped and much of the citizen training would have to be cut out if you cut down this 2,000 officers. That is just about the number of officers who are used here whose entire time is devoted to that type of training.

When General MacArthur was before the committee he was asked this question:

> Some time in March, the President, when interviewed regarding cutting expenses, was asked the specific question as to whether or not he was advocating any further reduction as far as the Army appropriation bill was concerned. I do not remember the exact language or the exact date, but it seems to me it was March 27 or March 29. Do you remember that statement?

General MacArthur replied that he did, that he had it right here. He said this was the message that the President addressed to Congress, and the item that you have in mind was this statement of the President:

> In addition of Army and Navy costs about $700,000,000. We should not further reduce that strength of our defense.

Now, when the bill got on the floor of the House we did not have the citizens' military training camps, the reserve officers, the Reserve Officers' Training Corps; but with that put back in the bill the Chief of Staff tells us that it would be impossible to carry out the duties of the War Department with these 2,000 officers cut out.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. During the World War, if these men had been left out, you would not have had a General Pershing, or officers like him; they would have all been thrown out.

Mr. GOSS. Absolutely. Now, there are 7,000 Regular Army officers at camps and posts, 500 in the arsenals and depots, 300 in the general hospitals, 1,500 at the service schools, 1,600 civilian components, and 1,100 in the War Department and general headquarters.

The Military Affairs Committee have set the number of enlisted men at 280,000 and the officers at 16,000, and yet under the rules of the House the Appropriations Committee is able to come in here and move to cut down the number of enlisted men and the officer personnel, when the Chief of Staff tells the Military Affairs Committee that we are practically scrapping national defense and the Secretary of War tells us the same thing, then we should take heed and vote to keep these 2,000 officers in the service.

Mr. MAAS. And as far as eliminating officers who are not capable of performing their duty is concerned there is a way of taking care of them.

Mr. GOSS. Oh, yes; they can class B them at the present time if they are not capable. The gentleman from Mississippi speaks about 200 Army officers on duty in cafeterias. That is ridiculous. He refers to the post exchanges, I suppose, but the regular officer has to carry on that duty in addition to his regular duties as an officer of the Regular Army. [Applause.]

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I take it that each Member here understands the proposition before us. This is a conference report on which we are acting, and, as has been stated, attempts have been made to compromise the matter. When the bill passed the House it eliminated 2,000 officers. In order that a compromise may be had, so that we might close up the matter as far as the Appropriations Committee is concerned, it is proposed that we eliminate 1,000 officers. It occurs to me that the Army of the United States or its officers ought to be just as willing to make some sacrifice in these days of stress as the civil activities of this Government have been compelled to do. There is not an activity that is not turning out hundreds of men in civil life. There is not a department that will not be compelled to turn out hundreds of men in order to reduce governmental expenses.

The gentleman who preceded me stated that we are appropriating only $285,000,000 for the regular establishment. If that be true, it is more than $150,000,000 in excess of what we were paying before the war. Does anyone think that we are in danger of conflict to-morrow? Does anyone think that we are going to lose anything if we strike off these 1,000 men for one year? No; true to form, the Army is opposed to giving up anything. As I said after the close of the war, when they were breaking up automobiles, when they had thousands and thousands of them that they had no use for and they were petitioned by every activity in this Government to give up some of them, they said no, that they would not give them up, that they would need them in case of war. Gentlemen, it took an affirmative act of this Congress to take them away from the Army. The same thing is true with fortifications that they have. They know they don't need them. There is a lobby here as insistent and persistent as ever there was in all the world. The 120,000,000 taxpayers who must pay this expense do not get your ear. The men who are the burden bearers I dare say would vote 90 to 1 against these 2,000 officers. We don't need them; or if we do, then we can get along without 1,000 of them at least for a period of one year. [Applause.]

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, it is well for the House to recall what happened when this bill was first considered. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] at that time offered an amendment to limit the reduction of the officer personnel to 750. This House voted that down; and when the gentleman from Mississippi offered an amendment to reduce the number of the officer personnel by 2,000, the House voted in favor of it. What do we now find? We find the conferees now offer a fair compromise between what you voted against, namely a reduction of only 750, and what you voted for, a reduction of 2,000 officers. They have voted to reduce it by 1,000. Surely that is a reasonable compromise, and the gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR] indicated to the conferees, I am informed, that he was willing to sign a conference report to reduce the officer personnel by 1,000. What sound reasons can now be offered for voting against that compromise?

The acting chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs prepared the amendment which the House adopted, and I will say to my friend from Illinois, Mr. BRITTEN, that the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs voted for the 2,000 reduction, and my friend from Illinois, Mr. BRITTEN, in the last Congress, as chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, fathered and passed legislation that sought the retirement from the officer personnel of the Navy a number that he felt could safely be dispensed with in this way, and he and I have both been disappointed that such legislation did not result in the reduction which he felt would follow. Sooner or later this Congress, perhaps on an appropriation bill, will have to do what it has found necessary to do in reference to reducing the officer personnel in this Army, provide under the Holman Rule on an appropriation bill for the retirement of a limited number.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. It is the only way in which this House can effectively act and carry out what all should favor, namely, further economies in Government expenditures. Remember you are quite fair to these officers, who may be retired under this provision. You place them on retired pay ranging from $1,800 to $4,500, as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] has stated; yet notwithstanding such retired pay, this pending amendment, if adopted, will result in very large savings to the Federal Treasury.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, let us take a sane and sober view of the proposition before the House. This House has passed a bill which has resulted in the elimination, so the papers tell us, of many civil-service employees, and probably will during this fiscal year. Why should not the War Department and every other department of this Government make its part of the sacrifice to economy, if it be a sacrifice. I do not subscribe to the idea that merely because you are reducing the number of officers from 12,000 to 11,000 for a period of only one year, you are affecting the national defense injuriously in any way. They are still subject to orders and can be called back in the service at any time they are needed. As the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] has said, we have done more for them than we have done for the civil officers of the Government, who have been forced to take retirement, because there is not one of these officers but who will receive for the balance of his life from $1,800 to as much as $4,500 a year.

Are we to have war this year? Of course not; and I hope never again. This only applies to this year. This only applies to the period for which this appropriation bill is in existence. Congress can take such action as it pleases later on. But I say that in the interest of economy and in the interest of seeing that every department of this Government is required to take at least a part of its share, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi ought to be adopted. I do not think there can be any excuse for a failure to adopt it unless we are to take the position that we are going to make fish of one and fowl of another. It seems to me there can be no excuse for undertaking to take the War Department out of the general rule which the House has applied to all other departments and make an exception of it.

Do you know how many officers there are in the War Department in Washington to-day, sitting down there in the department—some of them needed, I do not deny? There are 585 officers in the War Department sitting here in Washington, many of them doing what could be properly classed as clerical duty. Certainly it seems to me in the interest of economy the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi should be adopted. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

All time has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOSS. I understand the question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi to concur with an amendment, and those in favor of retaining the 2,000 officers should vote "nay." Is that correct?

Mr. STAFFORD. The Chair does not instruct Members of the House how they shall vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not consider the gentleman's question as a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 154, nays 175, answered "present" 1, not voting 100, as follows:

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TURPIN] is unavoidably absent. He has requested me to say that if present he would vote "no."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from California to concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 10: Page 9, line 1, strike out "$27,209,927" and insert "$31,833,427."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, this is part of the proposal that has just been voted upon, and under the circumstances I therefore move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 11: Page 9, line 5, strike out "$8,356,200" and insert "$8,545,011."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi moves to recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 11.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU], and I ask unanimous consent that he be permitted to speak out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time in order to make an explanation.

The Committee on Rules has had under consideration for several days a proposal to inaugurate an investigation of the Treasury Department, the Federal Reserve Board, and the Federal Farm Board.

When a man by logic of events and length of service is put at the head of a great committee, responsibilities are placed upon him which he can not escape. I have felt constrained to oppose this investigation. I do it, I hope, with a very high purpose. We are told by high officials of the Government that there were indications of a return toward prosperity; that very feeble steps had been taken, but nevertheless definite steps had been taken in the direction of a return to prosperity. Now, I can not divest myself of the conviction that, to create a committee at this time, with a great political battle approaching, and vest that committee with far-reaching authority to investigate the activities of the Government, might have a tendency to retard the return to normal conditions. After a conference with the Speaker and some of my colleagues on the committee, who, in fairness to them, at least I must say did not agree with the view that I took, the Committee on Rules this morning decided to defer the resolution that was pending before that committee. [Applause.]

It will probably be the case that at some time these great amounts that have been returned by the Treasury, these tremendous tax refunds, footing up $3,700,000,000 since 1922, will be analyzed and examined by a committee of the House or a committee of both Houses, but after hearing the high officials of the Government I could not divest myself of the conviction that this is hardly a proper time to start such an investigation.

We have been here seven months, and it will only be December before we will be back here again. I could see no great overpowering, pressing reason which justified the Committee on Rules, during these closing hours of Congress, when we are about to leave, putting in motion a great machine to investigate these departments. The heated weeks immediately preceding a presidential election should hardly be selected as the time to start such investigation any way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. COLLINS. I yield to the gentleman three additional minutes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I believe I said a few moments ago that I took the position which I did take after conferring with the Speaker.

I may say that if the Speaker had said to me in that conversation, "I believe it is necessary in the public interest that this committee be created," I would have followed the Speaker, but he did not say that. He was generous enough to say that we should act upon our own best judgment and he would be satisfied. It is typical of the big man that he is. [Applause.]

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. Certainly.

Mr. SNELL. I think the gentlemen of the Rules Committee have come to the proper conclusion. I congratulate them upon using good sense and judgment, as the Rules Committee usually does.

Mr. POU. I thank the gentleman. Having served on the committee with my distinguished friend quite a number of years, I all the more appreciate what he has said.

I think I may say, Mr. Speaker, that, whether criticized or not, the Rules Committee has acted conscientiously. We have done what we thought was best with the light the Almighty has given us to see.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR]; and I make the same request that he be permitted to speak out of order.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman yield five minutes to me to talk out of order when the gentleman from New York has concluded? I do not desire to object, but I wish a little time.

Mr. COLLINS. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois a little later.

Mr. BRITTEN. That is all right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, to-day is the first occasion during my service on the Rules Committee for five Congresses that I disagreed with my distinguished and lovable chairman. [Applause.]

This matter, as you undoubtedly know, arose on Friday last in this way, and it is well to review briefly the manner of its happening: The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN] was on the floor. He complained about the failure of the Rules Committee to act on certain resolutions he had introduced. One of his resolutions proposed an investigation of the Federal reserve system. Another of his resolutions proposed an investigation of the Treasury Department as to tax matters, uncollected taxes, and tax refunds.

During the course of those remarks the Speaker came on the floor, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania called the attention of the Speaker to certain statements he had made back in 1930 and previously as to this condition in the Treasury Department.

The Speaker said, in effect, he agreed with the gentleman from Pennsylvania that some investigation of the matter was needed.

Whereupon the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] took the floor and challenged the Speaker, if I may interpret, to cause such an investigation.

The Speaker explained the reasons for not having had an investigation before in this language:

The reasons I have not pressed on the Rules Committee the investigation demanded by the gentleman from Pennsylvania are two. For the last six months the country has been very much disturbed in economic matters. I did not want to investigate the Treasury Department with a view to having the people of the country lose confidence in it. The only thing they seem to have left is confidence in the Government of the United States, in its fiscal matters. To make an investigation at this time and discover such things as the gentleman from Pennsylvania and I believe would be discovered in that department would certainly unsettle that confidence and would not be beneficial to the American people.

Secondly, I thought if we undertook to do it at this time, with an election immediately in front of us, it would be charged during the campaign that we attempted to use the investigation for partisan purposes.

Following some further colloquy, the Speaker interrogated the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] as follows:

Mr. GARNER. Speaking in his individual capacity and as a member of the Rules Committee, will the gentleman assist in bringing out a rule and passing it on the floor of this House?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; I think I will.

So with the assurance that we had the support of Mr. MICHENER on that side of the House the Rules Committee met the next morning at 11 o'clock and proceeded to hear testimony and Representatives in reference to the necessity or propriety of this investigation.

Immediately on the convening of the Rules Committee all four Republicans on this committee proceeded to protest at every possible stage as to what should be done, as to whether hearings should be held, as to whether or not the Treasury should be invited, and as to whether the Federal Reserve Board should be invited. Long speeches were spread on the record ridiculing the investigation before it had started. Thus it was obvious from the beginning that it was strictly a partisan matter and that no Republican on this committee would vote for any investigation, irrespective of what the testimony might develop.

That day we heard the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN]. We adjourned in the afternoon and met yesterday at 10 o'clock and worked practically all day. We heard Mr. Ballantine, the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, in the absence of the Secretary, who was called to Boston to open the campaign for the reelection of his chief. Mr. Ballantine made a statement to the committee, a long statement. Of course, he did not admit there was anything wrong with the Treasury Department, but he said to the committee, in a most appealing manner—and when I use the word "appealing" I use it advisedly, and I call on all the witnesses and all the audience in that room whether he did not appeal to us not to investigate the Treasury Department before December.

Of course, as I have said in other places, if the election were next March, the appeal would be not to investigate the Treasury Department until next April. [Applause.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I want to complete my statement.

Mr. RANSLEY. I know the gentleman wants to be fair.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. RANSLEY. The gentleman should make the entire statement. It was not a question of politics and the gentleman has no right to leave the House under that impression.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am too old not to think that a certain day after the first Monday in December next was not in the mind of Mr. Ballantine when he made his appeal.

Mr. PURNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am going to complete my statement as to the reasons he gave for that.

Mr. PURNELL. In fairness the gentleman should state the reasons he gave.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I was intending to do so when I was interrupted. If the gentleman will compose himself for a moment, I will proceed.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. Perhaps the Acting Secretary of the Treasury did not want to investigate the Treasury Department immediately because he had the same definition of "immediate" as you have in your wet plank, that immediate means in November. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. The hearing before the Rules Committee was the first meeting we have had for some time when that subject was not discussed. Mr. Ballentine gave as his reason or excuse, call it what you will, that the Treasury Department had just undertaken to work out the machinery and system for carrying into effect the new tax law and that any investigation of that department would so interfere with the help—he named the different units—and all the help down there that their minds would be on the investigation. Of course, innocent as they all were, they would be thinking only of the investigation and they could not possibly work out this new tax law, but that they would have it worked out by December and then we could come in and investigate in our own time.

Mr. PURNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. PURNELL. The gentleman should also state in that connection Mr. Ballentine's further observation that they were undertaking to handle this new tax law without any increased personnel and that imposed a very great burden on the Treasury.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Well, if that is important, it is in the record.

Mr. SABATH. That was another excuse.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yesterday we also heard Mr. Eugene Meyer, governor of the Federal Reserve Board. He stated, of course, that there was absolutely nothing to investigate in the Federal Reserve Board, or any part of it; that they were beyond improvement; that their dealings in foreign bonds, and so forth, were small and all justified; that the movement of gold out of the country was the most natural thing in the world, and they had nothing to do with it. We heard a very long and interesting economic speech from Mr. Meyer. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] also testified before the committee.

But let me say, Mr. Speaker, that beyond the testimony before the Rules Committee we had judicial knowledge of what is going on in the minds of the people of this country. For years on the floor of this House, in the press, and on the streets the people of this country have been inquiring about these huge tax refunds, which this year approach $4,000,000,000. They are inquiring why great corporate interests, why great, powerful, and influential individuals are granted big refunds, and in many instances on the eve of an election.

Let me point out before I forget it: Watch the refunds from now until November and try to check against those refunds contributors to the campaign fund. We had information brought before our committee that was not brought there by witnesses. The Rules Committee has a rule that only Members of Congress and the heads of departments may testify before the committee, but we had information from many sources as to what is going on in the Treasury Department. Let me make this statement advisedly. After giving it good, sincere thought, let me say that the Republican campaign is financed out of the Treasury of the United States [applause], and an investigation will prove it. People sitting on that side of the aisle and in another Chamber know that during this campaign another refund will be made from which a huge contribution will be made to the campaign fund. As I have said, in 10 years these refunds have amounted to $4,000,000,000, with interest running into many millions.

There has always been a reason for such an investigation. The Speaker has said so and the Speaker still believes it. However, I am willing to yield to the high patriotic motives of the Speaker of this House, because I firmly believe no man in America loves his country more than JOHN N. GARNER. [Applause.] That is what prompts him in the position he has taken.

But that department must be investigated. Mind you, it is the only department of Government that in all its history has never been audited. No one has ever audited the accounts of the Treasury Department. These billions have been returned to these taxpayers, amounting to $4,000,000,000, and under the administration of Mr. Mellon three-fourths of them went to Pennsylvania corporations.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman has made some very serious charges against the Republican Party. If one-half of what the gentleman says is true, he owes it, as a member of the Rules Committee, to report out this resolution of investigation. [Applause.] I want to say that any member of the committee——

Mr. O'CONNOR. Let me interrupt the gentleman there to say that I did everything in my power to report the resolution out of the Rules Committee and I had some assistance.

Mr. SABATH. And the gentleman from New York voted for the resolution.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman's party is in charge of matters coming before the Rules Committee, and even if one-tenth of what the gentleman has said is true, the gentleman's party is responsible, and will be held responsible to the American people, for not providing an immediate investigation of this department. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, we had an appeal there from the Treasury Department and the Federal reserve that "if you do this, you will cause chaos in the Government." This was the appeal. I did not believe they were right in this, but the Speaker did believe they were right. I do not believe that anything more could happen to this country to disturb the confidence of the people in the Government of the Nation.

Mr. WOODRUFF. If the gentleman will yield further, regardless of what any public official or what any Government official has stated before the Committee on Rules, I maintain it is the duty of the members of the Rules Committee and the House of Representatives to proceed with this investigation, if one-half of what the gentleman has stated is true.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In answer to my friend from Michigan let me say that the speech the gentleman has made is almost verbatim the speech the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] made last Friday, and when he came into the Rules Committee he obstructed the possibility of an investigation at every step.

Mr. SABATH. And every other Republican on the committee voted against it.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I want to say to my friend that I hold no brief for any other Member of this House, but I maintain it is the duty of the gentleman, it is the duty of every other member of the Rules Committee, and it is the duty of the House of Representatives to proceed with an investigation if the members of the Rules Committee have any reason to believe that what the gentleman has stated is true.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS], I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Not right now.

There has been no dispute as to certain facts with respect to the amount of the refunds and the huge amount of interest paid on them. These cases have been delayed, and if the charge is nothing more than negligence, an investigation is warranted.

On the refunds made up to two years ago the interest, in addition to the cash refund, was 26.72 per cent. Many 1917 cases are still pending, as well as 1918 cases, and all the way down the line. It is alleged that people who want their cases pushed can get them pushed and some who are not in such high favor have a very difficult time getting their cases determined.

The conduct of the United States Steel case is enough to justify an investigation. There was one rebate of $26,000,000, one rebate of $32,000,000, and this only after 3 or 4 or 5 revaluations by the department.

Could anybody not in the know get a revaluation involving the work of engineers for a year and reduce the amount of their taxes by $40,000,000 or $50,000,000?

The United States Steel Corporation sent in a check, and after they sent it in, after all their lawyers and accountants had figured out the tax, they waked up one day and said, "We paid you $97,000,000 too much." If you can imagine this, I can not. So they proceeded to ask for a refund, and after revaluation and revaluation, all at the expense of the Government, they finally got back between $50,000,000 and $60,000,000.

It was brought to our attention that the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation passes on these refunds amounting to over $75,000. All they do is to review them. They have no facilities to go into the facts or into the merits of the case to see whether valuations are proper or fair or honest. All they do is to make a superficial review, and when they said, "Let us look at the United States Steel Corporation case," the Treasury Department said, "Fine," and they sent up six truck loads of records for this small committee that we have here in the House Office Building to look over.

Now, the statement that no one can deny is that the Treasury Department has made mistake on mistake and has had the court reverse it, but sometimes too late. They have been deciding question of law as well as fact. They interpret the law and they have made settlements based on their interpretations and they also have what they call their "settlement policy" on the law, instead of going to the courts and having the law determined, many times at the expense of the Government and many times to the benefit of the taxpayer.

These are the things that have prompted me and still prompt me in this matter. I do not believe anything unfortunate could happen to this country by reason of such an investigation. These things have prompted me to believe that this investigation should have been started years ago, and I was willing to fight for it now. However, I was willing to yield to the high motives of the Speaker of the House; but let me tell you, my colleagues, it can not be put off on the ground that there was not enough evidence presented Saturday or Monday before the committee to justify the investigation. The evidence is in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD going back for years. The Treasury Department does not want an investigation and is trying to prevent it as long as possible. The Congress should certainly give them the investigation the first week of December.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman has stated the Treasury Department does not want an investigation, that they fought this investigation all down the line. Charges from time to time have been made against the department because of the things which the gentleman has mentioned; and now that the gentleman's party is in power, and in view of the fact that all down the years he and other members of his party have been calling attention to what they claim are derelictions on the part of different people in the Treasury Department, he and the members of his party in the House have the power now to start the wheels of an investigation going to see whether or not his charges are true, and I will join with the gentleman——

Mr. O'CONNOR. I can answer the gentleman's question, because it is a mere repetition of the gentleman's former statement.

The reason I take this position is that I do not entertain the same fear that the distinguished Speaker has. If I entertained that fear, of course, I would not want to disturb the country; but picture the reverse. Picture a Democratic administration at both ends of the Avenue, picture a Republican House with a small majority, and the same question presented to them. Does anybody here believe that they would assume the high, patriotic rôle that we are assuming now? They would play partisan politics, as they have always done, even if it ruined the country, as they have ruined it during the past four years. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. What has become of the conference report?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The conference report has been adopted, but there are several amendments in disagreement.

Mr. STAFFORD. The conference report is still before the House, and is the pending business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All of this is by unanimous consent.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia, and I ask unanimous consent that he may speak out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. Reserving the right to object, why not have the conference report completed, and then have your field day, if the majority of the House has no further legislation? However, I shall not object the way my Democratic friends objected the other day.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I regret that gentlemen have not seen fit to leave this entire matter with the statement of the chairman of the Rules Committee. I will not take issue with my friend and colleague who has just preceded me as to the testimony that was taken by the committee on this resolution proposing an investigation of the Treasury Department and other agencies of the Government, but the impression made upon our minds seems to be somewhat different. The gentleman's statement was in all probability predicated upon all that heretofore has been said by way of criticism of the administration of the revenue laws by the Treasury Department, and as to these things I, of course, have no quarrel with him. I confine my remarks entirely to the record made by the committee.

Members of the House came before the committee and reiterated charges that had been made on the floor of this House many times and which have for a long time been broadcast by the press throughout the country. Other than what you gentlemen have heard before there was little, if anything, before the committee than a statement of Mr. Ballantine, Acting Secretary of the Treasury, and Mr. Meyer, the governor of the Federal reserve system.

Mr. Ballantine appeared before the committee and in effect stated that while the Treasury Department had no objection whatever to congressional investigation, to initiate an investigation at this time would do much to tie up the Bureau of Internal Revenue when its resources and energies are demanded to put into effect the new revenue law and would slow down both the securing of additional taxes, which the Treasury needs, and the closing up of old cases which the taxpayers regard as especially important in their effort to find the basis to-day for business operations, and that any investigation that the Congress should see fit to make might well be postponed until December, when Congress reconvenes.

As I understood it, the committee accepted that statement and concluded to take no action on that part of the resolution proposing an investigation of the Treasury Department.

Mr. Meyer, governor of the Federal Reserve Board, stated that there was nothing wrong with the Federal reserve system, that extensive hearings had been held by the Banking and Currency Committee of the House and the Senate, coming down to a recent date, that these committees had had at their disposal some of the best talent in the country, that most of the charges now made against the Federal reserve system had been gone into by these committees, and particularly by the Glass committee in the Senate.

He further said that there was an indication of improvement of business reflected in the rise of commodity prices throughout the country, and that it would be well, in his opinion, that no investigation be precipitated at this time, that the patient be given an opportunity to recoup and recover. As I understood it, the Rules Committee accepted that statement, and concluded to take no action on that part of the resolution.

This statement ought to satisfy both Democratic and Republican members of the committee, because the statement is true as to what took place. [Applause.]

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, we have had three statements from the Committee on Rules. It occurs to me that perhaps it might be well to hear some one not on that committee express his reactions to the most peculiar attitude and unexplainable action of the Committee on Rules. The Committee on Rules is a political committee made up in the proportion of 8 to 4; there are 12 members of that committee, 8 of the majority party, whichever party is in control of the House, and 4 of the minority party. There is only one other committee of the House that is in that proportion. Otherwise the committees are apportioned as nearly as possible to the ratio existing between the two parties.

Two days ago startling charges were made on the floor of the House by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN]. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is generally well and accurately informed on banking matters. The charges made calling for an investigation may be divided into three categories: 1. The improper administration of the tax laws, which it was alleged resulted in a construction of the law favorable to certain taxpayers. 2. The improper administration of the Federal reserve banks, in assisting, if not conniving, at certain banking transactions which ended to the detriment of the American investor. 3. Improper or lack of supervision on the part of the Comptroller of the Currency, countenancing certain alleged improper banking practices. There are your charges.

I, for one, can not subscribe to any theory that the disclosure of wrongdoing is going to disrupt legitimate business in this country. [Applause.] We can not establish any such principle in law, equity or otherwise. I have never yet heard of a defendant who was guilty of a crime who asked for an early trial. I say it comes with very poor grace on the part of any administrative officer to go before a committee of Congress and state that the economic condition is such in this country that any disclosures of wrongdoing would bring about a panic.

Mr. BEEDY. He did not say that.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, the gentleman was not there. A plea by wrongdoers to defer investigation because it may shock public confidence reminds one of the defendant on trial for the murder of his parents who begs the mercy of the jury because he is a poor orphan.

The governor of the Reserve Board took the stand and stated that there might have been mistakes made—"mistakes." That is exactly his characterization. He calls it "mistakes" and the gentleman from Pennsylvania calls it "improper conduct." But, says the governor of the Federal Reserve Board, this is no time to investigate these mistakes. The governor of the Federal Reserve Board, whose testimony was taken down, and I hope it will be printed, Mr. Eugene Meyer, did not at any time hit upon the real question before the committee. He made a general inane statement of the economic condition—just talked generalities.

Mr. PURNELL. Has the gentleman forgotten that he answered categorically certain allegations made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN]?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; in a general denial.

Mr. PURNELL. The gentleman says he did not touch upon them. I deny that he merely entered a general denial.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The record speaks for itself, and it is there. He entered a general denial, a sort of denial known in the law as a "negative pregnant." He did no more than that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, in three minutes I shall say this, and if I am not correct, I want the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL] to correct me, because he was listening very attentively. Then the governor of the Federal Reserve Board in substance said: "It is true that the American investor was imprudently advised to invest in almost a billion dollars of worthless South American securities; it is true that there has been a terrible depression in security values since 1929; it is true that we are in the midst of the most terrible economic crisis that we have ever been in, but, gentlemen, all that is over. It is all over and now we are on the upward trend. Why go back and investigate—everything is going to be all right; we are out of the crisis because the price of hogs has gone up 2½ cents a pound."

And he never ate a ham sandwich in his life! [Laughter.]

I submit, Mr. Speaker, regardless of politics, that the American investor is entitled some time to get the truth of the present economic depression. He is entitled to know who and why he was swindled. I submit that a committee of Congress is entitled to more accurate and definite and specific information than the Committee on Rules received yesterday. To my friends of the majority let me say that I concur in the conclusions reached by my colleague from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR]. I say in a committee of 8 to 4, with the stand taken by the Speaker on the floor of the House and the charges made by several Members of the House, that it was the duty of that committee to bring in a rule to have an immediate and thorough investigation of this condition. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL].

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I regret the necessity for further discussion of this matter. It should not have extended beyond the patriotic statement made by the gentleman from North Carolina, the chairman of the Committee on Rules [Mr. POU]; and I take this opportunity to bear testimony to the high patriotic motives which prompted him and his colleague, Judge Cox, of Georgia, in the vote they cast in the Rules Committee this morning. [Applause.]

I can assure you there has been no attempt on the part of the four minority members of the Rules Committee to in any degree inject any element of partisan politics into this matter. It has been suggested by innuendo if not by direct charge that the Treasury Department and the Republican organization insisted that the four minority members of the Rules Committee should oppose this resolution. Nothing is farther from the truth. I took the position in the beginning, and I take it now, that it was fair and in the interest of justice that the Secretary of the Treasury and the governor of the Federal Reserve Board should be invited to be present and listen to the accusations that were being made against them and their respective organizations. They were invited, appeared and testified frankly and more or less at length. I can not subscribe to the statements made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] that Eugene Meyer flippantly cast this matter aside and said, "We are out of the woods and we should not go back and investigate." I will tell you what he said, and he said it, not in a flippant but in a serious vein. He said in substance, "We are improving. Conditions are pointing upward. No good purpose could be served at this time by this or any other investigation."

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PURNELL. I am sorry I can not yield. I do not have the time.

Let me remind the Members that Mr. Ballantine, Under Secretary of the Treasury, who came as the representative of the Treasury Department, prefaced his fine statement by saying that, as far as the results of an investigation are concerned, the Treasury Department has nothing to fear and is not at all opposed to this or any investigation. The gentleman from New York, if I correctly understood what he said, made this statement: "I can not subscribe to the doctrine that the showing up of wrongdoing will injure the country."

Neither can I subscribe to the doctrine that reckless and unsupported charges carelessly thrown to the country, without any opportunity given to answer or prove their falsity until next January or February, will serve any good purpose, especially at a time when we ought, above all things, to unite all elements in the country in an effort to restore some semblance of our former economic and social stability.

I deny emphatically that the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board said that the disclosure of wrongdoing would disrupt the Government. There was never at any time any suggestion or admission by Mr. Ballantine or Governor Meyer that any possible wrongdoing would or might be uncovered. That was not the point at issue. As a matter of fact, they proceeded upon the theory, and I think their testimony convinced all of us except those who wanted to put a partisan touch to the matter, that such an investigation would not disclose any wrongdoing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana three additional minutes.

Mr. PURNELL. Now, this is what Mr. Ballantine said. Let me boil it all down, because my time is short. He said, in substance: "We do not object to an investigation. There is nothing to investigate and no disclosures that can possibly be made will reflect upon the integrity or efficiency of the Treasury Department."

But he added:

> We are just now charged with the additional duty of administering the new tax law and are making an earnest effort to administer it with the same personnel we have had heretofore. Now, if we must have our attention diverted from this effort to collect money with which to meet the running expenses of the Government by a demand for data and assistance in connection with an investigation, the work of the department must necessarily suffer.

Then he further suggested, that which we all know, namely, that these unsupported charges going out to the country in connection with an investigation ordered by Congress could not possibly have other than a harmful effect upon the morale of the people as well as upon the Government itself.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PURNELL. I can not yield. I only have a few minutes.

I stated in the Rules Committee this morning that while I do not charge that this effort is the result of a desire for political advantage it does offer an opportunity to devote a part of the summer and fall to the making of unsupported and prejudicial charges against the Treasury Department and the Federal reserve system, the result of which would be to leave the country up in the air, uncertain and unsatisfied until next January or February, or perhaps longer. Such a course would be wicked, unfair, and against the best interests of the country.

Just one word in conclusion. The charge has been made that if this resolution were adopted it would disclose irregularities and discrepancies in regard to refunds of taxes. Let me remind you that when the Steel case referred to and hundreds of other cases were settled, they were passed upon by the present Speaker of this House, who was then a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, and others who served upon the joint congressional committee.

That committee, composed of the ranking members of the Ways and Means Committee of the House and the Finance Committee of the Senate, passed upon all of these refunds over and above $75,000.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PURNELL. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman does not mean "passed upon." They can not recommend or approve. They merely review.

Mr. PURNELL. Very well. They reviewed them. I will repeat what Mr. Ballantine said when he was asked by me whether it might be possible to slip over, unobserved, refunds that were doubtful or ought not be allowed. He emphatically stated that it would be impossible; that too many people investigate and pass upon them. Common sense tells me that since they must pass through so many hands it would not be possible for flagrant violations of the law to go unobserved. [Applause.]

The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] makes a serious, and I am sure an ill-advised, charge when he states that these refunds will find their way into the Republican campaign fund. That may be the method employed by Tammany, which he so ably represents here, but it does not square with the Republican method of raising campaign funds. It is not necessary to dignify such an absurd statement with a denial.

Let us see if the facts warrant any such inference. In 1928, the last presidential campaign year, the Treasury, as a result of its investigations of tax returns, made additional assessments and collections amounting to $414,251,490. For the same year refunds amounting to $142,393,567.17 were made. These figures speak for themselves. They stand as conclusive proof of the sincerity and efficiency of the Treasury Department in its effort to deal fairly with the taxpayers of the Nation as well as the Federal Treasury. In this connection I want to call attention to the additional assessments and collections as well as refunds that were made for other immediate years:

Additional assessments and collections

1927	$416,669,507.00
1928	414,251,490.00
1929	405,855,476.00
1930	303,055,027.00
1931	382,788,076.00

Refunds

1927	103,858,687.78
1928	142,393,567.17
1929	190,164,359.48
1930	126,836,333.22
1931	69,476,930.26

I repeat, these figures are more eloquent than words in support of our position that the Treasury Department has served the best interests of the Nation in dealing with these tax matters and that those now in charge and who have heretofore been in charge deserve the thanks of the people rather than a political investigation calculated not only to retard the work of the department but the return of prosperity as well. [Applause.]

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I am in no way responsible for the events that led up to this investigation that is now being discussed. The matter came before our committee, brought there, as you know, because of statements of Representatives in the Congress of the United States, made upon the floor of this House. In all of my years of public service I have never known any harm to come from an honest investigation of any public institution in our country, either in the States or in the Nation.

The Speaker of this House never spoke to me about this proposition in his life. I do not know what his views are now, but I am perfectly willing to call him as my witness under testimony that he gave upon the floor of this House in December, 1930, as recorded on page 872, volume 74, part 1, Seventy-first Congress, third session, and I will insert that as a part of my remarks in substantiation of my vote in favor of bringing this resolution to the floor of this House.

On September 29, 1930, I happened to be in the city of Washington, and reports had just been made by the various campaign committees as to the amount of campaign funds contributed up to that time for the purpose of electing partisan Members of Congress. The Republican campaign committee reported $250,000, as I recall it, while the Democrats reported about $18,000. I analyzed that report and issued the following statement which I have permission to put into the RECORD, and which probably is the basis of Secretary Mellon's criticism:

That there is a close bond of sympathy between corporations that have been granted tax refunds and the Republican national organization is indicated in the recently published list of contributors to the Republican campaign fund. It may be a mere coincidence, but I attach considerable significance to the fact that each of the 17 individuals contributing $10,000 to the Republican campaign funds has been a beneficiary of the extremely liberal policy of the United States Treasury with respect to tax refunds, credits, and abatements.

A cursory survey of the reports on tax refunds for the past four years reveals that each of these contributors has received either personal refunds or is an officer, director, or otherwise interested in companies or corporations receiving such refunds or credits. Weeks of investigation would be necessary to ascertain with any degree of accuracy the extent to which they may have participated in tax refunds or all the various corporations with which they are connected that have been the beneficiaries of refunds, credits, or abatements.

It is apparent from a hasty survey that the total refunded individuals or corporations with which the contributors in the $10,000 and $5,000 classifications are connected is greatly in excess of $100,000,000.

Another significant fact in this connection is that after Claudius Huston faded from the picture and Senator FESS was selected Republican national chairman, Robert H. Lucas resigned his position as Commissioner of the Bureau of Internal Revenue and on August 7 assumed the duties of chief executive director of the Republican national organization. It was the bureau over which Mr. Lucas presided that handled these refunds, credits, and abatements which in recent years have averaged more than $100,000,000 annually.

Seventeen individuals have contributed $10,000 each to aid the Republicans in their effort to retain control of the House and Senate. Only two States are represented in that list of contributors—Ohio and New York. And only three cities—New York, Cleveland, and Canton. Practically the same is true of the 13 contributors in the $5,000 classification. All are residents of New York, Cleveland, or Canton, with one exception—Theodore Gary, prominent Missouri financier. Every dollar listed in the campaign contributions as published came from New York or Ohio with the exception of the $5,000 contribution from Missouri. And with few exceptions the donors have been beneficiaries of tax refunds, credits, or abatements secured through the Treasury Department.

During the last session of Congress when the fact was revealed that through failure of the Treasury Department to contest tax-refund claims of the United States Steel Corporation the Government had sustained a loss of at least $9,000,000, and possibly $26,000,000, I introduced a resolution authorizing an investigation of the Treasury Department in connection with these tax refunds. No action was taken by the committee to which this resolution was referred.

What proportion of these claims for tax refunds would not have been collectible if the Treasury Department had adopted a policy of opposing the granting of such claims without a decision of the courts is, of course, merely a matter for conjecture. However, the decision handed down by the United States Court of Claims on April 7 in the Packard Motor Car Co. case shows conclusively that the loss sustained by the Government as a result of failure to secure a court decision in the United States Steel case was at least $9,000,000. To what extent these contributors to the Republican campaign fund have been the beneficiaries of this hesitancy on the part of the Treasury Department to secure court decisions on all major cases could not be ascertained without a thorough investigation.

A very incomplete investigation covering tax refunds received by companies or corporations in which the 17 contributors to the Republican campaign fund are interested reveals the following:

Harry F. Guggenheim, New York, director Utah Copper Co., refunded $102,911 in 1928; director Braden Copper Mine Co., refunded $107,644 in 1929.

Jeremiah Milbank, New York, director Chase National Bank, which was refunded $41,239 in 1928; director Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., $32,012 in 1929 and $771,848 in 1930; son of Joseph Milbank, whose estate was granted refund of $46,344 in 1929.

John N. Willys, Cleveland, president Willys-Overland Co., which with its subsidiaries, was granted refunds aggregating $677,567 in 1930.

George A. Martin, Cleveland, president and director Sherwin-Williams Co., which received refund of $419,262 in 1929.

H. M. Hanna, Cleveland, estate of father, Leonard C. Hanna, refunded $55,202 in 1929; Leonard C. Hanna, jr., granted refund of $27,993 in 1927.

Cyrus S. Eaton, Cleveland, director Sherwin-Williams Co., which received refund of $419,262 in 1929.

W. R. Timken, New York, vice president and director Timken Roller Bearing Co., refunded $34,198 in 1929; director Timken-Detroit Axle Co., refunded $249,297 in 1929; granted personal refund of $86,536 in 1927.

O. P. and M. J. Van Sweringen, Cleveland, prominent railroad magnates. At least one railroad with which they are connected, the Erie, was refunded $266,921 in 1929 and $93,371 and $86,443 in 1930.

H. M. Timken, Canton, president Timken Roller Bearing Co., which was granted refund of $34,198 in 1929.

John D. Rockefeller and John D. Rockefeller, jr., New York, former granted personal refund of $157,227 in 1929 and $356,378 in 1930. The Standard Oil Co., with which the name of Rockefeller is generally linked, was awarded $339,498 in 1929; Standard Oil Co. of Indiana, $5,062,893 in 1927; Standard Oil Co. of Kentucky, $2,629,313.

Herbert N. Straus, New York, vice president and treasurer R. H. Macy & Co. (Inc.), which was granted refund of $508,065 in 1927; partner in private bank of R. H. Macy & Co., which was refunded $62,671 the same year.

William Nelson Cromwell, New York attorney, director American Water Works & Electric Co., which was granted refunds of $55,440 in 1927 and $94,598 in 1929; director Manati Sugar Co., refunded $72,614 in 1927.

J. R. Nutt, Cleveland, director F. E. Meyers & Bros. Co., granted refund of $83,669 in 1928.

Harrison Williams, New York, director American Gas & Electric Co., which was granted refund of $131,540 in 1927.

Ernst & Ernst, Cleveland. This is a firm of tax specialists handling numerous refund cases for large corporations. In a report filed April 27, 1925, by L. H. Parker with the Senate committee investigating the Bureau of Internal Revenue, and which was made part of the record, the following statement appears:

"We call your attention to the fact that Ernst & Ernst have handled cases involving many millions in taxes before the bureau, and if the above charges are proved it will be very reasonable to conclude that large sums have been lost to the Government through sharp practices in cases where such practices could not well be discovered."

In the list of $5,000 contributors we find the following:

Harvey Firestone, Canton, president and director of the Firestone Rubber Co., which was granted refunds, credits, and abatements aggregating $2,960,000.

William Ziegler, New York, chairman of the executive committee and director of the American Maize Products Co., which was granted refund of $92,311 in 1930.

Charles Hayden, New York, member of executive committee and director of American Locomotive Co., which was granted refunds and credits aggregating $1,876,000; director Braden Copper Mine Co., refunded $107,644 in 1929; vice president, Utah Copper Co., refunded $102,911 in 1928.

George F. Baker and George F. Baker, jr., New York; latter is director in the United States Steel Corporation, which has received refunds totaling $96,384,000; trustee, Mutual Life Insurance Co., which was refunded $813,059 in 1929; director, Atlas Portland Cement Co., refunded $191,856 in 1928.

Sidney Z. Mitchell, New York, chairman of board American Gas & Electric Co., which was refunded $131,540 in 1927; also director of Alabama Power Co., of Muscle Shoals fame.

Walter A. Aldridge, New York, member advisory committee, Bankers Trust Co., which was awarded a refund of $26,036 in 1927.

Walter C. Teagle, New York, president and director Standard Oil Co., whose huge refunds have been referred to previously.

On October 28, as I recall, I gave out another statement concerning a refund of $246,917.85 of taxes collected in 1918 to the Aluminum Co. of America. The recent report of the Treasury Department on another refund to the Aluminum Co. of America of $246,917.85 on 1918 taxes should impress upon the American public the necessity that exists for calling a halt in this lavish refunding of taxes except upon a court decision covering each specific case.

The records of the Joint Committee of Internal Revenue Taxation discloses that the Aluminum Co. of America, in which the Mellons are interested, was also granted in 1928 a refund of $1,287,426. Reference to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of 1926 shows this company previously had been allowed $1,501,277. The total refunds to this company of which we have knowledge amounts to the huge sum of $3,035,620.

In the past 11 years tax refunds, credits, and abatements, principally to large corporations of this type, have totaled nearly $3,000,000,000, and numerous refunds have been made without court decisions covering many of the issues involved.

Mr. GARRETT. There is no possible excuse for not making this investigation as there is no injury or harm that could come to the Government or the Treasury Department by virtue of this investigation.

The gentleman who appeared before the committee in behalf of the administration, or in behalf of the Treasury Department, testified that it would require all of the force in his office during this investigation to be looking up matters on account of the investigation. If that be so, then I think they ought to be investigated.

How is it going to hurt this country to make an investigation of the Treasury Department? We have made investigations of other departments in times past, but here is a department that has never been investigated by any independent body, a department which never has been audited. It was the testimony of Mr. Ballantine himself in answer to a question I propounded that there is no record of any investigation that was ever made of this department.

How is it going to hurt the country? My God! Can you do any more to it than you have already done.

But suppose you make your investigation and find everything O. K. I do not question but you may do this. I do not know of anything wrong. But, if you do, then the Treasury Department and all the financial institutions of the Government under it and operating through it will have a new lease on life. Confidence, if any has been lost or shaken, will be restored, and the Nation will move forward with the world knowing that, as far as we are concerned, our great financial institution is sound.

BOLLING FIELD, D. C.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill (H. R. 11732) to amend section 2 of an act approved February 25, 1929, to complete the acquisition of land adjacent to Bolling Field, D. C., and for other purposes, for printing.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I want to accommodate everybody, and I think we should run along until we get to amendment No. 87. We can do this in five minutes. Then we will have a vote on amendment No. 87, which is the last of these amendments.

Mr. MICHENER. But the few remarks I desire to make are in connection with the remarks that have just been made. I have been referred to in the debate.

Mr. COLLINS. We can not do it now, I may say to the gentleman from Michigan, because the hour will be up in a second or two.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman can ask that the time be extended five minutes.

Mr. COLLINS. I can not do that. I am going to accommodate the gentleman and I am going to do it just as quickly as I can.

Mr. MICHENER. I have a meeting of the Rules Committee waiting and I wish to reply to what has been said by these gentlemen.

Mr. COLLINS. I will yield time to the gentleman after the next amendment has been reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Missouri can be recognized for five minutes not to be included in the time.

Mr. COLLINS. I think we should vote on this particular amendment.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Mississippi will permit the gentleman from Michigan to make his remarks at the proper time, because he has been mentioned in the debate and the proper time for him to make them is now.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCHAFER) there were—ayes 100, noes 2.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 12: On page 9, after line 11, strike out $12,914,948" and insert "$9,447,323."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. COLLINS moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 12 and concur therein.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, there has been much discussed this afternoon in reference to this matter of investigating the Treasury Department. The gentleman from New York quoted extensively from the colloquy which occurred on the floor of the House on Friday last between the distinguished Speaker and myself.

I wish to quote one or two statements from that colloquy which the gentleman from New York did not quote or did not emphasize.

First, the Speaker gave as one of the reasons why he had not urged the investigation within the last six months:

To make an investigation at this time and discover such things as the gentleman from Pennsylvania and I believe would be discovered in the department, would certainly unsettle that confidence and would not be beneficial to the American people.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I read that.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes. To that I took exception and in view of the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN] indicated that the Speaker had implied fraud and corruption in the department. To that statement the Speaker took exception and said he did not imply fraud or corruption in the department, but he said that he referred to the "conditions" in the department. I then said that, if the Speaker in his official capacity said to the country that he believed that there was fraud and corruption or that which amounted to fraud and corruption in the department, that it was the Speaker's duty to proceed with the investigation. Whereupon the Speaker challenged me as a member of the Rules Committee to go along with him and report out a resolution. After a little further colloquy I did say, as quoted by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR]:

Yes; I think I will.

Then after further colloquy I said:

Well, I take it the Speaker is to appear before the Rules Committee in the usual custom and give the facts upon which he bases his charges. Of course we would not think of reporting out a rule—not a Democratic member would think of reporting out a rule, unless the Speaker or some one responsible, who makes the charges, does come before the committee and make his assertion.

Now, what happened? The Speaker has not appeared before the committee. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN] appeared before the committee, and he proceeded to insert in the RECORD the speeches which he had delivered during the last six months upon the floor of the House. He also inserted some correspondence in connection with the facts in those speeches and charges. Then the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] appeared before the committee.

Mr. MCFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I can not yield. I have but a few minutes.

Mr. MCFADDEN. The gentleman has made an improper statement.

Mr. MICHENER. In what way?

Mr. MCFADDEN. There was substantiating evidence submitted of frauds in the withholding of taxes.

Mr. MICHENER. The substantiating evidence consisted of the gentleman's speeches and of the correspondence which the gentleman from Pennsylvania submitted. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] proceeded to tell us about his efforts to impeach Andrew Mellon some time ago.

Then the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CROWE] suggested something which he thought ought to be investigated but did not imply fraud or corruption. Then we had the testimony of Mr. Ballantine and Mr. Meyer, as suggested by those who have preceded me here to-day. So the committee arrived at the conclusion that there had not been sufficient evidence, in view of all the circumstances, to warrant an investigation at this time.

I regret that my time is so limited, but I appreciate that all of this discussion in reference to this investigation is out of order during the consideration of a conference report; but inasmuch as some members of the Rules Committee have discussed the matter and have referred to me, I am making these few remarks.

If I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] correctly, he intimated that as a member of the Rules Committee I had "obstructed" reporting out the resolution providing for the investigation. I hoped that I had made my position clear, even to the gentleman from New York, that I was not only willing but felt it my duty to vote to report out a resolution providing for the investigation if, in my judgment, there was sufficient cause shown by the proponents of the resolution. In my judgment, nothing material was developed at the hearing in favor of the resolution other than the testimony above referred to, and surely that showing would not warrant the committee in setting in motion an investigation that would cost the taxpayers hundreds of thousands of dollars. I say hundreds of thousands because the least estimate suggested by the proponents was $100,000. In addition, the work of the whole Treasury Department would be disrupted. Mr. Ballantine, the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, advised us that his department was trying to administer the new tax law without additional personnel; that it was essential unless additional taxes were levied, that adjustments be made of pending claims; that all of this work would be at a standstill during this investigation.

Regardless of the cost, if I believed that there was fraud or corruption in the department, I am sure that our people would want the department purged at once. Possibly the department has made mistakes, possibly a general audit for many years back would be wholesome, and when Congress convenes in December, and, as suggested by the Speaker, the election will be over, then if it is thought advisable for a general audit and investigation of the Treasury Department, this resolution can be considered.

Let it be understood that this investigation will take many months, and, in my judgment, no comprehensive investigation can be made in less than a year and a half or two years. I think it is generally conceded that if an investigating committee is set up that the members would not have time to give any consideration to the matter until in November. Politics should play no part in an investigation of this kind. The personnel of the Treasury Department is nonpartisan; the employees are almost entirely under the civil service, and any investigation should be made by Members of this body who are big enough and broad enough and fair enough to waive aside political affiliations and advantages.

We hope that economic conditions in the country are getting better and I am happy to concur in the broad, sensible, patriotic views of the distinguished Democratic chairman of the committee, Mr. POU, and with that other equally fair and outstanding Democrat, Judge COX, of Georgia. These gentlemen have told you why they felt that this investigation at this time would be untimely, and their reasons are to me sufficient.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that amendments Nos. 13 to 18, inclusive, be considered as one amendment, and I move to recede and concur.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman does not mean amendment No. 17. The gentleman said amendments 13 to 18, inclusive. Does the gentleman mean amendments other than amendment No. 17?

Mr. COLLINS. Amendments Nos. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, and 18.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that amendments Nos. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, and 18 be considered en bloc and asks unanimous consent to recede and concur in the Senate amendments. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 13: On page 9, line 23, strike out the sign and figures "$4,648,006" and insert in lieu thereof the sign and figures "$6,281,824."

Amendment No. 14: On page 9, line 24, strike out the sign and figures "$5,122,479" and insert in lieu thereof the sign and figures "$5,928,389" and the following: "and the rental and subsistence allowances for the fiscal year 1933 shall be the same as for the fiscal year 1932, subject to such reduction therein as may be necessary under the provisions of section 102, Part II, of the legislative appropriation act for the fiscal year 1933."

Amendment No. 15: On page 10, line 11, strike out the sign and figures "$133,257,790" and insert in lieu thereof the sign and figures "$137,042,204."

Amendment No. 16: On page 10, line 15, strike out the sign and figures "$132,457,790" and insert in lieu thereof the sign and figures "$136,242,204."

Amendment No. 18: On page 11, beginning in line 5, strike out the colon and the proviso ending in line 4 on page 13.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the amendments en bloc?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, my colleague from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] has been trying for the last hour or so to obtain a little time. I wonder whether the gentleman from Mississippi will not agree to yield him a few minutes.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I will yield such time as the gentleman wants when we reach amendment No. 87.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman agree to then yield me, as a member of the Rules Committee, a few minutes?

Mr. COLLINS. I shall be delighted to do that.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I would like to ask the gentleman one question on the bill. Can the gentleman tell me in dollars how much we are adding to this bill from the time it left the House?

Mr. COLLINS. That amount is $3,492,367.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is in addition to the total amount in the bill as it left the House?

Mr. COLLINS. That is right.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And when it left the House there were several millions of dollars added to what the committee had reported to the House.

Mr. COLLINS. There was quite a considerable sum added in the House; nearly $6,000,000.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And now there are several millions of dollars added to the bill as it left the House.

Mr. COLLINS. Yes; and the total amount of the bill, plus the amount carried for War Department items in the relief bill, will make the appropriations for the War Department for next year more by several millions than is available this year. Does that satisfy the gentleman?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The answer is correct, but I am not satisfied.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I am going to yield to the gentleman later.

Mr. BRITTEN. I want to ask the gentleman a question about the bill.

Mr. COLLINS. No; I do not want to prolong the discussion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi to consider the Senate amendments en bloc?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi to recede and concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 32: Page 26, line 16, after the word "purposes," strike out all down to and including the word "transfer," in line 8, page 27.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 54: After line 16, page 51, insert "When approved by the President, not to exceed 15 per cent of each of the amounts hereinbefore appropriated under the subtitle 'Military activities' shall be available interchangeably for expenditure on the objects named, but no one item shall be increased by more than 15 per cent: Provided, That any such transfers shall be reported to Congress in the annual Budget."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment, with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. COLLINS moves to recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 54, with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Nothing in this act shall be construed to repeal or amend section 317, Part II, of the act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, approved June 30, 1932."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Do I understand that this amendment is proposed as a substitute for the Senate amendment? What is the need of the Senate amendment, in view of the action the House took on the legislative bill as a part of the economy program?

Mr. COLLINS. None whatever.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then why not disagree to the Senate amendment?

Mr. COLLINS. Senator REED insisted that a provision be inserted in this bill making the provisions of section 317 of the legislative appropriation act applicable to the War Department appropriation bill. He feared, I think without any just cause, that because of the fact the War Department appropriation bill would be passed after the economy bill section 317 would not be applicable, although in express terms the provisions of Part II of the legislative appropriation act are made applicable to all appropriation bills for the year 1933. I do not think it makes any difference whether the amendment proposed is in or out of the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We are not to understand that the insistence of a particular Member of the other body is justification for concurring in any amendment, are we?

Mr. COLLINS. I thought it was so trivial that I agreed to it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If it is trivial, he is an authority on that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 60: Page 66, line 22, strike out all of lines 22 to 25, inclusive.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, the majority leader has just phoned me that he is detained at a committee meeting, and asks me to make a unanimous-consent request to dispense with Calendar Wednesday business to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had ordered that the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 12281) to encourage the mining of coal adjacent to the Alaska Railroad in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, together with the amendment of the Senate thereto.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11732) entitled "An act to amend section 2 of an act approved February 25, 1929 (45 Stat. 1303), to complete the acquisition of land adjacent to Bolling Field, D. C., and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3400) entitled "An act to amend an act of Congress approved June 18, 1898, entitled 'An act to regulate plumbing and gas fitting in the District of Columbia.'"

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 60.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division of the question; and if my request is granted, I will move to concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on receding from Senate amendment No. 60.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri) there were 53 ayes and 36 noes.

So the motion to recede was agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri moves to concur in Senate amendment No. 60 with the following amendment:

"Not to exceed 10 per cent of the total amount that may be expended from appropriations made in this act for and incident to the manufacture and/or production of wearing apparel for enlisted men of the Regular Army shall be expended for the manufacture and/or production of such apparel in Government factories or establishments, except that such limitation may be exceeded to the extent that it may be ascertained, after competitive bidding in accordance with law, that work of such character may be performed at lesser cost in such Government factories or establishments."

Mr. COLLINS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was under consideration in the House, I offered an amendment, which was adopted, taking the Government out of business, in so far as manufacturing of enlisted men's clothing for the Army was concerned.

The bill has been in the Senate for weeks. Now the gentleman from Mississippi, in order to expedite action only, moves to recede and concur, the Senate refusing to agree to my amendment. I offer this motion to concur with an amendment, which provides that 10 per cent of the appropriation can be used in Government factories, and further provides that if the Government factory can manufacture clothing at a figure below the private manufacture, then the Government factory gets the work. I feel that is fair to the Government factory. The Government has no right to compete with the taxpayer, the private manufacturer, whose money is used for the upkeep of the Army. Have we no thought of our citizens? There are factories in my district that can produce as good a uniform as the clothing factory in Philadelphia run by the Government. You will find the Government can not compete with the private manufacturer if this amendment carries.

We have a committee, headed by Mr. SHANNON, of Missouri, now active, meeting in Kansas City, the middle of the country, next week and in St. Louis on the 27th, for the purpose of investigating the Government in business. That committee is to spend $10,000 of the taxpayers' money in its investigation. Do you mean anything? Do you mean to expend the taxpayers' money and do nothing? Here is your opportunity to demonstrate if you are in favor of taking the Government out of business. If you desire to take the Government out of business, vote for my amendment. Those who vote "no" want the Government to compete with the taxpayers. The situation that confronts us to-day is that the War Department is carrying on without its authorized appropriations. I dislike to delay the agreement on the report, but there is a principle involved. Our national conventions say we are opposed to the Government competing with private industry. A day or two delay will cause no harm. The bill goes to the Senate to-morrow. We have agreed to almost everything the Senate demanded; let the Senate agree to this House amendment.

Oh, you say this is not fair to the Government worker. How fair is it to the worker in the private factory now shut down for the want of work?

I say it is fair to the Government factories. They are getting more than they received in the amendment as it originally passed the House, and I hope the House will stand by my amendment. I was forced to change the proposal, and in doing so I not only give the Government factory 10 per cent of the work but it has the right to bid for the 90 per cent additional work to be let to the lowest bidder. The War Department maintains there is little difference between the Government factory and the privately owned factory. Let us see when the bids are opened.

Every Government agency that is now competing with private business should be closed. That has been and always will be my policy. The business people of this country are watching the Congress, and they will demand that you take the Government out of business. It is just as reasonable to say that the Government shall construct its own buildings as it is to say the Government must make the clothing for the enlisted men in the Army. I hope my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this amendment when offered in the House was given little or no consideration. It was subject to a point of order, but no point of order was made against it. The special committee appointed by the House to investigate Government competition with private business has had occasion to investigate conditions pertaining to the manufacture of uniforms at Philadelphia. The testimony given by the representatives of the Quartermaster Department does not show any reason why the Government should discontinue, peremptorily, the work over there in Philadelphia or the manufacture of uniforms for the enlisted men and officers of the Army. The War Department lets out by contract the furnishing of uniforms for the Reserve Officers' Training Corps and also for the National Guard. They are let to one manufacturer in New Jersey. There is very little difference in the cost of the uniforms manufactured at the Government plant and those under contract at the Government plant. The employees are selected from civil service register and work under modern conditions. They have 30 days' annual leave. They work eight hours a day. The difference in the cost amounts to only 15 cents per uniform. Your special committee has not had time to determine what policy it will recommend as to a further continuance of the manufacture of uniforms for the Army. I ask the House not to be precipitate in its action, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] would have it be in eliminating 900 employees, who are not employed under sweat-shop conditions, who are employed 8 hours a day and are given 30 days' leave. Give the special committee that you have appointed to investigate the matter an opportunity to consider the question more thoroughly, before taking this haphazard shot at the instance of the gentleman from Missouri, who seems to have some special interest to give it to some private manufacturer. But one manufacturer has had this contract for years and years. Give your special committee an opportunity to investigate and report.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman says there is a difference of only 15 cents in cost.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; here is the testimony by the specialists from the Quartermaster Department, who operated that plant for four or five years.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The Quartermaster Department admitted there was a difference of 91 cents per uniform. Further, St. Louis manufacturers want to bid on this work.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; and do it under sweat-shop conditions. Certain manufacturers want to bid, and of course under sweat-shop conditions they can underbid the cost of the Government.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. COX. The gentleman says the testimony shows a difference of only 15 cents per uniform. In the interest of accuracy, does not the gentleman recall there was testimony before the committee that the Government loses from $2.85 to $3.50 on every suit that is made?

Mr. STAFFORD. That was the testimony of one man, and that was not borne out by the specialists who had charge of the plant. I read the testimony just a little while ago. There is a difference of only 15 cents. Perhaps the gentleman is in favor of sweat-shop methods. I am not. We are not manufacturing everything in the way of uniforms. We are letting some to private manufacturers. That plant in South Philadelphia is a modern plant, with modern equipment, with 8-hour employment, and granting 30 days' annual leave to the workers. I ask the House to suspend judgment until the committee can go into this more thoroughly. The House appointed a special committee to investigate matters of this kind. Are you going to take quick action because of the request of the gentleman from Missouri, who may have some clothing manufacturer in his district out of employment in these depressed times?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY].

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, this amendment runs counter to the statutory duties of the Assistant Secretary of War. I read from the national defense act:

He [the Secretary of War] shall cause to be manufactured or produced at the Government arsenals or Government-owned factories of the United States all such supplies of articles needed by the War Department as said arsenals or Government-owned factories may be capable of manufacturing of producing on an economical basis.

In addition to that, the plant in South Philadelphia employs 900 men and women. They are ex-veterans of various wars or the widows and children of veterans. They are all under civil service, and at no time has there been a difference in cost of the garments, except to a very trifling extent, and that would be deceiving, because, after all, if they were manufactured on the outside, you must then charge the Government cost to supervision and inspection, because inspectors are employed by the year. Again, when the Government does the work you have uniform work and the same color. If it were given out part here and part there, there would be quite a conflict in the shades, which would detract from the appearance, and that would undoubtedly affect the pride of the men. I hope this amendment will be voted down.

Mr. SCHAFER. And we would have some of the same class of cheap uniforms that we had during the war under private contract.

Mr. RANSLEY. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. SCHAFER. Is it not a fact that in these days of depression these private fellows are clamoring for business and their offer because of the depression might be a few cents lower than the Government, but when you go to the past, before the depression struck them, before they reduced their prices, in their mad scramble for business, their cost to the Government was far in excess of what the Government charged at that time?

Mr. RANSLEY. That is true.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DARROW].

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Speaker, in these very few minutes I want to bring to the attention of the House the relative cost of these articles as manufactured in this depot and in commercial houses.

The depot has produced cotton breeches for $1.60 as compared with $1.81 when given to private contractors. At least 50 per cent of the uniforms were given out to private contractors, including those for the National Guard, the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, the citizens' military training camp, and the Officers' Reserve Corps. The articles made in the depot are of better material and more uniform and are furnished at the same relative cost.

As my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY] has said, they employ many ex-service men and the widows of ex-service men, who are paid on a piecework basis. To close this factory now and add to the unemployment would be a great mistake. In addition, it is economy on the part of the Government, as I see it, to continue manufacturing to this extent.

They have often advertised for bids and received very few replies. For instance, on May 5, 1930, there were 111 proposals sent out and only 4 responses were received.

Again, on the 23d of July 122 proposals were sent out and only 1 bid was received. So there was no keen demand for the work by outside manufacturers.

In addition, there is an investment of over $724,000 in this plant, which would be scrapped unless this work is continued.

I earnestly hope the pending amendment may be defeated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, there is merit in this amendment. I happen to be a member of the special committee which the House recently set up to investigate competition between the Government and private enterprise. We have proceeded far enough with the hearings to be able to determine that on all Government activities of the character of that dealt with here, the Government does sustain a tremendous loss.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] said that the testimony of the expert before the committee disclosed that the Government at the present time was only losing 15 cents per suit. That is not the testimony.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, I have it right here.

Mr. COX. One of the witnesses may have made that statement. That witness, however, was not fortified with the facts upon which the assertion was predicated. There were witnesses before the committee who showed, and I believe it is the fact, that the Government is losing from $2.85 to $3.50 on every suit that is manufactured in these plants.

This same witness, to whom the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] refers as an expert, testified that the Government, at the plant in Indiana, was manufacturing saddles at a cost to the Government of ninety-odd dollars, when the identical saddle can be bought in the open market for $34.

That witness further testified that in order to keep their organization going and to present some kind of justification for the set-up, they have engaged in the business of manufacturing pots and pans at a tremendous cost to the Government; manufacturing tables and other pieces of furniture which are of little use to the Government, on every piece of which the Government sustains a great loss.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. In just a moment.

Now, at the plant in Philadelphia we have a tremendous building, taken over by the Government, at a tremendous outlay, with modern machinery, on which no interest is charged nor taxes paid, and yet in spite of all that, the Government is losing something like $2.85 on every garment that is turned out.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri ought to be adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

GENERAL RELIEF LEGISLATION

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 285) providing for the consideration of H. R. 12946, to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and to create employment by providing for and expediting public-works program, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 285

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 12946, a bill to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by providing for and expediting a public-works program, and any points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 40 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, the bill shall be considered as having been read for amendment. No amendments shall be in order to said bill except amendments offered by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means and said amendments shall be in order, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding. Amendments offered by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means may be offered to any section of the bill at the conclusion of the general debate, but said amendments shall not be subject to amendment. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I fear some of the Members are confusing the policy of not permitting private industry to engage in the business of armaments with this proposition. There is quite a difference in building up an industry engaged exclusively in armaments and in buying ordinary commercial articles in the open market for the Army and the Navy. I feel certain that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] has been misinformed with reference to sweatshops. The sweatshops in the State of New York have been outlawed for at least 15 or 18 years. Surely an outlaw factory could not obtain a contract from the War Department.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Of course.

Mr. STAFFORD. The one contractor who manufactures uniforms for the National Guard and the Reserve Officers' Training Corps is located in New Jersey and not New York.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am coming to that. Now, let us clear up New York first, because we have a great deal of uniform manufacturing there.

Mr. STAFFORD Not for the Government.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The sweatshops have been outlawed, and we have a very splendid factory law in New York State. Under it there can be no sweatshops. The reason I speak of that somewhat feelingly is that I had something to do in the campaign which brought about the abolition of the sweatshop, and we follow it very carefully, and as soon as we get information that the tenement house laws and the factory laws are being violated, it is immediately prosecuted.

As to New Jersey, all I have to say is that if this contractor operates a union shop, as far as union shops in men's garments are concerned, they are under the control of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union of America, one of the most progressive trade-unions in this country. I have a right to assume that the War Department under the Republican administration would not contract with a scab shop. Surely no sponsor or spokesman for the administration will state that the War Department would contract with a scab shop. Therefore, any contract for uniforms would be awarded only to a reputable, decent, and honest manufacturer. And a reputable, decent, honest manufacturer would have a contract with and employ members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America. That being so, there is no fear of any sweat-shop conditions. Gentlemen so solicitous in this instance can be sure that only self-respecting American labor will be employed.

The Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America is not only well managed but the factories under their control are well supervised. This union is working on a 40-hour week basis. The wages are controlled, and it is a splendid organization, which has done more toward cleaning out unsanitary, unfair conditions in the clothing industry than any other organization in the country. The Amalgamated is under the splendid and progressive leadership of Sydney Hillman.

Now, I would welcome any information to indicate that Government work is being produced under sweat-shop conditions. Why, the very Federal law under which contracts are awarded would preclude giving to a contractor any work from the Government under such conditions as the gentleman from Wisconsin describes, and if the contractor did violate those rules and the existing law on the subject, of course the Government could take immediate steps to remedy the condition. I urge the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri) there were—ayes 43, noes 55.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist on his objection?

Mr. SABATH. I withdraw my objection and demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. COLLINS and Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 55, noes 67.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist on his objection to the vote?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; I insist on my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Obviously there is not a quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 163, nays 128, answered "present" 1, not voting 138, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 62: On page 68, line 20, after the word "village," insert a colon and the following:

"Provided further, That hereafter Arlington National Cemetery shall be administered by an officer of the Army retired from active service under the provisions of section 1251, Revised Statutes, detailed on active duty for that purpose."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. COLLINS moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 62 and concur therein with the following amendment: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided further, That hereafter Arlington National Cemetery shall be administered by an officer of the Army retired from active service under the provisions of section 1251, Revised Statutes, detailed on active duty for that purpose, and, in addition, one retired officer may be continued on active duty in the office of the Chief of Finance, and the appropriation contained in this act for 'Pay, etc., of the Army,' shall be available for increased pay and allowances to other retired officers and enlisted men now on active duty to August 15, 1932, inclusive."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 79: Page 77, line 2, after "$54,000,000," insert a colon and the following proviso:

"Provided further, That the existing project for the improvement of the Miami River, Fla., authorized by the rivers and harbors act approved July 3, 1930, is hereby modified to include the improvement recommended by the Chief of Engineers in the report submitted in Senate Document No. 95, Seventy-second Congress, first session, provided that the authorization of $800,000 for the existing project shall not be increased but is hereby continued as the total authorization for the project as herein modified."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 80: On page 77, after line 10, insert a colon and the following proviso:

"Provided further, That the existing river and harbor project at Monroe Harbor, Mich., as authorized by the act aproved July 3, 1930, and in accordance with House Document No. 22, Seventy-first Congress, second session, is hereby modified in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 12, Seventy-second Congress, first session."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. COLLINS moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 80, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: "In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: ': Provided further, That the existing river and harbor project at Monroe Harbor, Mich., as authorized by the act approved July 3, 1930, and in accordance with Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, Document No. 22, Seventy-first Congress, second session, is hereby modified in accordance with the report submitted in Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, Document No. 12, Seventy-second Congress, first session.'"

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 87: On page 84, after line 14, insert the following:

"SEC. 4. No part of any appropriation made by this act shall be used in any way to pay any expense in connection with the conduct, operation, or management of any post exchange, branch exchange, or subexchange within any State, save and except for real assistance and convenience to enlisted men and troops in supplying them with articles of ordinary use, wear, and consumption not furnished by the Government: Provided, That excess and surplus stocks of merchandise now on hand at any exchange, branch exchange, or subexchange may be disposed of, and all goods on consignment shall be returned immediately: Provided further, That all branch exchanges and subexchanges located off of Government lands and outside of Government reservations, and operated by private contract or agreement on a commission basis, shall be closed and terminated as to such contract or agreement immediately: And provided further, That the Secretary of War shall make a report to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to the President of the Senate at the beginning of the next session of the Congress covering the several exchanges, branch exchanges, and subexchanges operated by or under the supervision of the War Department."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. COLLINS moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 87 and concur therein with the following amendment:

"In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"'SEC. 4. No part of any appropriation made by this act shall be used in any way to pay any expense in connection with the conduct, operation, or management of any post exchange, branch exchange, or subexchange within any State, save and except for real assistance and convenience to enlisted men and troops and their families in supplying them with articles of ordinary use, wear, and consumption not furnished by the Government: Provided, That excess and surplus stocks of merchandise now on hand at any exchange, branch exchange, or subexchange may be disposed of, and all goods on consignment shall be returned immediately: Provided further, That the Secretary of War shall make a report to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to the President of the Senate at the beginning of the next session of the Congress, covering the several exchanges, branch exchanges, and subexchanges operated by or under the supervision of the War Department.'"

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the gentleman should insert the words "and their families" after the word "men" instead of after the word "troops." The idea is to extend this privilege to enlisted men and their families.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, that change will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman explain why he has left out the second proviso, beginning in line 24, page 84, and running down to and including line 4, on page 85? Does that in any way interfere with enlisted men who desire to purchase materials from Government exchanges located outside of Army posts? They might be located outside rather than on the post.

Mr. COLLINS. The language about which the gentleman inquires provides for the termination of private contracts or agreements. We had no information as to the nature of such contracts or agreements and, therefore, were not willing to provide arbitrarily for their termination.

Mr. GOSS. It might save a lot of claims.

Mr. COLLINS. We felt it would be a mistake to do that.

Mr. GOSS. So that under the gentleman's amendment those exchanges would be continued.

Mr. COLLINS. Not necessarily.

Mr. GOSS. But they could be.

Mr. COLLINS. Not necessarily, because there is a committee that is now investigating the question of the Government engaging in business in competition with private enterprises, and it will probably make a report at the next session of Congress. However, between now and that time the gentleman is correct. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN], and I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I feel that at this late hour, 20 minutes past 5, I ought to apologize to the House for taking 10 minutes of its time; but one day last week a petition, signed by 77 Republicans, was presented to the House and referred by the Speaker to the Committee on the Judiciary. That petition requested the Speaker for immediate action toward a modification of the Volstead law as embodied in the platform of the Democratic Party.

My only reason for taking the floor, gentlemen, is the fact that the leader of the Democratic Party on Capitol Hill is the present Speaker, Mr. JOHN GARNER. I regard him as a very able, a very honest, and a very courageous leader of that party. I am calling upon him now to follow the dictates of the platform upon which he is running for the Vice Presidency, which calls for an immediate modification of the Volstead law.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. No; not now.

On last Friday, with no business on the floor of the House, at 1.45 o'clock in the afternoon, I had a sort of tentative arrangement with the majority leader of the House to be recognized for five minutes to talk about this very matter, when, lo and behold, the man who objected to my talking about modification of the Volstead law was none other than the coauthor of the O'Connor-Hull beer bill himself, the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. As long as I have mentioned the gentleman's name, certainly.

Mr. O'CONNOR. As I explained to the gentleman, the reason I objected was not to object to any consideration of the O'Connor-Hull bill, because that bill could not be considered. I objected to the gentleman from Illinois for the tenth time that day making a wet speech on a petition signed by 77 Republicans, with only two names on the petition—only two converts to the cause.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman is making a speech in my time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is the reason I objected. I will vote for that bill quicker than the gentleman.

Mr. BRITTEN. Not quicker than I shall vote for it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. And I voted for beer bills long before the gentleman voted for them.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the President sign the beer bill if we pass it?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; the President will sign the beer bill if we pass it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Garfield, the chairman of the committee on resolutions of the Republican convention, said the other morning that he would not sign it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Just give us a chance for the President to veto it.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am going to prove to my wet colleagues on that side of the House that the President will sign it. He is as appreciative of public sentiment as any man in this House. Fourteen years ago Mr. Hoover indirectly predicted just what has happened in the mean time. I will read an extract of his letter.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Not now. Let me finish this statement please.

On June 4, 1918—— [Laughter.]

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. No.

On June 14, 1918, the then United States Food Administrator, Herbert Hoover, wrote to one of your great southern dry Democrats, Senator SHEPPARD, concerning the prohibition question, and stated this—

Mr. GAVAGAN. What about the "noble experiment"? [Laughter.]

Mr. BRITTEN (reading):

If the American people want prohibition—

These are the words of Herbert Hoover, directed to Senator SHEPPARD, still your angelic dry leader—

If the American people want prohibition, it should prohibit to that end and not force the Food Administration to the responsibility for an orgy of drunkenness. It is mighty difficult to get drunk on 2¾ per cent beer; it will be easy enough if we force a substitution of distilled drinks for it.

If we stop brewing, the saloons of the country will still be open, but confined practically to a whisky-and-gin basis. Any true advocate of temperance and of national efficiency in these times will shrink from this situation, for the national danger in it is greater than the use of some 4,000,000 bushels of grain monthly in the breweries.

On this basis——

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BRITTEN. May I have five minutes more?

Mr. COLLINS. I yield the gentleman one more minute.

Mr. BRITTEN. If the gentleman will yield me five more minutes I shall promise not to talk about beer any more during the present session of Congress.

Mr. COLLINS. I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BRITTEN. For a short question.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman from Illinois has been a great advocate of the antiprohibition cause for the past two years. Would the gentleman mind telling us where he was when the vote on the Volstead Act was taken?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; I was in the hall and voted "no."

Mr. O'CONNOR. And on the vote to pass the Volstead bill over the veto of the President, where was the gentleman?

Mr. BRITTEN. I was in the hall and voted to sustain the veto of the President. The RECORD shows that.

Mr. Speaker, the leader of the Democratic Party is the Vice Presidential candidate. I challenge him to tell the country now whether he is for the Democratic plank upon which he is running or against it.

If he is for it, let him go right up to the second floor of the Capitol and ask the Committee on Rules to report out the O'Connor-Hull bill, which is a bill nonpartisan in character, framed by Democrats and Republicans alike, very carefully drawn, and a good bill that will provide at least $300,000,000 of revenue during the first year of its existence. If the vice presidential candidate is not running sincerely upon the Democratic platform, let him say so to the country and then we will be through. Let us have action like we had in the Senate on yesterday. Let us determine this question once and for all for this Congress. The word "immediate" means only one thing. It means without intervening motion; it means now; it means next; and let us do it now; and if you gentlemen who were instrumental in putting across the wet plank at the Chicago convention are afraid to vote for the O'Connor-Hull beer bill, then vote present or go to the ball game, but for goodness sake give the rest of us a chance to vote our convictions.

But let the country know by your vote whether you are sincere or only fishing for votes. Let the country know whether your platform is sincere. I maintain that your platform on prohibition is hypocritical and insincere and that your plank for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment is just as insincere as is your plank for the "immediate" modification of the Volstead law. You do not mean what you say.

Mr. BLACK. What does yours mean?

Mr. BRITTEN. I will tell you what our platform is. Our prohibition platform is so close in character to the Beck-Linthicum nonpartisan repeal bill, framed and voted for by Democrats and Republicans alike in the House, that you can not tell them apart, and you gentlemen on the Democratic side are as strongly for that as we are.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. Perhaps the Speaker is running on the Democratic platform——

Mr. BRITTEN. Perhaps.

Mr. SCHAFER. Since the speeches and votes of the Democratic leaders in the Senate on yesterday show that they interpret the platform on modification of the Volstead Act as a revision of one-half of 1 per cent downward instead of upward, the same as in the case of the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill.

Mr. BRITTEN. Now, gentlemen, in all seriousness I hold in my hand an editorial—and there are many like it coming from metropolitan dailies all over the United States. I will read it. It is from the Chicago Tribune of July 10.

GARNER v. GARNER

At this writing it is not at all clear whether Mr. GARNER, as Speaker of the House of Representatives, will escape from Mr. GARNER as candidate for Vice President or whether the candidate will catch the Speaker. Anyone can do Post-Office Jack a favor by recognizing that these are two different persons who are not even on speaking terms with each other. They are working opposite sides of the street.

Mr. GARNER, the candidate, is for immediate beer. Mr. GARNER, the Speaker, is against it, and the twain do not intend to meet if they can help it. Privately it is understood that Speaker GARNER would like to bust Candidate GARNER one on the nose for an incessant nuisance and impertinent marplot who will have his beer to-day. If Post-Office Jack's shaving mirror is found shattered, it will be known that the Speaker has busted the candidate one.

What a Dromio, two in one, and in a turmoil! Thus Mr. GARNER haunts himself, and the marvel is how he knows at any time who he is. Which is the ghost which rises to confront the too substantial flesh and blood? Is it the Speaker or the candidate? Which of these GARNERS is real and which is unreal?

Is the candidate true to GARNER and the Speaker false, or is it the Speaker who confounds the craven compromising of the candidate, who denounces the betrayal of a noble cause by his alter ego, a pusillanimous GARNER, who, dealing with the lean and hungry McAdoo, did sell the reputation of his sires themselves to gain a preferment stained as it was with beer?

No one can tell. In this malty mystery, this brew of politics and hops, one GARNER has done the other dirt. One is a ghastly traitor to the other, but which one pursues yelling "Immediate!" with the voices of a thousand delegates and which flees calling upon friendly spirits to exorcise the demon in pursuit we do not know.

Nor can the country take it as a sporting event and hope the best man wins. Perchance Mr. GARNER isn't in any manifestation a best man. Probably all he could get out of wrestling with himself would be a dogfall. If the astonished Representatives should see their Speaker suddenly take to beating himself over the head with the gavel, they must understand that it is only the house of GARNER trying to come to order.

That editorial comes from a paper which has a daily circulation of over 700,000 copies. Here is another one equally as strong. I will read a telegram from Matthew Woll, of the American Federation of Labor.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 7, 1932.

Hon. FRED A. BRITTEN,

United States House of Representatives:

On behalf of labor's national committee for modification of the Volstead Act we sincerely hope that all Members of the Senate and House who recognize need for immediate change in present conditions will join in supporting the bills modifying present Volstead Act. We sincerely hope forces favoring modification of Volstead Act will not become divided to the point of permitting defeat because of difference as to alcoholic content. We trust you will leave no stone unturned to secure immediate modification of Volstead Act, especially in view of both political party conventions, having expressed dissatisfaction with present prohibition situation.

MATTHEW WOLL,
President Labor's National Committee for Modification of Volstead Act.

These people expect the present Democratic Congress to vote on a beer bill for revenue. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] five minutes.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman from Mississippi state when we are going to finish the conference report?

Mr. COLLINS. If the gentleman will permit, I promised the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. BRITTEN, to yield him five minutes. I made that promise early in the day, and I felt it my bounden duty to live up to my promise. At the same time I made the promise to the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. SABATH, that I would yield five minutes to him. I want to say to the gentleman that I am doing this just because I promised to do it.

Mr. SNELL. Are there any more promises out?

Mr. COLLINS. Those are the only two whom I promised. I might say to the gentleman that this is just as distasteful to me as it is to the gentleman from New York. [Laughter.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker and ladies and gentlemen of the House, I have been observing for the last four days that my colleague [Mr. BRITTEN] is pregnant of something of which he desires to deliver himself. [Laughter.] Naturally, I was under the impression that he desired to explain his vote against the relief bill that would have aided the starving unemployed, the States, the municipalities, the counties, and subdivisions thereof by enabling them to proceed with needed improvements and pay their school-teachers, policemen, and other public servants; therefore, I considerately asked the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. COLLINS] to yield my colleague [Mr. BRITTEN] sufficient time thinking that since he has for more than three weeks been assuring the people of Chicago of his great interest and effective activity in their behalf, he would explain why he voted against that bill. Now I am greatly surprised to hear, instead of an explanation of his vote against the relief bill, the gentleman regale the House with a lot of buncombe on the beer bill.

It is amusing to me, after my many years of effort to repeal the eighteenth amendment, or at least to effect a modification of the Volstead Act, to hear my colleague [Mr. BRITTEN] of late, especially since the Democratic Convention, in the press and on the floor of this House jokingly—for that is what it is—demand a change in the Volstead Act, and in this effort he has been volubly aided by the gentlemen from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER and Mr. STAFFORD] and the gentleman from Connecticut, Senator BINGHAM, at the other end of the Capitol. All this amounts to an unsuccessful effort to mislead the American people who are honestly seeking repeal of this crime-breeding Republican monstrosity, the prohibition law. All this talk by my colleague [Mr. BRITTEN] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] is to enable them to say that "we, too, Republicans, are for beer," when in fact they know full well that their insincere efforts and insincere requests of the Speaker for action on the beer bill are nothing but unadulterated buncombe. [Applause.] These professional Republican wets also know that the Republican Senate very recently refused to consider the beer bill. They also know that they have been unable to muster more than 77 votes on the Republican side for this beer bill and that if a majority of the Democrats now in Washington should vote for it we would then not be able to pass it. Further, they fully understand that, notwithstanding a statement read by my affable and learned colleague [Mr. BRITTEN] and purporting to have been made by President Hoover in 1918 when he was dizzily angling for the Democratic Presidency, President Hoover will not sign any beer bill or any bill effecting a modification of the Volstead Act. The gentleman [Mr. BRITTEN] is not so void of general knowledge and common sense as to believe that President Hoover is not under the domination and control of the Anti-Saloon League and that the league would allow him to sign any such bill.

Therefore, as I have said, the utterances of my colleagues (Mr. BRITTEN, Mr. SCHAFER, and Mr. STAFFORD) are pure buncombe and they know it. If they are sincere, they should condemn the Republican Party and the Republican platform for their hypocritical attitude toward the prohibition question and come out flat-footedly and unmistakably and join the Democrats in the election of Governor Roosevelt and Speaker GARNER for the presidency and vice presidency, because not until the good people elect a substantial Democratic House, a Democratic Senate, and Governor Roosevelt and Speaker GARNER on a progressive, forward-looking, Democratic platform can we hope for any real remedial action. Obviously, it will not take long to effect this desired result, because election day is fast approaching and the people will not be fooled or misled as they were in 1928 by Hoover and the other Republicans, but will vote the Democratic ticket solidly throughout every section of our distraught and unhappy country. [Applause.]

Mr. GRANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the distinguished gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; I gladly yield to my learned and accommodating friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. GRANFIELD. I have listened attentively to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] speak in behalf of the immediate passage by this House of an amendment to modify the Volstead Act. Both of these gentlemen are very ardent and powerful wet advocates, and I certainly join with them in their efforts. However, I am fearful these colleagues of mine are not cognizant of the fact that very recently Bishop Cannon again pledged the fullness of his dry influence to President Hoover's candidacy for reelection. This indicates to my mind that Mr. Hoover will oppose any modification of the present law, and will do nothing to destroy the Hoover-Cannon coalition, knowing how indispensable Bishop Cannon's support will prove in the forthcoming election.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman is correct. Mr. Hoover will oppose any modification of the present prohibition law because the Anti-Saloon League forces, the chief of staff of which is Bishop Cannon, will not let him do otherwise.

My colleague [Mr. BRITTEN], the naval expert, is very much interested, he tells us, in raising revenue, and he has many times repeated a statement made on this floor that the manufacture and sale of beer would bring to the Government a revenue of $300,000,000 a year, and thereby take care of the large Republican-made deficit. I agree with the gentleman in saying that, but there we part, because he is found always supporting these large and ever-increasing, back-breaking, tax-consuming expenditures for the Army and the Navy and other departments and bureaus, when he should be helping with an economy program, such as advocated by his Republican President in the public press, but not practiced by the administration, the practicing of which would obviate the deficit.

Mr. Speaker and ladies and gentlemen, the condition of our country is altogether too serious, and my debonair colleague from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] and others should recognize it and restrain themselves from taking the time of the House with these insincere and ridiculous statements, because they will not avail. People know only too well about the Republican refusal to remedy the orgy of plunder, criminal waste, and corruption; they know of President Hoover's refusal to act to forestall and mitigate the criminal evils that are responsible for the greatest destruction and panic in the history of our Nation or any other nation, a panic that has brought about the closing of 3,000 banks, shunted 12,000,000 men out of the ranks of the employed, wiped out the savings of 20,000,000 of our people, and has taken over 30,000 of useful lives, and closed thousands and thousands of factories and businesses.

I notice that the chief of staff of the administration, Secretary Mills, fired the opening gun of the Republican campaign in New England the other evening, but I did not hear of his saying a single word against prohibition; and no man in the Republican Party who has any respect for the truth will bear out the statement of my colleague [Mr. BRITTEN] that there is a question as to where the Democrats stand on the prohibition question. On the other hand, there is not a sincere, unequivocal word in the Republican platform dealing with the repeal of the eighteenth amendment or the modification of the Volstead Act. Repeating, the people who are going to select the next President of the United States are properly indignant and disgusted with the Republican maladministration, and they will cast their votes for Roosevelt and GARNER because they know that only by the election of these two eminent, proved gentlemen may the country expect any relief from our intolerable conditions. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Mississippi yield for a question on the pending legislation?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. In the original amendment of the Senate as well as in the substitute amendment proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi I find used the word "State," referring to a post exchange, a branch exchange, "within any State." I take it that that term is used in a narrow restricted sense, referring to the 48 States of the Union, so that this prohibition will not apply in the insular possessions such as Hawaii or the Philippine Islands.

Mr. COLLINS. That is the way I take it. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to was laid on the table.

COAL MINING IN ALASKA

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following request from the Senate:

SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
July 11, 1932.

Ordered, That the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the bill H. R. 12281, to encourage the mining of coal adjacent to the Alaska Railroad in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, together with the amendment of the Senate thereto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the request will be granted.

There was no objection.

MEMBERS OF THE RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION (S. DOC. NO. 136)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Section 3 of the act creating the Reconstruction Finance Corporation provides:

> The management of the corporation shall be vested in a board of directors consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury, or in his absence, the Under Secretary of the Treasury, the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, and the Farm Loan Commissioner, who shall be members ex officio, and four other persons appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Of the seven members of the board of directors not more than four shall be members of any one political party and not more than one shall be appointed from any one Federal reserve district.

The extraordinary heavy burdens placed upon the directors of the corporation during the past few months have resulted in the overwork especially of the ex officio members. It has within the past few days arrived at a point where there is danger of a physical breakdown among the ex officio members in their endeavor to carry dual duties.

I therefore recommend to the Congress an amendment to the act which would eliminate the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board and the Farm Loan Commissioner as members ex officio when successors shall have been appointed. It is important that the Secretary of the Treasury shall remain as an ex officio member and under the provisions for the Under Secretary to act as an alternate it offers the necessary relief. It is desirable that the Treasury should maintain its intimate association with the corporation because of the great financial problems involved in Government issues.

In order that the operations of the corporation may be conducted with certainty and public confidence, both as to its nonpartisan character and its personnel, I recommend that the number of the board be increased to eight, of whom not more than four shall belong to any one political party.

HERBERT HOOVER.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 11, 1932.

BRIDGE ACROSS OHIO RIVER, WELLSBURG, W. VA.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he should recognize the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BACHMANN], for the purpose of calling up a Senate bill, which seems to be a general bridge bill, and has something to do with the immediate employment of labor. The Chair takes the responsibility of recognizing the gentleman from West Virginia for that purpose.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill, S. 4741, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Wellsburg, W. Va.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks the attention of the gentleman from West Virginia, and the gentleman from Ohio. The Chair was informed by these gentlemen that those who objected to the consideration of this bill when it was called up on the Consent Calendar have had the matter explained to them and that they withdraw their objection. Is that correct?

Mr. BACHMANN. There was one objection. Mr. LAGUARDIA wanted to see the letter approving the bill from the West Virginia Bridge Commission. I exhibited that to him this afternoon and he said he had no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not like to recognize anyone to take up a bill that has been objected to, when the gentleman who objected to it is absent from the Chamber.

Mr. BACHMANN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] has withdrawn his objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Wellsburg, W. Va., authorized to be built by the J. K. Mahone Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, by an act of Congress approved May 14, 1928, heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved March 2, 1929, and May 13, 1930, are hereby further extended one year and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.
> SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

WORLD ARMS CONFERENCE AT GENEVA

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein the statement I desired to make to-day and a copy of a resolution that I introduced concerning the world arms conference at Geneva.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. Reserving the right to object, what does the resolution provide?

Mr. TINKHAM. It provides for the withdrawal of American representation at the arms conference.

Mr. SCHAFER. Why does the gentleman want to do that, in view of the fact that the President has put forth a fine program which goes a long way toward relieving the burden on the taxpayers of these big military and naval establishments?

Mr. TINKHAM. Because I have no confidence that there will be any success there and do not believe we should be represented there any further.

Mr. SABATH. Is it not perhaps on account of the further fact that nothing is being accomplished? We are increasing the appropriations for the Army and the Navy from day to day. So what is the use for us to participate over there when we are increasing our armament appropriations?

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

The SPEAKER. Regular order is demanded.

Mr. SCHAFER. I shall not object, but I do not agree with the gentleman's position.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM]?

There was no objection.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, no better illustration of the danger of the participation of the United States in European political affairs can be found than its present participation in the general disarmament conference at Geneva.

This participation, it is reported in London, has resulted in the dictation by Secretary of State Stimson to the Republican convention at Chicago of a paragraph in the platform of that party which reads:

> We favor enactment by Congress of a measure that will authorize our Government to call or to participate in an international conference in case of any threat of nonfulfillment of Article II of the treaty of Paris (Kellogg-Briand pact).

This is not only a dangerous step but a complete abandonment of the American salutary policy of refraining from interference or participation in the political affairs of Europe. It clearly indicates a desire to place European interests before American interests. It seeks to attempt to guarantee European peace even at the expense of the involvement of the United States in war.

If such a policy as is proposed by this paragraph in the Republican platform were adopted by the United States, the United States would no longer be a great neutral nation in future wars but would be involved upon the side of one or the other group of belligerent powers seeking world domination.

The history of international affairs for centuries shows a grouping of powers in Europe for their own advantage. Such a grouping exists to-day in Europe. It would be impossible for the United States to participate in an international conference of the kind proposed without moral or other commitment. Any commitment of American interests in advance to such groups must inevitably result in ruinous and fatal consequences to American peace.

It has been suggested that this paragraph commits the United States to the guardianship and defense of the treaty of Paris, which means that the United States becomes the guardian and defender of the peace of the world. History records no more fantastic and dangerous delusion of grandeur than this. It can mean no less than the end of this Republic.

The United States should be guided by history and reality, and not be governed by emotionality and sentimentality.

Disarmament in Europe is a political question for Europe to settle. For the United States to dictate to Europe as to her needs and policies not only is indefensible but must be offensive.

France, with her allies, dominates the European Continent economically, militarily, and politically. For years she has insisted that she will not disarm unless she is given political guaranties which she deems as adequate as those she now possesses in her military force. In these circumstances, disarmament in Europe is not possible without the giving of these guaranties to France. It is for Europe to decide whether these guaranties should be given. The United States should not be a party in the settlement of this purely European question. The paragraph favoring a consultive pact which has been inserted in the Republican platform by Secretary Stimson is a surreptitious attempt to have the United States join to meet the demands of France, thereby hopelessly involving the United States in the political affairs of Europe.

This is too great a price for the United States to have to pay. She should withdraw at once from participation in the present general disarmament conference. This conference has proved a complete fiasco, and I am to-day offering a resolution providing for the immediate withdrawal of the American delegates and the immediate termination of any further expenditure on that account.

Resolution

Whereas there is a paragraph in the current Republican platform as follows:

"We favor enactment by Congress of a measure that will authorize our Government to call or to participate in an international conference in case of any threat of nonfulfillment of Article II of the treaty of Paris (Kellogg-Briand pact)"; and

Whereas this paragraph favoring a "consultive pact" is in complete repudiation of American salutary traditional policy of refraining from any interference or participation in the political affairs of Europe and of avoiding entangling alliances; and

Whereas such "consultive pact" if enacted by Congress certainly would be a participation in the political affairs of Europe and might well lead to the involvement of the United States in war; and

Whereas a well-authenticated report from London, where American foreign policy at times has been disclosed with much more clarity than it has been in Washington, stated that Secretary of State Stimson insisted upon the insertion of this paragraph; and

Whereas the said report intimated that this paragraph proposing a "consultive pact" was inserted in the current Republican platform to assist in removing the objections of France and her allies to European disarmament and is intended as a compensation for reduction in armament; and

Whereas armament or disarmament in Europe is strictly a European political question, and it was well known in advance by nearly all competent authority that the general disarmament conference at Geneva could result in nothing but failure, with attempts from time to time deceitfully to make it appear for political purposes that it was a success: Therefore be it

Resolved, That forthwith all American representatives at the general disarmament conference now being held at Geneva be recalled and American participation be withdrawn, and that no further expenditure be incurred on that account under congressional authorization.

AGRICULTURAL RELIEF

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a dispatch from the Governor of Iowa.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Speaker, as heretofore stated, it is my opinion that this body will make a terrible mistake if they adjourn without enacting into law one or more of the measures proposed for the relief of agricultural districts.

Both the Goldsborough and Frazier bills should be adopted before this Congress adjourns. I, for one, am willing to remain here all summer if necessary to pass this legislation. Idle talk and promises will not do. The situation demands immediate attention.

I believe we will be serving not only the agricultural districts but our Nation as a whole if the above-mentioned measures are passed and put into effect at once.

Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks, I include the following telegram from Hon. Dan W. Turner, Governor of Iowa:

DES MOINES, IOWA, July 9, 1932.

Hon. B. M. JACOBSEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Economic conditions and public sentiment in the Middle West fast approaching organized resistance to private debt settlement, and demand action by Congress before adjournment on credit facilities. At that distance you can hardly realize to what extent farm foreclosures are taking homes of stable citizens. If relief is not forthcoming country faced with individual and governmental bankruptcy and complete economic collapse, including banks, agriculture, and industry. Strongly urge continuous session until Goldsborough bill or similar legislation be adopted and some agency authorized or created to finance or refinance real-estate mortgages. Absolutely essential to raise commodity prices to meet unemployment problem. Delegations of farmers, laborers, business men, and bankers constantly urge this to my attention. If something is not accomplished before Congress adjourns, the resentment of the voters will find expression. Am wiring all Iowa Congressmen, and asking Middle West governors to do same.

DAN W. TURNER, Governor of Iowa.

RELIEF FOR VETERANS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, permission having been granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I am inserting the following communication I have this day forwarded to each Member of the House of Representatives:

JULY 12, 1932.

To the Members of the House of Representatives:

DEAR COLLEAGUE: I desire to invite your attention to an amendment to the Federal home loan bank bill, H. R. 12280, which was adopted by the Senate on yesterday. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, July 11, 1932, p. 15009.)

PAY BANKER TO USE MONEY

The amendment permits the national banks to deposit with the Secretary of the Treasury $1,000,000,000 of United States Government bonds bearing 3⅜ per cent interest, and receive in return therefor $1,000,000,000 in new, crisp greenbacks—national currency. The banks will not only get the use of the new money but they will also get interest on the bonds which are to be deposited to secure the money. Here is the way it will work out. Each year the banks keep the money they will be paid, $37,500,000. A tax of one-half of 1 per cent, or $5,000,000, will be charged by the Government for the use of the money. The bankers will make a net profit of $32,500,000 a year. The capitalization of the national banks is $1,618,024,000; this privilege will be extended to the full amount of their capitalization. The bankers are now using that privilege, however, to the extent of $627,000,000 on 2 per cent bonds; bonds drawing a higher rate of interest will doubtless be substituted for the 2 per cent bonds if this bill becomes a law.

A full discussion of this proposal appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of date July 8, 1932, pages 14862 to 14872. Senator BLAINE'S speech on page 14871 is very interesting.

IS IT FIAT MONEY?

The question is, Why is this money not fiat money if the money proposed to be issued in payment of the adjusted-service certificates is fiat money? The same principle is involved. The difference is considerable from the standpoint of the Government. If the bankers get a billion dollars in exchange for a deposit of a billion dollars in Government bonds the bankers will also get interest on the bonds in addition to the use of the money. The veterans will get the money but no interest. If the veterans are paid the Budget will not be affected; not true if the bankers are favored.

PAY A DEBT WITH THE BILLION

Why not use this billion dollars to pay the needy and unemployed veterans their adjusted-service certificates? They are consumers and need the purchasing power; the money will go into the channels of trade; we have no assurance that the national banks will use it or cause it to be used.

THINK IT OVER

I hope my colleagues will think this over; a great principle is involved. Why pay the banks to use the Government credit in order to expand the currency when the Government can pay a debt and cause an expansion of the currency in the most effective way?

Respectfully submitted.

WRIGHT PATMAN, M. C.

HEIRS OF DECEASED INDIANS, ETC.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6684) to amend the act of June 25, 1910, entitled "An act to provide for determining the heirs of deceased Indians, for the disposal and sale of allotments of deceased Indians, for the lease of allotments, and for other purposes," so as to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to modify the terms of certain contracts, when in his judgment it is in the interest of the Indians so to do, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, we can not take up important matters like that under unanimous consent, especially at this late hour. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had checked four different propositions. Included in that number is the one just offered by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BACHMANN]. The Chair thinks it would be better to take this up at some other time.

Is there objection?

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I also join in the objection. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NOLAN], is interested in this bill, and he is not present. I object.

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

THE O'CONNOR-HULL BILL

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 10017), the so-called O'Connor-Hull beer bill.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 1260. An act for the relief of James E. Fraser;

H. R. 2010. An act for the relief of Malcolm Allen;

H. R. 2650. An act for the relief of George H. Holman;

H. R. 3460. An act for the relief of Caughman-Kaminer Co.;

H. R. 3467. An act for the relief of David C. Jeffcoat;

H. R. 4160. An act for the relief of Raymond D. Woods;

H. R. 5211. An act for the relief of the heirs of Samuel B. Inman;

H. R. 5276. An act for the relief of Hilda Barnard;

H. R. 5513. An act to permit the United States to be made a party defendant in certain cases;

H. R. 7309. An act for the relief of Frank R. Scott;

H. R. 7499. An act to amend act No. 3 of the Isthmian Canal Commission relating to the suppression of lotteries in the Canal Zone, enacted August 22, 1904;

H. R. 9590. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the collection and publication of statistics of tobacco by the Department of Agriculture," approved January 14, 1929; and

H. R. 12251. An act to provide for the conveyance of the Portage Entry Lighthouse Reservation and buildings to the State of Michigan for public-park purposes.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 2704. An act for the relief of Charles Lamkin;

H. R. 7293. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to grant to the city of Springfield, Mass., permission to construct and maintain a highway bridge across United States military reservation at the Springfield Armory, Mass.; and

H. J. Res. 361. Joint resolution to authorize the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service to make a survey as to the existing facilities for the protection of the public health in the care and treatment of leprous persons in the Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

ADJOURNMENT MEANS DODGING ANTIMONOPOLY LEGISLATION

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, on July 6 I appealed to the House not to adjourn this Congress until such time as we put into effect two of the planks which are found in the platforms of both parties. Both parties pledged an international conference to consider the question of silver. Both parties pledged further economy in government. The Republican Party pledged every possible economy in public expenses. The Democratic Party pledged an outright 25 per cent reduction in public expenses.

The low price of silver is destroying the foreign market for all American products. As we ship our products abroad and are paid for them in silver, we suffer immeasurably when we bring this silver money back to America and exchange it for American money. This unfavorable exchange has placed American cotton and wheat on a 35 per cent lower position than it was a year ago. The producers of cotton and wheat are compelled to ship their surplus abroad. There is no way for them to escape this intolerable loss resulting from unfavorable exchange. The American factories are escaping the loss of the unfavorable exchange by further curtailing their production and refusing to ship anything abroad. This is creating more and more unemployment.

Foreign factories buying material, paying wages with cheap silver money, shipping their products to America and selling them for our gold money are reaping a tremendous profit in the transaction. They are paying our tariff duties from this exchange which is favorable to them and unfavorable to us. As a result our American markets are being flooded with foreign products. This is causing more and more unemployment in the United States. Both political parties have recognized that this situation is largely the result of the depreciated value of silver. They have pledged an international conference, the purpose of which is to endeavor to correct this condition. We have suffered this condition for 11 months, and during this time human misery has increased in the United States to a point which is virtually unbearable.

We simply can not continue to suffer this situation for another 17 months. Yet, if we must wait for a Congress to be elected on these platforms in order to keep the pledges of both parties, we must wait until December of 1933. This is true if the Congress elected this fall does not convene until the regular time provided by the Constitution.

This international conference is not a partisan political issue. It is a bipartisan pledge. We should not adjourn without keeping this pledge.

This Congress has suffered much in an effort to provide a revenue bill which will balance the Budget. The people will suffer more in an effort to pay the taxes required by the revenue bill. In our effort to balance the Budget, we have heaped a billion dollars of new taxes upon the backs of the American people. Yet everyone knows that, with all of our efforts and with all of the agonies which the American people are going to suffer in paying these taxes, the Budget is not going to be balanced at the end of this fiscal year. Therefore we should immediately keep the bipartisan pledge of further reduction in public expenses.

I appeal to this House of Representatives, Republicans and Democrats alike, not to adjourn until these two pledges upon which the parties are in accord are kept.

On June 22 the Railway Labor Executives' Association made its appeal to the Congress not to adjourn until it has done everything within its power to meet the vital needs of the people in this hour of distress. This appeal was signed by the regularly constituted heads of 23 railway organizations. This appeal from the railway organizations is unanswerable. We can not adjourn unless we are willing to admit that this Congress is incapable of doing for the people that which must be done and that which some future Congress will do.

There is a specific responsibility upon the Democratic membership of this House not to permit this Congress to adjourn until it has kept the Democratic platform pledge pertaining to monopoly. The platform of the Democratic party solemnly states that it is the conviction of the Democratic party that one of the chief causes of our trouble have been fostering the merger of competitive businesses into monopoly. With this solemn conviction of the Democratic party as to the cause of our present trouble, it solemnly pledges to correct this situation by a revision of the monopoly laws for the better protection of labor, the small packer and the distributor. The Democratic majority of this House can bring out this legislation and it can pass it in this House of Representatives. It can do it with its own membership. It will not need to do it exclusively with its membership because it can count on most substantial support from the Republican membership of this House.

I would not be so partisan as to suggest that any man had so little interest in the welfare of the people and so much interest in the outcome of the election that he would walk away from his post of duty and refrain from doing that which he and his party believe will bring relief to the people and correct the conditions, which he and his party believe are primarily responsible for bringing upon the American people their present sad plight. Yet I would not be so neglectful of duty as to refrain from bringing before this House and the country the confession of a man, that although he believes with his party that monopoly is responsible for much of our present misery and that a revision of the monopoly laws will bring relief to the people, yet he will not turn his hand at this time to accomplish such relief. I believe that certain correspondence and telegrams between W. K. Henderson, president of the Hello World Broadcasting Corporation, of Shreveport, La., and Mr. GARNER, Speaker of this House and Democratic Vice Presidential candidate, disclose that Mr. GARNER prefers that this House adjourn failing and refusing to revise the antimonopoly laws, notwithstanding the fact that he and his party have solemnly stated that monopoly has brought about the most of our present troubles and that revisionary monopoly legislation will benefit labor, the small packer, and distributor.

On July 6 Mr. Henderson sent a telegram to Governor Roosevelt. He sent a copy of that telegram to Speaker GARNER. The telegram is set out in my address to the House of July 8 and is found on page 14924 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. In brief, Mr. Henderson called upon Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. GARNER immediately to bring out and pass through this House the promised revisionary legislation of the monopoly laws which would benefit labor, the small packer, and distributor. I have a telegram from Mr. Henderson of July 11, in which he reports Mr. GARNER's answer to this telegram from Mr. Henderson to Governor Roosevelt and Mr. GARNER. The telegram of July 11 which I have received from Mr. Henderson is in part as follows:

I have a letter from Speaker GARNER in which he states that any legislation looking to the curbing of monopoly and centralization of money would be opposed by the Republican Senate and vetoed by the President.

In this telegram which I received from Mr. Henderson of July 11, he states that he sent the following message to Mr. GARNER:

Replying to your letter of July 7, I only wish to remind that you have driven through the House and Senate legislation authorizing the borrowing of $2,300,000,000 to be placed at the disposal of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. You did this in the face of the announcement from the White House that such legislation would be vetoed. Now, in this matter of monopoly and centralization of money, by far the greatest economic question facing us, you dismiss it with the simple statement that a Republican Senate would refuse to concur in such legislation and that the President would veto same, whereas in this instance the President has not announced that he would veto such legislation. It is my belief that the voters of the country will not accept such a statement as any evidence of sincerity on the part of the Democratic leadership in opposition to monopoly.

W. K. HENDERSON,
President Hello World Broadcasting Corporation.

No man can enlarge upon this statement by Mr. Henderson.

One day Mr. GARNER, the Speaker of this House and the Democratic candidate for Vice President, forces through this House a bill on which the President has pledged his veto. At the same time he refuses to keep faith with the pledge of the Democratic Party to enact legislation to revise the monopoly laws for the benefit of labor, the small packer, and distributor, and offers as his excuse that a Republican Senate will not concur and the President will veto it. It is insulting the intelligence of the American people to assume that the people will believe that the Speaker of this House and Democratic candidate for Vice President is sincere in either his excuse for delaying such legislation or in his desire that his party shall ever keep its pledge to correct the very condition which it solemnly states is primarily responsible for the present misery of the millions of American people. How absurd it is for the Speaker and Democratic candidate for Vice President to suggest that the Republican Senate with a majority of one would reject antimonopoly legislation when among the Republican membership there are 15 or 20 progressive and insurgent Senators such as LA FOLLETTE, BLAINE, BORAH, NORRIS, FRAZIER, et al. Common sense shows that not only the insurgent Republican Senators will vote for such legislation, but the great majority of other Republican Senators such as Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, will vote for such legislation. Since when does the Speaker have any respect or fear for announced presidential vetoes?

This House can not adjourn with this antimonopoly legislation ignored except that the Democratic membership of this House votes for an adjournment. The Democratic membership is in the majority. It is in complete control of this House. This House can only adjourn upon the vote and direction of the Democratic majority. I simply want to say to the individual Democratic Members of this House, if you vote for an adjournment without passing this antimonopoly legislation, you stand before the American people along the side of your Speaker and vice presidential candidate as one who is not interested in correcting the wrong which your party has solemnly stated has caused the major portion of the existing economic and social despair in America.

I appeal to the Democratic membership not to adjourn this House failing and refusing to give to the people of this country the legislative relief which you have promised would help labor, the small packer, the distributor, and correct the very wrong which your party has solemnly stated is primarily responsible for present conditions in America.

AN INVESTMENT THAT STILL YIELDS DIVIDENDS

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, if we accept the view of many editors, all governmental services are, like Gaul, divided into three parts, viz, evils, necessary evils, and unnecessary evils. Great is the hue and cry against bureaucracy. One particularly enterprising editor now leads the pack with the engaging remark that a bureau is little better than a racket. This hair raiser so far marks a high-water mark of the rising tide of criticism.

But is it true? Are the hair-raising magazine writers and the hard-boiled business orators apostles of truth or of hokum? Are they altruists with the interests of the "common peepul" at heart, or do they go about with axes to grind?

Controversy is no part of my present concern. There are a few facts that ought to be self-evident, but apparently are not.

First of all, it might be well to reflect on the gauntlet that every dollar expended by the Federal Government has to run, and upon the elaborate system of safeguards which has been set up to prevent extravagance.

Here on my desk, for example, is a fat volume of more than a thousand pages. It is a record of the hearings held by the Agricultural Subcommittee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives on the appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year 1933. Similar records exist of hearings on all other appropriation bills, both for House and for Senate committees. But suppose we restrict ourselves to the Department of Agriculture, for much of the business and editorial criticism has been leveled in that direction.

The hearings on this agricultural appropriation bill consumed most of three weeks, extending from December 15, 1931, to January 7, 1932, with a 4-day recess at Christmas. Every bureau chief in the Department of Agriculture was haled before the subcommittee to defend his Budget requests and to answer thousands of very pertinent questions shot at him by the members of the subcommittee—many of them hostile to parts of the bill.

Long before that hearing, of course, the department's budget had been made up in detail, carefully studied, and revised by the heads of the department, again revised by the Bureau of the Budget before being submitted to the inspection of Congress.

I wish every American citizen could sit in for a few moments at a hearing of a congressional committee dealing with the routine appropriation bills. No one takes anything for granted. Everything must be explained and justified before the bill gets out of the subcommittee. It then must pass the committee. Then it must pass the House of Representatives. Thence it goes to the Senate committee for more inquiry, more pruning; thence to the Senate. By the time the bill is passed and the appropriation made it would be impressed upon that citizen's mind that though there are evils and inefficiency and waste in government, they are amazingly parallel to the evils and inefficiency and waste that exist in all other spheres of human action.

Everyone who delves into the department's past finds a record of research accomplishments covering dozens of pages. One of the earliest and brightest of those pages covers the period 1888 to 1893, when department scientists proved that a microorganism found in the blood of cattle is the cause of splenetic fever, and that the disease is transmitted by the cattle tick.

To an inhabitant of the island of Manhattan, say, where cattle ticks are scare, this discovery may seem remote, uninteresting, even unprofitable. The names of Theobald Smith, Curtice, Kilgore, and Salmon would strike no responsive chord. But this discovery, made by the aforementioned despised agricultural bureaucrats, was the first demonstration that a microbial disease can be transmitted exclusively by an insect host or carrier; this knowledge, far from being restricted to the livestock domain, led to the knowledge that yellow fever, malaria, typhus fever, African sleeping sickness, Rocky Mountain fever, and other maladies are similarly transmitted; made possible the control of yellow fever in the Canal Zone, and the building of the Panama Canal. How many thousands of lives of yellow-fever victims might have been saved if the discovery had been made a hundred years earlier!

For that discovery the American taxpayer paid individually a fraction of a mill a year; collectively, a few thousand dollars a year. And the value of the discovery? I would not attempt to value it any more than I would attempt to put a value on the work of Pasteur or Koch. It would be hard to state an amount large enough in dollars and cents to cover the value of that discovery—but it would probably exceed the entire cost of maintaining the scientific work of the Department of Agriculture for the first hundred years of its existence.

Along in 1903 came another notable discovery, the discovery that hog cholera is caused by a filterable virus. Here at last was an advance against the disease dreaded by hog producers for generations, a disease that wiped out whole herds with devastating swiftness. Having discovered the cause of hog cholera, the department scientists developed a preventive serum that has many times since saved the industry.

How much has that been worth to the livestock industry, and therefore to the Nation? I would not hazard a guess, but I will provide the material for you to make an estimate. Hog cholera losses formerly exceeded 5 per cent of all hogs, nowadays they run below 3 per cent. Since the hog population of the United States runs around 60,000,000, an annual loss of over 1,250,000 hogs has been prevented. Multiply that by the market value!

Not long ago the Associated Press carried an item from Florida announcing that "tung-oil production, which revolutionized the manufacture of varnish 25 years ago, may become a Gulf Coast region industry ranking with sugarcane, cotton, and corn." The first seeds of the tung tree were brought to the United States from China in 1905 by David Fairchild, plant explorer of the Department of Agriculture.

Books full of adventure and high courage have been written about these plant explorers. Here I can only set down, inadequately and lamely, the fact that we owe to them the Pima long-staple cotton now grown in the Salt River Valley of Arizona; the hardy alfalfas brought from Siberia; the soybean from the Orient; Sudan grass, Rhodes grass, Napier grass, velvet bean, and purple vetch from Africa and elsewhere.

We are indebted to Russia for durum wheat. Sudan grass now has an annual value of more than $2,000,000. The Washington navel orange, introduced by the department from Brazil in 1872, now makes up the bulk of the California orange industry. More recently the department has added the date, the alligator pear, the mango, Chinese and Japanese persimmons, the papaya, and the pistache nut, and now departmental scientists are experimenting with the rubber plant.

Anyone can visualize the peril involved and the value realized by the plant explorer's successful adventures in tropical jungles or among hostile oriental tribes. Equally exciting to the scientist, and of far-reaching consequence to the Nation's agriculture, is a discovery of a new fundamental principle of plant growth. One such discovery was that announced only a few years ago by the department that the flowering and fruiting of plants are greatly influenced by the length of the day. Thus it is not the approach of cold weather nor the age of a plant that determines when it shall bloom or form fruit; the stimulant that causes these phenomena is the gradual change in the length of the day.

Discovery of that principle may not have disturbed the blood pressure of the average layman, but it certainly excited the scientific world. It can be stated with confidence that the final results will excite the layman, for it means that the time of blooming of flowers in greenhouses can be controlled; that in plant-breeding work it is now possible, because of the control of blooming by shortening the day artificially with dark rooms, to cross-pollinate plants that in the past could not be crossed; and that plants from different latitudes can now be bred together.

Now, it strikes me that achievements of this sort could by no stretch of the imagination be a product of any institution which was "little better than a racket." It is hardly good sense to so characterize an institution which has the respect of scientists the world over. It betrays a melancholy lack of information.

But let me rest the case on something more substantial than opinion. Let me add to the few instances already cited a few more:

First. The improvement of kiln-drying wood so as to save the industry annually some $10,000,000.

Second. The discovery of methods to reduce the cost of grading and building concrete highways by 25 per cent or more.

Third. Mapping a billion acres of the agricultural lands of the United States, an achievement of service to millions of individual farmers, to agencies which loan money on land, to engineers, and to the ultimate formulation of a sound national policy of land use.

Fourth. Showing farmers how to terrace and otherwise handle their fields to prevent destructive erosion, the process which removes the best of our most fundamental resource—the land—and so costs us hundreds of millions of dollars annually.

Fifth. Converting the fuzz from cottonseed, the otherwise discarded tomato seed, the culls in the great citrus crop, and dozens of other "waste" products into products now worth millions of dollars annually.

Sixth. Developing two new insecticides which promise to help the farmer wage his perennial and perpetual fight against insect pests more effectively and economically.

Seventh. Producing cheap nitrogen from the air by a synthetic ammonia process, thus removing America's dependence on foreign nitrate supplies for fertilizer and for munitions.

Eighth. Providing the chief source of technical information on dust explosions, a constant hazard to life and property in 28,000 industrial plants.

Ninth. Insuring to the American family, at a cost of about 5 cents a year, canned and packed food products of cleanliness and quality. No longer is the purchase of canned food an adventure fraught with peril. A million and a half spent by the Food and Drug Administration serves 123,000,000 consumers by rigorous inspection of the products of a $12,000,000,000 industry.

Tenth. Reducing the degree of tuberculosis infection among livestock in the United States from more than 4 per cent when the tuberculosis-eradication campaign was begun 13 years ago to 1.4 per cent.

Eleventh. Supervising the building of about 100,000 miles of highways.

Twelfth. Developing a weather service for orchardists, ships at sea, aviators, business men, communities in danger of floods or storms—in fact, for every person in America.

Thirteenth. Protecting the public health through food and drug inspections, meat inspections, improvement in dairy and livestock sanitation, eradication or control of animal diseases, and nutritional information developed by home-economics experts.

Fourteenth. Grading the grain, the fruits, the vegetables, and other farm products of the Nation; guarding the ports against unwholesome food products and against plant and animal diseases and insects.

Fifteenth. Furnishing a market-news service and a crop-reporting service which is uninfluenced and unbiased by any considerations of selfish interest.

Sixteenth. Caring for 160,000,000 acres of national forests, providing fire protection to a total of 400,000,000 acres, and furnishing millions of young trees annually to farmers for reforestation.

Seventeenth. Inaugurating measures to control injurious rodents on about 38,000,000 acres in the past two years, resulting in savings to farmers and stockmen of around $10,000,000; protecting public health by campaigns to control disease-carrying rodents; establishing and maintaining 350,000 acres for wild-life refuges.

Eighteenth. Helping farmers increase productive capacity per acre and per livestock unit, producing more milk and more meat per unit of feed consumed, with the result that 25,000,000 acres have been released for other uses; speeding the shift from less productive to more productive crops per acre; helping 1-crop areas diversify by the introduction of new crops, drought-resistant seed, early maturing varieties, and improved farm practices.

And still I have given only a sketchy, ragged, inadequate picture of the Department of Agriculture, the job of which is to protect America's food supply, to help the farmer produce it more cheaply and more economically, to point out to him better ways of marketing, to police the movement of the food supply in the interest of the public health and honest dealing through the markets and the processing plants to the American dinner table; to keep constantly on the alert for new methods of production, new uses for crops or by-products; to explore the rainbow promise of every field of scientific research and to interpret the findings in the interest of every American citizen.

At this very moment, for instance, the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry and Soils could provide an apt illustration of what that rainbow promise of research can mean. He has in his office a small bottle of a brownish cellulose substance called lignin, which was derived from the corn plant after many years of experimentation. He will tell you that lignin is one of the principal parts of woody plant tissues; that it can therefore be procured in great abundance; and that it may yield a vast new collection of products. He will not say positively that it will, for many years of scientific research have shown him that no one can ever predict the ultimate result of any given scientific study.

But—and it is a strongly optimistic "but"—the belief is that lignin will yield as many products of commercial, chemical, and medical importance as have been yielded by coal tar, that by-product of the manufacture of coal gas, the study and exploitation of which gave to Germany a preeminent position in the world chemical trade. Already the Bureau of Chemistry and Soils has made dyes from lignin which are more fast than the first aniline dyes made from coal tar. And the research in the possibilities of lignin has barely begun.

It is not surprising that all attempts to measure the return on the investment in scientific research—and in the work of the Department of Agriculture generally—have usually ended in estimates so high that the department has been reluctant to make them public. A few years ago one such attempt, rather carefully made, yielded the astonishing estimate that for every dollar expended for research in the department a return of a thousand dollars was collected by the public. Even after arbitrarily reducing the estimate one-half, department officials hesitated to subject themselves to the barbs of uninformed critics. More recently a careful analysis of 20 continuing projects in pest control revealed that they cost $300,000 a year but resulted in saving crops worth about $70,000,000 a year—not a bad return on the investment these days.

Risking the wrath of the more virulent editorial writers, a number of individuals outside the Department of Agriculture have lately expressed opinions diametrically opposed to the criticisms heard so frequently. There is, for instance, the Democratic chairman of the House Subcommittee on Agricultural Appropriations, Mr. BUCHANAN, of Texas, who declared on the floor of the House early this year:

> From my investigation, I believe this department is one department of the Government that has cooperated with the President 100 per cent in striving to reduce expenses.

Another, John Flynn, widely known writer on business and finance for many leading magazines, last year went so far as to say that—

> Government offices in general, and the Department of Agriculture in particular, get through more work more efficiently than do most private businesses.

A third opinion is from the late Sir Horace Plunkett, Ireland's great authority on agriculture. After many years of study of rural problems in the United States, as well as in many European countries, Sir Horace, in 1928, described the Department of Agriculture as "the most widely useful department in the world." Granting Sir Horace some leeway for Irish generosity, his opinion is still in striking contrast to that of the editor who smeared the label "racket" upon the department.

This is not written to palliate criticism of any activity of the department, or to avoid any legitimate demand for economy. It is written because so many of the critics give the impression that the Department of Agriculture regularly and normally spends upward of $300,000,000 a year in aid to farmers.

Any such intimation is untrue. It is unjust to the American farmer, to the department, and to the Congress which appropriates for it.

Let the critics first deduct (from the 1931 total expenditures of $311,000,000, for example) $180,000,000 for roads. Would you do without them?

Deduct another $49,000,000 for emergency drought relief loans. Would the critics be willing to assume responsibility for the tragedies that would have ensued had not those funds been made available?

Deduct some $16,000,000 as payments to States for State experiment stations, extension services, and forest-fire prevention; deduct another $34,000,000 for weather services to aviation, shipping, and the general public, for food and drug law enforcement, for forest conservation, for meat inspection, and for a long list of other items clearly of general public interest. Most of these expenditures plainly are not for the farmer, though they happen to be charged against the Department of Agriculture. Does the general public want weather service for aviators and for ships at sea? Does it want its interstate food and drug shipments inspected? Whatever the answer, the benefit of these expenditures, and the responsibility for them, belongs to the general public, not to the farmer.

As a matter of fact, of that total of $311,000,000 expended by the Department of Agriculture in fiscal 1931, only $31,000,000—10 per cent of the total—went for the regular departmental activities clearly of primary interest to agriculture. Even in these regular departmental activities agriculture can not, even if it would, restrict the benefits to itself. Chemical research benefits many industries. Research in animal diseases may serve humans as much as animals. Even crop reports constitute a service to dozens of industries and groups outside of agriculture.

The table that follows presents the facts at a glance. Complete analysis is not yet available for fiscal 1932. For the fiscal year now under way, it should be noted that the total appropriated to the department by Congress is about $186,000,000 as contrasted with appropriations of more than $300,000,000 annually in the two preceding years.

Expenditures of Department of Agriculture, fiscal year 1931, on basis of Budget statement No. 2, pages A32–A47 of Federal Budget for 1933

1. Roads:
Federal aid to States	$158,322,940
Forest roads and trails	18,831,020
Mount Vernon Highway	3,392,959
Total for roads, as above (57.93 per cent)		$180,546,919
2. Emergency drought loans (15.68 per cent)		48,824,743
3. Payments to States:
State experiment stations	$4,340,000
Extension work	8,650,229
Forest-fire prevention, etc	3,434,033
Total payments to States, as above (5.28 per cent)		16,424,262
4. Ordinary activities of department, including:
(a) Some of the larger items clearly of general public interest, as follows—
Weather Bureau (general)	$2,745,834
Weather Bureau (for aviation)	1,241,627
Meat inspection	5,592,190
Food and drug laws	1,614,666
Forest Service	14,979,336
Biological Survey	1,956,515
Tuberculosis eradication	6,252,744
Total, above items (11.04 per cent)	34,382,912
4. Ordinary activities of department, including—Continued.
(b) Remainder (10.02 per cent)	$31,201,357
Total (21.06 per cent)		$65,584,269
5. Total, Department of Agriculture, all purposes (100 per cent)		311,330,193
Less checks issued but unpaid June 30, 1931		14,514,248
6. Net cash withdrawal from Treasury		296,865,945
Total expenditures of Federal Government, 1931 (net cash withdrawals from Treasury), including payments from postal revenues		4,877,315,309

Relation of Department of Agriculture expenditures to total expenditures of Government

All purposes, on basis of net cash withdrawal ($296,865,945)	6.09
Deduct roads and drought loans, leaving $82,008,531, or	1.68
Deduct roads, drought loans, and payments to States, leaving $65,584,269, or	1.34
Deduct roads, drought loans, payments to States, and certain of the larger items of general public interest, as listed above, leaving remainder of $31,201,357, or	.64

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, July 13, 1932, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Tentative list of committee hearings scheduled for Wednesday, July 13, 1932, as reported to the floor leader by clerks of the several committees:

POST OFFICE INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE

(10 a. m.)

Hearing—Post Office Committee Room.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. CONNERY: Committee on Labor. S. 4661. An act to repeal an act entitled "An act to legalize the incorporation of national trade-unions," approved June 29, 1886; without amendment (Rept. No. 1763). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. RAINEY: Committee on Ways and Means. H. R. 12946. A bill to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by providing for and expediting a public-works program; without amendment (Rept. No. 1765). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. O'CONNOR: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 285. A resolution for the consideration of H. R. 12946, a bill to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by providing for and expediting a public-works program; without amendment (Rept. No. 1766). Referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. RAINEY: A bill (H. R. 12946) to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by providing for and expediting a public-works program; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SHALLENBERGER: A bill (H. R. 12947) to abolish the Alien Property Custodian, the United States and Mexico Claims Commission, and the United States Railroad Administration, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

By Mr. FREE: A bill (H. R. 12948) amending the tariff act of 1930, to provide duties on oil-bearing seeds and materials intended for the expression of oil, on fats and oils, and oil pressed cake and meal; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DICKINSON: A bill (H. R. 12949) to repeal the tax on checks, drafts, and orders for the payment of money; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CARTER of California: A bill (H. R. 12950) to amend section 616 of the revenue act of 1932, relating to the tax on electrical energy; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. TINKHAM: Resolution (H. Res. 284) to terminate participation of the United States in the general disarmament conference at Geneva; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. O'CONNOR: Resolution (H. Res. 285) for the consideration of H. R. 12946, a bill to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by providing for and expediting a public-works program; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. EATON of Colorado: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 469) providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States and Alaska; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. CURRY: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 470) for the relief of certain Federal officers and employees; to the Committee on Economy.

By Mr. CONNERY: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 471) defining "annual leave" of Panama Canal and Panama Railroad Co. employees on the Isthmus of Panama; to the Committee on Economy.

By Mr. DICKSTEIN: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 472) amending the appropriation bills for the Interior Department and the Departments of State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor for the fiscal year 1933; to the Committee on Appropriations.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALLEN: A bill (H. R. 12951) granting a pension to Della Mondon; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BULWINKLE: A bill (H. R. 12952) for the relief of Paul DeWitt Brown; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GUYER: A bill (H. R. 12953) granting a pension to Joseph Ladish; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HOLLISTER: A bill (H. R. 12954) granting an increase of pension to Margaret Marshall; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JENKINS: A bill (H. R. 12955) granting an increase of pension to Alice Dunfee; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McGUGIN: A bill (H. R. 12956) granting an increase of pension to Narsona Lane; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DICKSTEIN: Resolution (H. Res. 283) to compensate F. P. Randolph for extra research and clerical services for the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization; to the Committee on Accounts.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

8524. By Mr. JOHNSON of Texas: Petition of William H. Cliff, of Boston, Mass., and Arthur J. Linn, of Washington, D. C., favoring House bill 12783, for repeal of tax on checks; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

8525. Also, petition of John H. Sweatt, president Farmers State Bank, Mexia; E. B. Tinker, cashier Citizens National Bank of Hillsboro; and Oxsheer Smith, president Citizens National Bank, Cameron; all of the State of Texas, favoring House bill 12783, for repeal of tax on checks; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

8526. By Mr. MEAD: Petition of Buffalo Post, No. 25, Jewish War Veterans of the United States, opposing practice adopted by the United States Civil Service Commission to specify that applicants for positions should live within a certain distance from the place of employment, etc.; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

8527. By Mr. TEMPLE: Petition of Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Baltimore & Ohio Railroad System, 64 Pershing Street, Cumberland, Md., and the State legislative board, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen of Pennsylvania, Harrisburg, Pa., supporting the Costigan-LaGuardia bill, to provide emergency financing facilities for unemployed workers, etc.; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

8528. Also, petition of Washington County Bar Association, Washington, Pa., referring to the proposed changes in the bankruptcy law; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

8529. By Mr. YATES: Petition of Mattoon Lodge, No. 795, Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and Station Employees, urging the passage of legislation for the purpose of regulating motor trucks and busses; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

8530. By the SPEAKER: Petition of Royal W. Robertson and others, urging Congress to enact a law whereby the unemployed ex-service men might cash their adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

8531. Also, petition of ex-service men, urging and recommending that they be allowed to deposit their adjusted-compensation certificates with the Secretary of the Treasury as collateral for greenbacks at this time; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JULY 13, 1932

(Legislative day of Monday, July 11, 1932)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will receive a message from the President of the United States.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States, submitting a nomination, was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. 12281) to encourage the mining of coal adjacent to the Alaska Railroad in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes.

The message announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 4741) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Wellsburg, W. Va.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11897) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 18, and 79 to the said bill and concurred therein; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 54, 60, 62, 80, and 87, and concurred therein severally with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate; that the House further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 32.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 3400. An act to amend an act of Congress approved June 18, 1898, entitled "An act to regulate plumbing and gas fitting in the District of Columbia"; and

S. 4741. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Wellsburg, W. Va.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the approval of the Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, July 12.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. BINGHAM obtained the floor.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield for that purpose?

Mr. BINGHAM. I do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Dale	Johnson	Reed
Austin	Davis	Jones	Robinson, Ark.
Bailey	Dickinson	Kean	Robinson, Ind.
Barbour	Dill	Kendrick	Schall
Bingham	Fess	Keyes	Sheppard
Black	Fletcher	King	Shipstead

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] is detained from the Senate because of a death in his family.

Mr. GLASS. My colleague the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily detained from the Senate on official business, being in attendance upon the Geneva Naval Conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

RADIOACTIVE WATERS—ADDRESS BY DR. JACOB GUTMAN

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I am very much obliged to the Senator for yielding.

Mr. President, I have been much concerned about public agitation and distress over the possible dangers of radioactive waters. I am advised of the fact that at Hot Springs we have our national hospital. In the current number of the Literary Digest is an article on the subject of radioactive waters in which reference is made to an address by Dr. Jacob Gutman, a distinguished member of the medical profession. I ask that this reference in the Literary Digest, together with a brief article in the New York Times relative to the same subject, and the address of Doctor Gutman may be inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter is as follows:

[From the Literary Digest, July 2, 1932]

RADIOACTIVE WATERS

Dr. Jacob Gutman, director of the Brooklyn Diagnostic Institute, New York, a member of the American Therapeutic Society, in a paper on Radium Emanation as an Internal Remedy, read before the society's annual meeting at Baltimore, declared that the recent death of Eben M. Byers has created more discussion and consternation than any other radium casualty, and has resulted in warnings from various sources to discontinue the use of radioactive waters.

"Even the United States Government, which owns Hot Springs of Arkansas, the richest radioactive springs in the country, yearly patronized by about 300,000 people," said Doctor Gutman, "has had its attention called to the possibility of causing the patrons of its springs more harm than good; and lately Senator COPELAND, of New York, an eminent physician, in open Congress demanded a thorough investigation, and requested the appointment of a committee of scientists to establish the action and dangers, if any, of all radioactive waters."

Doctor Gutman described his work with radium dating back to 1910. He said that many of the proposed methods and apparatus devised for the application of internal radium therapy had been found useless, or quite impractical, or too expensive; "and some really dangerous." He had always hesitated, because of the physical characteristics of the element, to use radium in solution, and had refrained from prescribing waters "radiatized," or charged with radium emanation, until he found two years ago an apparatus which charges liquids with radium emanation without the possibility of radium element in the form of a salt coming into contact with the fluid. With this apparatus Doctor Gutman tried on himself the effects of radioactive waters and, during the past two years, had treated some 30 patients. To quote further:

"The energizing and ionizing forces of the alpha rays of radium emanation have, in the opinion of Doctor Gutman, an important place in internal therapy, but he emphasized the point of view that a great deal of research is still required.

"Present general condemnation of radium is due, in the opinion of Doctor Gutman, to lack of real knowledge concerning its properties and potencies, and to a failure to distinguish between radium emanation, 'the important constituent of radioactive waters useful in medical cases,' and radium salts in solution.

"A most diligent search of medical literature for casualties definitely connected with the drinking of radioactive waters of springs or water charged with emanation only, declared Doctor Gutman, fails to show any such casualties. All the reported cases with fatal consequences, he said, are associated with radium salts in solution, as in the case of Byers and the watch-dial painters.

"Doctor Gutman referred to very recent work of Dr. Frederick B. Flinn, of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Columbia University, on himself and others, proving that almost 90 per cent of the radium emanation is eliminated through the lungs within an hour or two after it is imbibed in a radioactive water, and that after five hours not a sign of radioactivity is found in the breath.

"Characterizing as 'very convincing evidence' the research of Dr. Roger Monnery, of Paris, to which Doctor Copeland also referred in the United States Senate, Doctor Gutman said that his experience in treating similar cases of gout and arthritis with radium emanation had coincided with Monnery's results. For centuries chronic rheumatism has been treated at the springs by radioactive waters, Doctor Gutman said, and European medical literature is filled with reports by distinguished authorities who favor radioactive therapy in arthritis."

DOCTOR GUTMAN DEFENDS RADIUM AS REMEDY—RECORDS SHOW NO FATALITIES FROM WATER CHARGED WITH EMANATIONS ONLY, HE SAYS—DANGEROUS IN SALT FORM—THERAPEUTICS SOCIETY CONVENTION IS TOLD OF PARESIS CURES BY MALARIA FEVER

BALTIMORE, May 16.—The death of Eben M. Byers from radium poisoning has caused "unwarranted condemnation of radium by apparent authorities," Dr. Jacob Gutman, director of the Brooklyn Diagnostic Institute, declared in an address read before the American Therapeutic Society at the opening session of its 2-day convention here to-day.

Present general condemnation of radium is due, in the opinion of Doctor Gutman, to lack of real knowledge concerning its properties and potencies and to a failure to distinguish between radium emanation, "the important constituent of radioactive waters useful in medical cases," and radium salts in solution.

A diligent search of medical literature for casualties definitely connected with the drinking of radioactive waters of springs or water charged with emanation only, declared Doctor Gutman, fails to show any casualties. All the reported cases with fatal consequences, he said, are associated with radium salts in solution, as in the case of Byers and the watch-dial painters.

Doctor Gutman said that he had always hesitated to use radium in solution and had refrained from prescribing waters "radiatized," or charged with radium emanation (radon), until he found two years ago an apparatus which charges liquids with radium emanation without the possibility of radium element in the form of a salt coming into contact with the fluid.

With this apparatus Doctor Gutman tried on himself the effects of radioactive waters and during the past two years treated some 30 patients.

The results, he said, were "not unfavorable."

RADIUM EMANATION AS AN INTERNAL REMEDY

Jacob Gutman, M. D., Brooklyn, N. Y.

The recent death of a prominent citizen, financier, and sportsman from radium poisoning has caused considerable sensation throughout the land. Although many previous casualties in dial painters received great publicity and caused much excitement, the death of Mr. E. M. Byers, nevertheless, has created more discussion and consternation, especially among the innumerable persons who partook of radium waters in various forms, than any other single radium casualty heretofore reported. His death has created great headlines for the daily newspapers, and warnings have been sounded from various sources for the discontinuance of radioactive waters. Even the United States Government, which owns Hot Springs, of Arkansas, the richest radioactive springs in the country, yearly patronized by about 300,000 people, has had its attention called to the possibility of causing the patrons of its springs more harm than good; and lately Senator COPELAND, of New York, an eminent physician, in open Congress demanded a thorough investigation of the situation of internal radium therapy and requested the appointment of a committee of scientists for the purpose of establishing the action and dangers, if any, of all radioactive waters offered to the public.

Whether such excitement be justified is a question. It is obvious that every new discovery, until fully studied and understood, is possibly accompanied by some untoward effects in certain instances; every innovation, whether in medicine or other endeavors, may result at times in accident or disaster; every potent factor may occasionally be the cause of death or disability. Arsenic, phosphorus, mercury, and numerous other drugs in daily use, X-ray and surgery, machinery and automobiles, and practically every other agency have been in the past and still are the cause of numerous casualties. And yet, would anyone be disposed to completely dispense with these simply because of their misuse by some?

With radium the condemnation now appears general, and most probably because few have any real knowledge concerning its properties and potencies. The medical practitioner, in general, is familiar with radium only as to its topical uses, particularly in malignancies, appreciating it accordingly. The laity knows nothing but the facts that radium is very scarce and costly, and the cause of many deaths; hence the present unfortunate, unwarranted condemnation of radium by apparent authorities, which has alarmed the public to such extent that those actually in need of radium therapy hesitate to avail themselves of this wonderful remedy even when applied by most competent men. We therefore feel that we may be justified in bringing the subject of radium here for your attention, and relating our personal experiences, even though meager. Perhaps in a small measure it may assist in a better evaluation of radium as an internal therapeutic agent.

Our experience with radium dates back to 1910, the time of our association with Professor von Noorden. Much credit to him and his coworkers is due for our knowledge of the uses of radium internally. During these past 20 years, while not entirely devoted to radium, we have had occasion to watch the development of internal radium therapy and to study the various proposed methods and devised apparatus. Many of these, after trial, were found to be useless; others quite impractical or too expensive; and some really dangerous. We have always hesitated, because of the physical characteristics of the element later to be discussed, to use radium in solution, and for a number of years refrained from prescribing radiatized waters because of the impossibility of obtaining pure emanation in solution. Two years ago, however, we had occasion to familiarize ourselves with an apparatus designed to dissolve radium emanation in potable liquids without the possibility of the radium salt ever coming into actual contact with the fluid for administration. Having, therefore, obtained satisfactory radiated waters, we experimented with these on our own person and, in a number of cases, on types in which radioactive waters are recommended.

But before proceeding it might be fitting to call attention to a few facts concerning radium and its emanation.

RADIUM

One of the most interesting chapters in the sciences is the introduction of radium element. There is a saying, "Coming events cast their shadows before them"; in the case of radium its shadow was forecast by a number of preceding important discoveries.

Since Mendeleef (1) formulated his periodic table many elements then unknown but prophesied from his series have since been discovered. Events such as Faraday's (2) and later Grove's (3) studies of the phenomena of electrical discharges through rare gases; the conclusions of Hittorf (4) regarding cathode rays; Sir William Crookes's (5) experiences with rarefied tubes and cathode currents; Lenard's (6) discovery of rays honored by his name; Professor Thomson's (7) introduction of corpuscular and electron theories; Röentgen's (8) discovery of X rays; Becquerel's (9) accidental discovery that a compound of uranium, uranium potassium sulphate, makes an imprint in the dark upon a photographic plate through metal without a camera, and that this radioactivity is inherent in the uranium salt—all these preceded the discovery of radium. Radium was thus destined to follow, and it was left to the laborious experiments for many pears of Pierre and Marie Curie (10) to startle the world by successfully obtaining a minute quantity of radium from tons of St. Joachimsthal pitchblende furnished them by the then Austrian Government.

No substance since has aroused such enthusiasm as has radium. Its rarity, its mysterious behavior, its enormous cost, its unique and marvelous properties, have all served to make it most fascinating. Its introduction into medicine with the discovery of its effect upon tissues was no less romantic. Had Henry Becquerel heeded the warning of his assistant, Matout, and not placed a tube of radium in his waistcoat pocket on his trip to London to lecture on radium, the now famous Becquerel burn suffered by the scientist would not have occurred and the introduction of radium in medicine as a remedy would obviously have been indefinitely deferred.

PROPERTIES

The chemical and physical properties of radium are unique. Radium is a bivalent element of an atomic weight established by Mme. Curie as 226.4. It is akin to barium and other basic elements; it breaks up hydrochloric acid with liberation of chlorine, disassociates carbon dioxide, converts oxygen into ozone; it is obtainable as soluble bromides and chlorides and almost insoluble sulphates and carbonates. It combines with oxygen to form oxides and peroxides; it fractures glass, turning it violet; it changes yellow phosphorus to red and imparts a green color to Bunsen flame; it offers unfathomable energy and produces a quarter million times its weight in heat.

But the one characteristic of greatest interest to the profession is its radioactivity. Radium, like other radioactive substances, only more powerfully, emits alpha rays. As a result of continued disintegration various new elements, as radium A, B, C, C_1, C^1, D, E, F, etc., some solid, some gaseous, of different longevity are formed. These successive transformations are accomplished by the extrusion of alpha, beta, and gamma rays. "This spontaneous transformation of radium continues at a regular rate which is independent of the physical state or chemical combination of the radium atom in the molecules of its compounds. It is changing at such rate that in about 1,700 years half of any quantity will have changed." (11.)

According to Rutherford, Thomson, Soddy (12), Chadwick (13), and others, radioactivity is a manifestation of subatomic changes. Rutherford (14) states, "In its simplest form, the theory of atomic disintegration supposes that every second a certain fraction (usually very small) of the atoms present become unstable and explode with great violence, expelling in many cases a small portion of the disrupted atom at high speed. The residue of the atom forms a new atomic system of lesser atomic weight and possessing physical and chemical properties which greatly distinguish it from the parent atom. The atoms composing the new substances formed by the process of disintegration of the atom, once started, proceed through a number of distinct states. These new products formed by the successive disintegration of the parent matter are in most cases present in such extremely minute quantities that they can not be investigated by ordinary chemical methods. For any simple substance the average number of atoms breaking up per second is proportional at any time to the number present. In consequence the amount of radioactive matter decreases in a geometrical progression with time."

RADIUM EMANATION

Radium emanation is of greater interest to the internist than radium element, for the gas, because of its richness in potent alpha rays and its solubility in fluids, is the important constituent of radioactive waters useful in medical cases. Emanation, as stated above, originates during the first stage of disintegration of radium; every second a small fraction of the atoms explodes, expelling rays known as the alpha rays; the residue of the disrupted atom is transformed into emanation or radon and represents a new molecular system of lower atomic weight and with physical and chemical properties different from its parent, radium. It is a monatomic, self-luminous, inert gas allied to helium and argon, condensing at low temperatures when frozen with liquid air, and subject to Boyle's law like other gases. Radium emanation is soluble in liquids and, following Henry's law, its coefficient is in accordance with temperature of solvent, pressure, etc. Emanation has a half-life period of 3.85 days and disintegrates entirely in about 30 days. Although 1 gram of pure radium gives only 0.6 cmm. or a pinhead, of emanation, the latter is nevertheless a hundred thousand times as radioactive as the original radium.

As the alpha rays of radium emanation comprise more than 90 per cent of available energy and have a high ionizing power of considerable influence, a solution containing these powerful alpha rays is thus used as an internal remedy in the treatment of disease. Because of such richness in alpha rays only a moderate quantity of emanation solution is required; consequently a comparatively small amount of radium suffices in obtaining adequate dosage of emanation, thus making its use inexpensive and practical. On the other hand, in topical applications of radium where only beta and gamma rays are the active agencies utilized, and these constitute but 5 to 10 per cent of the energy evolved, a large quantity of radium becomes necessary, making its application to the patient expensive, and confining its use to wealthy individuals and institutions.

ADMINISTRATION

Solutions of emanation administered orally are primarily absorbed in the small intestines, then carried through the circulation to all parts of the organism, coming in contact with every living cell reached by body fluids. After activating the cells the emanation is then eliminated through the usual channels, through the lungs largely like all gases, the kidneys next, and to a lesser extent by the colon, skin, etc. Where emanation is administered by inhalation, as in inclosed chambers of emanatoriums, only about a third of the gas is absorbed while the rest is immediately exhaled. In the intravenous method, in spite of careful technique, considerable loss of emanation occurs, due to handling and diffusibility; besides, it is quite difficult to sterilize it. To solutions for hypodermic use from soluble salts there are far greater objections, later to be more fully described.

PHYSIOLOGICAL EFFECTS

The effects of radium emanation upon cell life have received considerable study abroad. While there still is much discussion, the consensus of opinion is that radon affects the organism in a manner similar to other natural forces, small doses stimulating cell activity, large doses destroying.

Radioactivity, a powerful, energizing, and activating force, being all pervading, must necessarily exercise some definite potency upon living organisms. The fact that the earth contains enough uranium, thorium, and actinium to impart radioactivity not only to the ground but to the atmosphere above and the seas beneath is very significant and recommends consideration. It is assumed that untold quantities of radium exist in the earth and in solution in the seas. Radioactivity is also imparted to rain water, river water, and springs. Many spas known to benefit humanity are radioactive; Bad Joachimsthal and Brambach are richest in Europe, and Hot Springs of Arkansas and of Virginia are richest in the United States. It is folly to suppose, as do some, that the good obtained in these watering places is due only to the strict diet, physiotherapy, and other procedures common at such resorts, or to wholly ascribe the results to a psychic state brought about by the beauty and comfort of surroundings; nor is it true that the favorable effects obtained by the use of radioactive waters are the result of the alkalies contained therein, for it has been repeatedly demonstrated that similar concentrations of these salts in ordinary waters are of but little benefit in similar types of cases where spa treatment has been effective. This, therefore, can be explained only by the presence of an appreciable quantity of radioactivity in waters at spas, and is further verified by the fact that, since emanation can not be preserved in bottled waters, the beneficial effects from such imbibed beverages, except for the action of the dissolved salts, are practically nil.

RADIUM RAYS

Radium and other radioactive substances emit three types of rays: Alpha, beta, and gamma.

Alpha rays: Alpha rays may be deviated by strong electromagnetic forces. They carry two charges of positive electricity. Their atomic weight is approximately four times that of the hydrogen atom; they travel at a speed of 12,000 miles per second, or about a tenth the velocity of light; this speed, however, is rapidly decreased upon passage through matter, hence these rays penetrate poorly and can be absorbed by glass, a thin layer of aluminum, and even an ordinary sheet of paper. Alpha rays possess, however, great power of ionization; they excite fluorescence and affect photographic plates. Their impingement upon a zinc-sulphid screen becomes visible, which principle is utilized for their detection by the spinthariscope. This instrument not only permits the visualization of individual alpha rays but also their counting through the starlike luminous scintillations.

Another interesting property of alpha rays is their power of discharging electrified bodies. This property is utilized in electroscopy, in the detection and quantitative estimation of radioactivity in a substance, the electrically charged leaf of the electroscope losing such charge and dropping when brought into proximity with radioactive matter. The character of the substance, its distance from the apparatus, and the time consumed for the dropping of the leaf determine the quantity of radioactivity in even as minute a particle as one three-billionth of a grain of radium.

The number of alpha rays emitted from radium is enormous; according to Soddy, 1 milligram evolves 136,000,000 alpha rays per second at a speed forty times greater than the fastest rifle bullet.

We dwelt upon the alpha rays somewhat more extensively, since these rays, as previously stated, constitute the great energizing forces of radium emanation used internally, are remarkable for their anabolic properties and favorable influence upon cell nutrition.

Beta rays: Beta rays are far less numerous than alpha; they also are deviated by strong magnetic fields, but in the opposite direction; they are negatively charged and resemble in many respects the cathode Röntgen rays. They are a thousand times smaller than alpha rays, but more penetrating, taking at least 1 centimeter of lead or a fifth inch of aluminum to check their penetration. They have a calculated speed of from 60,000 miles to light speed per second. They ionize gases like alpha rays, though less powerfully, and render these conductors of electricity. They also affect photographic plates, discharge electrified bodies, induce phosphorescence, but give no scintillations upon the screen of the spinthariscope. They are utilized mostly for their penetrability and catabolic activity.

Gamma rays: Gamma rays are not matter particles but nonelectrified radiations or ether pulsations. They are neither positively nor negatively charged and are not deflected by magnetic or electric fields. In many of their properties they resemble Röntgen rays. The gamma rays accompany the beta rays and are found only where these are present, their velocity being tremendous and equal to that of light. They are most penetrating, even more than those obtained from the hardest X-ray tubes, and can pass through lead nearly 3 inches thick, aluminum 20 inches, and may ionize gas after penetrating iron 30 centimeters thick.

TOXICITY OF RADIUM AND EMANATION

Much might be said regarding the toxicity of radium and emanation if time and space permitted, as this topic is of serious importance to all, especially to the thousands who use radium internally.

Earlier in this paper mention was made of our objecting to the use of radium salt solutions either orally or intravenously. This was felt to be a dangerous practice and attention to it was called by us even in the public press several years ago.

If one were to analyze without prejudice the course of action when radium is administered internally, one would come to the following conclusions: First, preparations for internal use are generally made from the soluble salts, the chlorides and bromides. Since the carbonates and sulphates are practically insoluble, their oral or hypodermic use in solution is impossible. The radium salt solution reaches the intestines, where it is absorbed, and then is transported through the general circulation to all parts of the organism, as previously stated.

Solutions of any substance, as all know, may be precipitated and the original solute recovered by either chemical or physical means. This fact is made use of daily in the arts and, in the case of radium, by those engaged in the radium industry. In the organism containing various elements, fluids, and compounds there are those which are apt to and do precipitate the radium salt in solution, with the result that some insoluble salt is formed, producing an active deposit which settles in the tissues where precipitated. Once radium becomes thus deposited, especially in the bones, for which, like its chemical relative calcium, it has a predilection, it can never be removed during the lifetime of the individual, no method having been as yet devised capable of redissolving the deposited radium salt and extracting it from the organism. This active deposit, therefore, must remain at least a half lifetime of radium, or about 1,700 years—longer than the longest lived individual can hope to survive! It is evident, therefore, that repeated introduction into the body of radium in solution, orally or hypodermatically, once absorbed, will result in accumulation of the radioactive element in the places where it is retained. There the active substance through its various rays continues to bombard the adjoining tissue cells, as that of bone, until these are destroyed, resulting in spontaneous fractures, destruction, death of tissue and the individual as well. The process may take years until the final issue ensues, this depending upon the amount of radium ingested, the constitution of the individual, his natural resistance, and his eliminative powers.

How much radium thus administered and accumulated will induce such pathological changes and eventual destruction has not been definitely determined. It may vary from 40 to several hundred micrograms, as found in the remains of the watch-dial radium-poisoning victims. Careful study of this question is greatly desired. The average amount of radium salt in the remains of the deceased, according to post-mortem examination, was 100 micrograms. This amount of radium in solution produces daily 270,000 Mache units of radioactivity. There is no doubt that ingestion of even very small doses of radium salts produces certain changes or disturbances, such as indefinite aches in various bony parts of the body; if administration be stopped in time this may cause no greater pathologic disturbances. If, however, administration is continued, constant or repeated, serious results with complete deterioration are bound to follow.

What, on the other hand, happens with the introduction of solutions of emanation and not salts into the organism? Martland (15) expressed himself quite decidedly against the use of emanation because of its powerful alpha rays. We feel that Martland's experience is based probably entirely on cases who have imbibed over a considerable period large quantities of radium salts in solution and not emanation. His assumption that harmful effects must be expected from emanation because of its progressive conversion into the lower series, such as radium D with a half lifetime of 16 years, may not hold true where only emanation has been administered, for emanation is a gas and as such is well known to conform to all the physical laws of gases, including diffusibility and elimination. Furthermore, such a concentration of emanation as might be produced in a closed impenetrable vessel in the laboratory is questionable for the human body.

It is a physiological fact that gases in solution reaching the intestines are absorbed there and mostly excreted through the pulmonary area. This is true of carbon dioxide, sulphuretted hydrogen or any other gas found in the intestines. Researches have shown that almost 90 per cent of the gas radon is eliminated through the lungs within an hour or two and that after five hours not a sign of radioactivity is found in the breath of those imbibing radium emanation. This work has but lately been proven again by Doctor Flinn (16) on himself and others. In the urine radioactivity is retained for a longer time, and in the whole body never after a few days. This is because the half-life period of emanation is only 3.85 days. There is, therefore, not much opportunity for the gas to accumulate in the organism and form active deposit, because it is so readily diffused and excreted.

A most diligent search of medical literature for casualties definitely connected with the drinking of radioactive waters of springs or waters artificially charged with emanation only fails to show any casualties; whereas all the reported cases with fatal consequences are associated with the use of radium salts in solution. In the case of Byers, death was due to the repeated use of a solution of radium and mesothorium containing one microgram of each per ounce of water, which salts eventually became deposited in the body and terminated Byers's existence.

Distinction therefore should be made between the toxic possibilities of waters charged with emanation, which are almost negligible, and the toxic possibilities of waters containing radium salt in solution, which have been definitely established.

USES OF EMANATION

Unlike drugs that have a selective action and are limited to definite types of cells or systems, radium emanation affects practically all cells; radon in certain concentration is thought, like electrical currents, to activate all functions. Clinical observations have revealed that the administration of emanation in solution is followed in most cases by a feeling of general well-being, of buoyancy, improved appetite and more active elimination, of more vigor and better mental activity. These effects may perhaps be due to the energizing action upon the endocrines, through which such phenomena may be accomplished.

A most marked influence of radium emanation is upon uric acid metabolism, and for this reason thousands of sufferers from uratic manifestations yearly take the cures at the various places rich in radioactive waters. The drinking of such waters lowers blood concentration of uric acid, decreases uratic deposits in joints and other body parts, and increases uric-acid content of urines. It is still a matter of dispute as to the actual manner in which these results are accomplished by emanation; whether by conversion of insoluble urates into soluble, or the increased enzymatic breaking down of the less soluble monosodium into the more readily eliminated carbon dioxide and ammonia, or the direct effect of kidney function; the fact remains that the uricacidemia in such constitutional disturbances as gout, arteriosclerosis, arthritis, treated with emanation, is diminished and symptoms ameliorated.

Monnery (17) has lately published a valuable contribution to this subject. Although the number of cases reported is small, his methods of study, his daily observations, the analytical procedures employed, and graphs exhibited offer, nevertheless, very convincing evidence. His procedure comprised, first, the keeping of patients for a number of days upon certain diets and studying daily their uric-acid output and blood content. Then after such preliminary, and continuing the diet, he eliminated all other therapy and administered daily radioactive water charged with from 150 to 300 millimicrocuries (400 to 800 Mache units) of emanation. After a number of weeks he found in his experimental cases a considerable abatement of symptoms with a daily increase of urinary uric-acid output and decrease of preexisting uricacidemia.

Our experience in similar cases coincides closely with that of Monnery. We also have observed a lowering of uricacidemias and increased uric-acid elimination. We had thirty-odd cases in all of various types, which will later be reported, as some are still under observation. We used stronger radioactive waters than Monnery from an apparatus, the radiumator, designed to charge potable liquids with emanation only and producing 8,000 Mache units or 3,000 millimicrocuries of emanation daily. This emanation is obtained from a container holding sufficient radium chloride to deliver the amount of emanation mentioned.

In the arthritides without uricacidemia the internal use of radium emanation is quite as beneficial. For centuries chronic rheumatism has been treated at springs by radioactive waters, drinking, bathing, and applying externally. The European literature is filled with reports of men like von Noorden, Falta, His, Gudzent, Mendel, and many French luminaries favoring radioactive therapy in arthritis. Monnery's rheumatic cases also showed marked improvement from drinking his comparatively smaller emanation dosage. We have used from 8,000 to 10,000 Mache units per day and obtained satisfactory results, but we always continued the removal of all associated focal infections, colon stasis, etc., remedying by modern methods other defects disclosed upon thorough examination.

It is quite generally accepted that radium emanation internally effects a change in blood picture, stimulating not only the bone marrow but also the reticuloendothelial system. Perhaps to this influence upon the latter system, concerned with the protective functions of the organism, the antitoxic or disease-resisting qualities claimed by some authors for emanation may be ascribed. We had occasion to find in some of our cases treated for their rheumatism, arteriosclerosis, or metabolic disturbances an improvement in their blood, an increase of erythrocytes, a higher hemoglobin content, or a greater leucocyte count, particularly of mononuclears. Also in some with infections as pyorrhea alveolaris, diabetic furunculosis healing was apparently hastened by the use of radiatized waters.

In several cases treated for arterial hypertension improvement also was noted. We feel that in these the lowering of pressure may be due more to the diuresis induced by radium emanation than to the direct effect upon the vascular tone. The reduction was more lasting and pronounced in some than in others, but in none permanent. We have also tried emanation in cases of lumbago, sciatic neuritis, sinus infection, chronic osteoarthritis, thyrogenous obesity, and nephritis with variable results.

CONCLUSIONS

Our experiences with radium emanation internally are not unfavorable; although we had some disappointments, the satisfactory results outnumbered the failures. We feel that radium emanation with its rich powerful alpha rays, its energizing and ionizing forces, has a place in the armamentarium of the internist, but a great deal of research must still be indulged in to establish its real usefulness, adaptability, and limitations. Even where radium is beneficial the older well-established therapeutic measures may not be disregarded, and, furthermore, the toxicity of radium emanation lately so much dwelt upon, need not, in our opinion, deter one from trying internal emanation therapy in appropriate cases.

We should not overlook this all-important fact: Whereas radium salt once deposited in the body is entirely uncontrollable, radium emanation—due to its short-life period—is controllable.

MEMORIALS

Mr. COPELAND presented resolutions adopted by the Council of the city of Niagara Falls, N. Y., protesting against the discontinuance of the United States Naval Reserve unit, Fourteenth Fleet Division, at Niagara Falls, N. Y., which were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Buffalo, N. Y., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Dies bill, being the bill (H. R. 12044) to provide for the exclusion and expulsion of alien communists, which was ordered to lie on the table.

FOREIGN DEBTS

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD a tabulation concerning our foreign debts, prepared by the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] with extraordinary care and, I think, wholly with accuracy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Data respecting European war debts due the United States at respective dates of settlements

	1 Debtor nations	2 Dates of debt settlements	3 Pre-armistice debts due at dates of settlement	4 Post-armistice debts due at dates of settlement	5 Total debts due at dates of settlement	6 Total payments agreed to be made by debtor nations over a period of 62 years	7 Present worth of payments to be made on basis of 4¼ per cent annual interest

[1] Does not include new loan of $12,167,000 made in May, 1929.
[2] Total payments to be made over a period of 40 years instead of 62 years. However, the annuity is calculated for a 62-year period and thus included in the final result.
[3] The Hoover moratorium deferred-debt payments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, are to be paid in 10 annual installments with 4 per cent interest. Column 6 does not include this interest.
[4] Items in this column and total include cash payments on dates of settlements.

REMARKS.—Inasmuch as the payments made and to be made for 62 years by debtor nations will be insufficient to pay the interest charges incurred by the United States to carry these debts, it is evident there never will be anything to apply on the principal sums. Hence, these principal sums are canceled. To determine the consequent loss to July 1, 1932, due to these debt settlements, add together the totals of columns 5 and 13. The sum is $14,456,113,527. From year to year this huge loss will increase even though the debtor nations pay their obligations in full.

REPORTS OF THE CLAIMS COMMITTEE

Mr. HOWELL, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills and joint resolutions, reported them severally without amendment and submitted a report, as indicated:

H. R. 1778. An act for the relief of John S. Shaw (Rept. No. 998);

S. 2839. An act for the relief of the heirs of C. K. Bowen, deceased (Rept. No. 1000);

S. J. Res. 194. Joint resolution conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to render findings of facts in the claim of the Mack Copper Co.; and

S. J. Res. 197. Joint resolution conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to render findings of fact in the claim of P. F. Gormley Co.

Mr. COOLIDGE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5256) for the restitution of employees of the post office at Detroit, Mich., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 999) thereon.

RENA ROSE

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to report back favorably without amendment from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, Senate Resolution No. 272, and I also request unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the appropriation for miscellaneous items, contingent fund of the Senate, fiscal year 1932, to Rena Rose, widow of Henry M. Rose, late the Assistant Secretary of the Senate, a sum equal to one year's compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF THE FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. BORAH, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably several nominations of secretaries in the Diplomatic Service.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably Executive L (72d Cong., 1st sess.), a convention between the United States of America and the United Mexican States, signed at Mexico City, June 18, 1932, extending the duration of the Special Claims Commission provided for in the convention between the two countries of September 10, 1923, together with a protocol concerning the extending convention, signed at the same time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GEORGE:

A bill (S. 4972) granting the consent of Congress to the State of Georgia to construct, maintain, and operate a highway bridge across the Savannah River near Lincolnton, Ga., and between Lincolton, Ga., and McCormick, S. C.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. GLENN:

A bill (S. 4973) granting a pension to Robert T. Green; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH:

A bill (S. 4974) for the relief of the Baltimore Butterine Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion of Mr. THOMAS of Idaho, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 4953) to provide for the establishment at the seat of the Government of the United States of a bank to be known as the Government farm-loan bank of the United States, with an authorized capital stock of $150,000,000, or as much more as may from time to time be authorized, and for other purposes, and it was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS WITHIN THE WALAPAI INDIAN RESERVATION

Mr. FRAZIER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 273), which was ordered to lie on the table:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby requested to delay the final consummation of the proposed exchange of lands within the Walapai Indian Reservation with the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Co., pursuant to the act entitled "An act to provide for exchanges of Government and privately owned lands in the Walapai Indian Reservation, Ariz.," approved February 20, 1925, pending further investigation of the proposal by the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs and the final disposition by the Seventy-second Congress of such additional legislation as the committee may recommend in connection therewith.

RECONSIDERATION OF EMERGENCY-RELIEF LEGISLATION

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, last night under great pressure there was jammed through the Senate the so-called Democratic relief bill. I had not supposed that it was to be passed last night and therefore was not present. I desire to move that the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed may be reconsidered, and if that vote is reconsidered I shall then move to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] striking out Title III of the bill was rejected.

Mr. President, the other day I had occasion to refer to the appropriately named yacht on which the Democratic presidential candidate is now entering New England waters. It is called the Myth II. I stated then that I did not know what the first myth was. It was evident that the second myth had to do with immediate modification of the Volstead Act. The passage of the Democratic emergency relief bill last night, introduced by the leaders on the other side of the aisle, fathered by Senators WAGNER, ROBINSON of Arkansas, WALSH of Montana, PITTMAN, and BULKLEY, with its appropriation of $322,000,000 for roads, buildings, rivers and harbor projects, flood-control projects, and so forth, reveals myth No. 1. It is evident that both myths are connected with the word "immediate." The only two times the word "immediate" occurs in the Democratic platform is in connection with the Volstead Act and with "immediate reduction of governmental expenditures." The first myth relates to the immediate and drastic reduction of governmental expenditures, "eliminating extravagance and to accomplish a saving of not less than 25 per cent in the cost of Federal Government." The myth is that the word "immediate" means "now."

The leaders of the Democratic Party in the Senate, by their urgency in jamming through their so-called relief bill last night, have undone all the work we have been trying to do at this session in an effort to balance the Budget and reduce governmental expenditures. Their platform calls for "immediate and drastic reduction in governmental expenditures." Their action last night, which I am endeavoring to have reconsidered to-day, calls for immediate extravagance in Federal aid for road construction and other extravagances to the tune of many millions of dollars. The road item alone apparently provides for only $136,000,000, but actually it provides for $256,000,000 of Federal expenditure, since of the $136,000,000, $120,000,000 is to be used to help the States match another $120,000,000 now safely lying in the Federal Treasury. This project calls for $240,000,000. That is nearly $100,000,000 more than the total savings in the economy bill.

I have been informed that the economy bill will provide a saving of between $135,000,000 and, at the most optimistic estimate, $150,000,000. We passed it to help balance the Budget. We reduced the salaries of poorly paid Government workers, asking them to contribute to Government expenditures in this way. We have discharged many faithful workers in our public service, adding them to the ranks of the unemployed. By our 10 per cent cut in appropriation bills, which had previously been cut in the House and previously to that cut by the Budget, we have greatly increased unemployment, particularly in connection with the fact that all savings due to the economy bill are to be impounded in the Treasury and not used for employing other Government clerks.

Furthermore, we are about to break up many happy homes where husband and wife are both employed in the Government service, serving the Government faithfully, but one of them is now to be discharged in the name of economy. We are asking retired Army officers who have served us faithfully in the national defense, to take a diminution in their retired pay to help balance the Budget. We have caused an enormous amount of suffering in the name of economy, and now we take all the money we have saved and dump it into the building of unnecessary roads. We have laid the burden of taxation on thousands of little people.

Mr. President, I understand this is not a popular subject. I know it is not pleasant to think that by the action of the Senate last night we undid the work of months of faithful effort. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] day after day persisted in his well-worth-while efforts to have the appropriation bills cut 10 per cent, and succeeded in so far as some of them were concerned. He, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON], the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], and myself spent weeks of effort trying to secure an adequate economy bill. Had I thought for a moment, Mr. President, at that time that our efforts were all to be wiped out at one fell swoop by a bill that had never gone to the Appropriations Committee, I would never have spent any effort on the Economy Committee; I would not have voted for the economy bill; I would not have voted for the cuts in the appropriation bills which will deprive scientific workers of their jobs. I so acted and voted because I felt that we were really interested in saving money; I did so because I thought that at this time it was an extravagance to have quite so much scientific investigation conducted in the Bureau of Standards, in the laboratories of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, in studies made by the Department of Commerce, and in studies made by the Department of Agriculture. I voted for those economies thinking that we were really going to save money. Had I known that we were going to spend it all in one bill last night that had never gone to the Appropriations Committee and never been considered by it, I never would have voted for them.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. May I ask what is the pending question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] to reconsider.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator has made the motion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut has made the motion.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well.

Mr. BINGHAM. And I have said that if I succeeded in that motion, I should then move to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], proposing to strike out Title III, was rejected.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I agree that in the Appropriations Committee all during the session the Senator from Connecticut has been advocating economy, but the Senator's statement now is that last night when the Senator from Utah moved to strike out the appropriation for the construction of gymnasiums and other buildings at Army posts throughout the country the Senator from Connecticut voted against striking it out, and then when the Senator from Texas moved, in the interest of economy, to strike out the whole title the Senator from Connecticut was not here to vote. It is the first time I have known the Senator from Connecticut not to be working in the interest of economy.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I expected that that charge would be made, and I will say to the Senator that, if we are going to spend, as the bill calls for, $322,000,000 for public works, it seems to me that the War Department should receive its share. Therefore, I resented the effort of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to strike out the items for War Department construction. Had I known that the bill was to come up for a vote last night—and I had been informed that it would not be voted upon, but unfortunately I was given the wrong information about it—and had I known that the Senator from Texas was going to press his motion to strike out Title III, I should certainly have been here and to have voted for it. My only recourse to-day, may I say to the Senator, is to move a reconsideration of the vote whereby the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BYRNES. May I say to the Senator I voted with the Senator from Texas, but we did not have a sufficient number to secure a roll call.

Mr. BINGHAM. It is very unfortunate we did not have a roll call, and I hope we may have a roll call on the question to-day.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. GORE. How much economy would the Senator's plan effect if carried out? I did not hear the beginning of his remarks.

Mr. BINGHAM. If we can have this bill reconsidered and have the motion of the Senator from Texas adopted it will strike from the bill $322,000,000. This will be in addition to the $120,000,000 which the Federal Government now has and which it would have to pay the States if they are now given this money to match it with. This will be added for building roads not needed, but which are to be built in the interest of providing employment. In other words, it is really $442,000,000 that I am endeavoring to save.

Mr. GORE. I hope the Senator will succeed in saving it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the appropriation for Federal-aid roads in this bill is more than the entire amount we appropriated for five Government departments. The Budget cut their appropriations; the House cut them; and then we cut them 10 per cent. As the bills came out of conference and as they have become law the Interior Department has about $45,000,000, the State Department about $13,000,000, the Department of Justice about $46,000,000, the Department of Commerce about $40,000,000, the Department of Labor about $13,000,000; or, roughly, a total of $157,000,000. The Appropriations Committee worked for months in the effort to save a little here and a little there in order to help balance the Budget. But yesterday, after only a few words of debate, we passed a bill, which had never been to the Appropriations Committee, providing for public works a far greater amount than we have provided for those five departments of the Government.

Mr. President, we passed a lot of nuisance taxes which I never would have voted for had I supposed the money was going to be used for the purpose of building unnecessary roads at this time. We ask every child to pay a few additional pennies for candy, for baseballs, for tennis balls, for anything used in sports. We ask every cleanly person who uses soap or a dentifrice to pay a few additional pennies in order that we may balance the Budget. We put a 10 per cent tax on industries already struggling and unable to meet their requirements. We imposed a tax of an additional penny on our envelopes for ordinary letters, an additional 10 per cent on tickets to places of amusement where the admission price is more than 40 cents, 2 cents on checks, all kinds of little nuisance taxes. Why? Because we were going to cut expenses to the bone and we wanted to balance the Budget. Now, in "one fell swoop," without the measure having been reported from the Appropriations Committee, which is familiar with the large amounts of money needed and which has engaged in trying to save money, we pass a bill which will cause the expenditure of $240,000,000 for unnecessary roads, not that they will not be useful, but they are not needed at this time, and $100,000,000 for buildings not absolutely needed at this time, but in order to give employment. Furthermore, we have asked retired soldiers and retired officers in the Army, who are living on the retired pay which they have earned through faithful years of service to give up part of their retired pay and make a contribution to the Federal Government of a few dollars each so that we may balance the Budget. Then we turn around and take the money which we have wrung from them and spend it on a so-called relief measure, which is really a road measure, because the money is not distributed in accordance with the needs of unemployment but rather in accordance with the usual laws regarding the building of roads.

Mr. President, it is really most discouraging to think that we have caused so much suffering among the faithful servants of the Government, and all in vain. I helped to do it, because I believed the money was really going to be saved; but, instead, we turn around and spend it lavishly. Why should we spend it? We spend it to provide employment, on the one hand, and we increase unemployment on the other hand; we furnish employment for somebody else. The people whom we have turned out of the Government, the people who will lose their jobs, either permanently or by furlough, will not be able to find employment in the new building and road construction projects for which we have provided. Would it not have been far better had we not pretended that we were interested in economy if we were going to pass a measure of this kind? Therefore, Mr. President, I hope that the vote may be reconsidered in order that we may cut from the bill this lavish expenditure which is provided for.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas obtained the floor.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me in order that I may ask the Vice President to lay down a message from the House of Representatives concerning the Army appropriation bill?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I will yield if I do not lose the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will not lose the floor. The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on certain amendments of the Senate still in disagreement to House bill No. 11897, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
July 12, 1932.

Resolved, That the House recedes from its disagreement to amendments of the Senate Nos. 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 18, and 79 to the bill (H. R. 11897) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, and concurs therein.

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 54 and concurs therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

"Nothing in this act shall be construed to repeal or amend section 317, Part II, of the act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, approved June 30, 1932."

Mr. REED. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, just what does that amendment mean?

Mr. REED. This bill, Mr. President, had a transferability clause providing that 15 per cent of any appropriation might be applied to other purposes under the authorizations of the bill. That proposal was also covered by a 12 per cent transferability clause in the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I recall that.

Mr. REED. So the provision in the Senate bill became unnecessary if the provision in the economy bill could be held to apply to this subsequent act. The amendment just stated is to avoid any implied repeal of that clause in the economy bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is all right. While I am on my feet, may I ask the Senator what was done with the provision in reference to the manufacture of certain goods, I believe, in Philadelphia?

Mr. REED. The House amended that provision yesterday on the floor, and that is one of the amendments which will be read later. In substance, the provision now allows 10 per cent of the appropriation for clothing to be expended in the operation of the Philadelphia quartermaster's factory for such amounts within the total appropriation of $6,300,000 as are required for jobs in which that factory underbids private bidders.

Mr. McKELLAR. And to that amendment is it proposed that the Senate agree?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. What disposition has been made with respect to the provision proposing to retire 2,000 Army officers?

Mr. REED. The House receded from that amendment, and the number of officers remains the same as at present.

Mr. KING. That has been agreed to without any amendment?

Mr. REED. Without any change.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire will the provision as adopted regarding the manufacture of clothing put Government employees engaged in that kind of work in competition with sweatshops?

Mr. REED. No; it will not. The form of contract under which the Government lets orders for uniforms and clothing makes it impossible for a sweatshop to compete in the bidding. Over and above this 10 per cent, the quartermaster's factory in Philadelphia will be in competition with legitimate private manufacturers, not including sweatshops.

Mr. BYRNES. May I ask the Senator if he is going to move to concur in that amendment?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator how a "sweatshop" is defined?

Mr. REED. There are limitations as to hours of labor and conditions of labor, and that sort of thing, which make it impossible for a sweatshop to enter the bidding.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate No. 54.

The motion was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 60 and concurs therein with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows:

"Not to exceed 10 per cent of the total amount that may be expended from appropriations made in this act for and incident to the manufacture and/or production of wearing apparel for enlisted men of the Regular Army shall be expended for the manufacture and/or production of such apparel in Government factories or establishments, except that such limitation may be exceeded to the extent that it may be ascertained, after competitive bidding in accordance with law, that work of such character may be performed at lesser cost in such Government factories or establishments."

Mr. REED. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 62 and concurs therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert ": Provided further, That hereafter Arlington National Cemetery shall be administered by an officer of the Army retired from active service under the provisions of section 1251, Revised Statutes, detailed on active duty for that purpose, and, in addition, one retired officer may be continued on active duty in the office of the Chief of Finance, and the appropriation contained in this act for 'Pay, etc., of the Army,' shall be available for increased pay and allowances to other retired officers and enlisted men now on active duty to August 15, 1932, inclusive."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the change made by the House here is to continue in active service a colonel in the Finance Department of the Army. All of our conferees agreed that under the circumstances it was wise to continue him. Because of his special legal knowledge he would have been very hard to replace.

I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The motion was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 80 and concurs therein with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert ": Provided further, That the existing river and harbor project at Monroe Harbor, Mich., as authorized by the act approved July 3, 1930, and in accordance with Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, Document No. 22, Seventy-first Congress, second session, is hereby modified in accordance with the report submitted in Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, Document No. 12, Seventy-second Congress, first session."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, this amendment does not in any way change the sense of the Senate amendment, but merely describes the House documents more accurately.

Mr. VANDENBERG. As I understand the Senator, the project stands then as approved by the Senate?

Mr. REED. Yes; the substance of the Senate amendment is retained.

I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The motion was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 87, and concurs therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

"SEC. 4. No part of any appropriation made by this act shall be used in any way to pay any expense in connection with the conduct, operation, or management of any post exchange, branch exchange, or subexchange within any State, save and except for real assistance and convenience to enlisted men and their families and troops in supplying them with articles of ordinary use, wear, and consumption not furnished by the Government: Provided, That excess and surplus stocks of merchandise now on hand at any exchange, branch exchange, or subexchange may be disposed of, and all goods on consignment shall be returned immediately: Provided further, That the Secretary of War shall make a report to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to the President of the Senate at the beginning of the next session of the Congress covering the several exchanges, branch exchanges, and subexchanges operated by or under the supervision of the War Department."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, to explain this in a word, the amendment as put in by the Senate would have called for the abrogation of existing contracts, and would have led to a lot of litigation. That particular proviso was stricken out.

The substance of the amendment was retained, with a provision that the families of troops should also be served by these post exchanges.

For some reason, on the floor of the House, the words "and their families" were taken from the place where the conferees agreed to put them, and were put in after the words "enlisted men"; so the families of enlisted men will be permitted to buy a cake of soap at a post exchange, but the families of the officers will not. It is completely unfair; but, as it is a comparatively trivial thing, it seems wise not to hold up the whole bill in the effort to correct it.

Therefore, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question about this amendment. Does it put an end to the competition between these post exchanges and private dealers?

Mr. REED. Not entirely; but it limits the action of the post exchanges to necessary articles for the troops—"articles of ordinary use, wear, and consumption not furnished by the Government."

Mr. GORE. And it limits the sale to the men in the Army and their families?

Mr. REED. Exactly. Civilians will not be able, under this amendment, to use the post exchanges.

Mr. GORE. I think this has been growing into an evil which ought to be stopped.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The motion was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the House insists upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 32.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, amendment numbered 32 deals with expense for transportation of private automobiles, excepting where the officer is stationed abroad and is ordered back to this country.

It seemed to the Senate conferees that the Senate amendment was wise; that it was only reasonable to allow the automobile to be transported like other baggage, especially since the economy bill limited to $5,000 the amount that might be spent for that purpose during the entire year for the whole Army. However, the House has seen fit to insist upon that one amendment, and there again it seemed to us to be too trivial to justify holding up the whole bill.

I move that the Senate recede from its amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The motion was agreed to.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, throughout the present session of Congress the subject matter of unemployment relief has received consideration.

It will be recalled that early in the session the Costigan-La Follette bill, authorizing $375,000,000 for gratuities to the States, to be administered by a Federal board in the relief of persons distressed because of unemployment, was brought forward in the Senate, debated at length, and a substitute offered contemplating loans or advances to the States for the purposes of the Costigan-La Follette bill. The whole legislation then failed.

In the meantime the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] introduced and had reported a bill authorizing $375,000,000 to be loaned or advanced to the States for the purposes of relieving destitution and for relief work. There was also presented by the Senator from New York a bill having relation to public works.

After it had become apparent that no progress was being made toward a conclusion on this all-important subject, and when it seemed there was little prospect for action, I took the floor on the 11th day of May and suggested and insisted that the Congress go forward with a measure designed to avoid the threatened suffering of citizens who were unemployed and who were without the opportunity to obtain subsistence from local sources.

The proposal contemplated the authorization of advances through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to public or quasi-public agencies and others to be used in the construction of works used by the public that were of a self-liquidating character.

Thereafter a special unofficial committee of five drafted a bill incorporating provisions for certain classes of public works, while including $300,000,000 for destitution relief, and approximately $1,500,000,000 for the construction of self-liquidating projects; the theory being as to the latter that these would pay for themselves, reimburse the Government as to all expenditures, and give employment to hundreds of thousands of people who would much prefer to earn their living, if the opportunity were afforded them, to the acceptance of charity.

In the meantime the House of Representatives considered and passed a bill one of the principal features of which was to provide a large fund for the construction of public works. There were also incorporated provisions authorizing $100,000,000 to be disbursed by the President as gratuities to destitute persons, and $200,000,000 to be expended in ways comparable to those contemplated by the Senate bill.

The House bill having passed, the Senate struck out the House provisions and inserted the bill already described, known as the Wagner bill.

In the conference a unanimous agreement was reached. The conference agreement was approved by both Houses, the bill sent to the President, and a veto was issued by the Executive, principally on the ground that the bill authorized the making of loans to private persons to aid in financing commerce, agriculture, industry, and unemployment. The President himself had suggested broadening the base of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation so as to permit loans for the promotion of private enterprise under certain conditions.

When the veto message was published, it became apparent that there was necessity for quick action unless the session of the Congress was to be unduly prolonged. The Senate yesterday passed the bill which the Senator from Connecticut now moves shall be reconsidered. He made his motion, as I understood his statement, on the ground that he desired to have further discussion and a record vote on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BINGHAM. I find I was mistaken. The Senator from Texas did not move to strike out Title III, as I thought he did, but Title II; and, therefore, I shall not move to reconsider that motion to strike out.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That was just what I was about to say—that the Senator from Connecticut was so inaccurately informed as to the issues in this bill, and as to the proceedings relating to its passage, that he had declared to the Senate that he had moved a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill passed in order that he might have reconsidered the vote on the Connally amendment. He said that the Connally amendment was a motion to strike out all provisions in the bill relating to public works, including the road program; and I was just about to point out to the Senate that the Connally amendment which he wished to reconsider had no relationship whatever to the subject of public works, and was confined entirely to the provisions relating to self-liquidating projects when the Senator from Connecticut interrupted me.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], in presenting his amendment, expressly stated that he believed and advocated that the public-works provision, including the road provision, should stay in the bill, that he was opposed to striking that out. What his motion contemplated was a striking out of all the provisions in the bill covering projects which it will finally cost the Government not a dollar to construct, the provisions which will enable thousands, probably hundreds of thousands, of men now walking the streets in our cities and begging an opportunity to earn their bread, to get some relief; provisions which will enable at least a reasonable number of those so situated to have the opportunity to obtain employment.

Mr. President, this question has been before the Congress a long time. It is time some action was being taken. I have reviewed in part the history of this legislation, and of the attempt to enact it, in order that there might be freshly brought to the minds of Senators how much difficulty has been encountered in reaching a conclusion.

The Senator boldly championed provisions in this bill which many regard as the least defensible of any in the bill. He boldly insisted on retaining certain provisions for public works which could be dispensed with, and the Senate sustained him. Now he wishes to strike out the road provision—the one provision which would distribute public works pretty well throughout the United States, and give employment to people who are sadly in need of it. He wishes to strike out the provision which the Senator from Texas expressly sustained.

In view of the fact, Mr. President, that this is a mere motion for delay, unjustified, and to be condemned with every emphatic statement that can be made by those who believe that it is time for Congress to act, to stop talking, to stop wrangling, and act, I move to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BULKLEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], but I understand that he would vote, if present, as I intend to vote, and I am therefore free to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DICKINSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], who is absent on account of a death in his family. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HATFIELD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MORRISON]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HOWELL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. I understand, however, that if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote, and therefore I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. KING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING], who is detained on account of illness. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES]. I am advised that if he were present he would vote as I am about to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SHORTRIDGE (when his name was called). Again announcing my general pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. I am advised that if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote, and I am therefore at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE], and vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] has a general pair with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

Mr. STEIWER (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON]. I understand that if he were present he would vote as I have voted, and therefore I permit my vote to stand.

Mr. DALE. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. I am informed that he would vote as I would vote, and therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. SCHALL. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. I understand that he would vote as I intend to vote, and therefore I am permitted to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]. I understand that if he were present he would vote as I shall vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. COSTIGAN. I desire to announce that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] is necessarily absent. I am authorized to state that if present he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 60, nays 10, as follows:

YEAS—60

Ashurst	Couzens	Johnson	Schall
Austin	Dale	Jones	Sheppard
Bailey	Davis	Kean	Shipstead

So the motion of Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, am I permitted to have my vote recorded now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is too late for the Senator to have his vote recorded, because the result has been announced, but minute may be made in the RECORD of the Senator's announcement as to how he would vote.

Mr. LEWIS. I desired to vote "yea."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be noted in the RECORD that the Senator would have voted "yea."

OPERATION OF LUMBER TARIFF

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I submit for printing in the RECORD letters and statements with reference to the operation of the tariff that we imposed on lumber in the last tax bill. They will show that much of the argument made at that time has not turned out to be correct.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ABERDEEN, WASH., July 9, 1932.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The principal argument opposing the duty on lumber offered before the Senate Finance Committee when that body was considering and conducting hearings on the lumber tariff item in the recently passed revenue bill, was that a $3 duty would in effect be an embargo and shut out Canadian lumber completely. Furthermore, the immediate result would be increasing prices to American retail lumber dealers and that these increased prices would necessarily have to be passed on to the consumer.

It was the contention of those of us who appeared before the Senate Finance Committee, representing the Pacific Northwest lumber industry that this would not be the case but that the real effect would be to raise the low point at which Canadian price cutting could go in the effort the Canadian manufacturers were making to take the United States market for themselves.

This contention on the part of American manufacturers has been clearly borne out in fact in the cedar lumber industry, which is one of the principal parts of the Pacific Northwest group. Just prior to July 1 the Canadian mills reduced their prices on ½-inch bevel siding $2 per 1,000 feet and on ¾-inch siding $5 per 1,000 feet. This was done after the recent tariff of $3 per 1,000 feet, board measure, had become effective. These siding items listed represent over 70 per cent of the lumber capacity of cedar mills. The old and new prices on principal siding items mill base value, read as follows:

June 1, 1932, Canadian cedar prices prior to tariff effective date:

½ by 6 clear cedar siding	$24
½ by 6 A cedar siding	19
½ by 6 B cedar siding	17
½ by 4 clear cedar siding	20
½ by 4 A cedar siding	18
½ by 4 B cedar siding	15
½ by 8 clear cedar siding	26
½ by 8 A cedar siding	23
½ by 10 clear cedar siding	38
½ by 10 A cedar siding	35
¾ by 8 clear cedar siding	39
¾ by 8 A cedar siding	32
¾ by 10 clear cedar siding	48
¾ by 10 A cedar siding	45
¾ by 12 clear cedar siding	60

July 1, 1932, Canadian cedar prices after tariff effective date:

½ by 6 clear cedar siding	22
½ by 6 A cedar siding	17
½ by 6 B cedar siding	15
½ by 4 clear cedar siding	18
½ by 4 A cedar siding	16
½ by 4 B cedar siding	13
½ by 8 clear cedar siding	24
½ by 8 A cedar siding	21
½ by 10 clear cedar siding	36
½ by 10 A cedar siding	33
¾ by 8 clear cedar siding	34
¾ by 8 A cedar siding	27
¾ by 10 clear cedar siding	43
¾ by 10 A cedar siding	40
¾ by 12 clear cedar siding	55

It must clearly be remembered that in addition to cutting prices $2 per thousand feet board measure on ½-inch siding and $5 per thousand feet board measure on ¾-inch siding, the Canadian manufacturers were absorbing the new $3 per thousand feet board measure tariff or excise tax.

I am further inclosing a letter written by Mr. Aird Flavelle, president of Thurston-Flavelle (Ltd.), of Port Moody, British Columbia, one of the two largest manufacturers of cedar lumber in Canada, to his salesmen, in which he states:

"Since our last list was issued, as you know the American Government has placed an excise tax on imports of lumber, amounting to $3 per thousand feet board measure, and while this will probably shut out our common cedar from the American market, we still feel that we will be in a position to continue to serve you as in the past on all items of clear cedar and siding."

Mr. Flavelle's reference to common cedar is of no importance, because probably not over 5 per cent of the cedar mills' production is in common grades, that part of the log being made into shingles which have no protection whatever.

It is very apparent from the action taken by the Canadian cedar mills and Mr. Flavelle's written statement that the tariff protection granted to the cedar-lumber-producing part of the Pacific Northwest lumber industry is not an embargo tariff—that, because of action taken by these mills in further reducing prices, they have the cost advantage and will continue to operate and supply our own United States market. Our Government is recovering much needed revenue, and we are still faced with lower-price competition from Canada.

Yours very truly,

E. C. MILLER CEDAR LUMBER CO.,
R. M. INGRAM, Secretary and Sales Manager.

JUNE 27, 1932.

GENTLEMEN: We have pleasure in inclosing herewith list No. 206, covering prices on our cedar products from July 1, 1932.

In sending out this list competitive conditions in cedar have compelled us to modify a number of our prices, and we trust that you will find that same are in line with general market quotations.

Since our last list was issued, as you know, the American Government has placed an excise tax on imports of lumber, amounting to $3 per thousand feet, board measure; and while this will probably shut out our common cedar from the American market, we still feel that we will be in a position to continue to serve you as in the past on all items of clear cedar and siding.

The present price list is based on the expectation of our absorbing the excise tax on all items except common lumber; and the tax will be shown as a deduction from our invoice, the same as freight charges.

We trust that we may be favored with a continuance of your valued business.

Yours truly,

THURSTON-FLAVELLE (LTD.),
By AIRD FLAVELLE, President.

PROHIBITION—CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I send to the desk a joint resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 202) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to the eighteenth amendment was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by conventions in three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. Article XVIII of the amendments to this Constitution is hereby repealed. The sale of intoxicating liquors within the United States or any territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for consumption at the place of sale (commonly known as a saloon), and the transportation of intoxicating liquors into any State, Territory, district, or possession of the United States in which the manufacture, sale, and transportation of intoxicating liquors are prohibited by law, are hereby prohibited.

"The Congress and the several States, Territories, and possessions shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

"SEC. 2. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I want to extend to my colleague all the courtesy possible, but the farm relief bill is the unfinished business, and if this joint resolution is to lead to any debate, I do not want to have the farm bill set aside for that purpose. If it is a matter that can be disposed of without debate, I will certainly be glad to yield.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will withhold any objection he may have in mind and permit me to explain the joint resolution.

Mr. NORBECK. Very well.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the Democratic convention of the State of Virginia, before the convention of either national party had met, adopted a declaration in favor of a resubmission of the eighteenth amendment to conventions of the people in the respective States that they might determine, after 12 years of trial, whether to repeal or to retain the eighteenth amendment as a part of the Constitution. Included in this declaration of the Virginia convention was a declaration against the return of the liquor saloon and likewise a declaration against interstate shipments of intoxicating beverages from wet to dry territory. In other words, the declaration was in favor of maintaining the integrity of State laws with respect to intoxicating beverages in the event that the people of the various States should decide to repeal the existing eighteenth amendment.

The national convention of the Republican Party, as nearly as a man of ordinary intelligence may determine its meaning, declared in favor of submitting the question with certain reservations as to the return of the saloon and as to interstate shipments of intoxicating beverages.

The national convention of the Democratic Party went a step farther and declared explicitly for repeal of the eighteenth amendment, the question to be considered by conventions in the respective States. It likewise, however, very definitely declared against the return of the liquor saloon and in favor of maintaining the integrity of State laws in the event of repeal.

Therefore the amendment which I now submit is an amendment which was definitely agreed to by the Democratic convention of my own State, the declaration of which measurably influences me. It is a proposition which no Republican who is disposed to be guided by party declarations can resent or resist, and it is a declaration in conformity largely with the platform of the national Democratic Party. I hope there will be no objection to its immediate consideration and its passage. Certainly I hope no objection will come from this side of the Chamber.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, has the Senator concluded?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; and I yield the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I can hardly understand how anyone would favor amending the United States Constitution by unanimous consent. Therefore I object to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I ask that the joint resolution may lie on the table. At a later stage I shall move to take it up for consideration, but chiefly to test the good faith and sincerity of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] and other Republicans who have engaged in "testing the sincerity" of the Democratic Party.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I shall be glad to vote to take up the Senator's resolution now on the table at any time he makes the motion, and I hope he will accord me the same privilege and vote to take my resolution from the table when I make the motion.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, no.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mine is better drafted and a little easier to understand. The Senator's resolution would repeal the eighteenth amendment and immediately forbid the use of liquor, even in the home, to which it may be delivered by the agent who sells it there.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, no. The Senator does not understand. The Senate so thoroughly understood the proposal of the Senator from Connecticut that it overwhelmingly voted it down. If the Senator lacks understanding, I can give him some understanding on this matter.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I desire to discuss the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

Mr. GLASS. If the Senator will yield, would he not like to have a quorum called?

Mr. ASHURST. I do not intend to speak more than five minutes; hence do not desire a quorum called.

Mr. President, from my brief study of the joint resolution I assert that it is a real and substantial compliance with the promise and pledge of the Democratic national platform recently adopted at Chicago, and I further assert that it is as near an approach as practically may be made to compliance with the Republican plank recently adopted at the Republican National Convention at Chicago—that is, so far as I am able to interpret the Republican plank on that subject.

I compliment the scholarship and historical research evidenced by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] in his joint resolution. He has in bold strokes and in appropriate language employed the words that should be employed and has not included a superfluous word in his joint resolution, so far as my cursory and hurried examination discloses.

It proposes to repeal the eighteenth amendment and, in addition, without repeating its language, provides that the dry States shall have Federal protection and aid in the enforcement of their dry laws. It provides that the proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be inoperative, unless it shall have been ratified within seven years from its submission; and, in specific terms, in hæc verba, prohibits the return, the operation, and the maintenance of the saloon; it pledges the Federal arm to prevent the return of the saloon. The Senator has used the word "saloon" as spelled with two "o's," not with one "o." My compliment to the Senator from Virginia upon his scholarship and upon his historical researches obvious in his joint resolution.

The Senator from Virginia proposes, in accordance with the platform pledge of our party, to submit the resolution for ratification by conventions "in"—not by legislatures "of"—the several States.

In mode of ratification it follows the language of the fifth article of the Constitution, namely, by ratification by conventions "in" the several States.

We have never had an amendment to the Constitution submitted by Congress to "conventions." All the amendments thus far have been submitted to the legislatures "of" the States. The Corwin amendment, which was submitted by Congress on the 2d of March, 1861, and is still pending or is floating in the clouds, was ratified by the Legislature of the State of Maryland and the Legislature of the State of Ohio. A cursory reading of history would lead one at first impression to believe that a "convention" in the State of Illinois ratified that amendment. Indeed, a convention did pass a resolution ratifying the so-called Corwin amendment; but that convention thus ratifying claimed it was a legislature. The ratifying "convention" was a constitutional convention assembled to revise the constitution of the State of Illinois, and some of the members of that convention asserted that the convention was a legislature.

Some of the ablest lawyers in that convention argued that the State constitutional convention was not a legislature, and they voted against ratification upon the ground that under the Federal Constitution Congress is restricted to two modes in which it may submit an amendment to the States for ratification. Congress may submit an amendment for ratification by the legislatures of the States, or Congress may, if it choose, submit an amendment for ratification by conventions "in" the several States, but the States must act in the mode described.

I should like to hear the able Senator from Virginia discuss his joint resolution. I am certain that having at his command the data obtained by his historical researches for which he is so justly famous, and with his well-known scholarship, he would be able to throw much more light upon his joint resolution than I have been able to do at this time.

REPEAL OF EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

Mr. BULKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from the further consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 90 be made a special order immediately following the disposition of the pending unfinished business.

Mr. NORRIS. I object.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, what is the request?

Mr. BULKLEY. It is a motion to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from the further consideration of the joint resolution of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] providing for repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

Mr. McNARY. The chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary is present.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and the chairman of the committee has already objected to the request of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the regular order is demanded.

DISTRIBUTION OF WHEAT AND COTTON TO RED CROSS

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside in order that the Senate may consider House Joint Resolution 461, which is to carry out the resolution the Senate passed and which became a law on the 5th day of July, turning over to the Red Cross 45,000,000 bushels of wheat and 500,000 bales of cotton. I do not think it will take very long.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. I object.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Washington whether the Committee on Appropriations has submitted a report on the joint resolution in accordance with the request which I made on yesterday or the day before?

Mr. JONES. I do not know anything about the Senator's resolution, but the Committee on Appropriations did submit a report.

Mr. GORE. I have read the report, and it is entirely inadequate. It is an indefinite report. There is no hint as to the amount of money that will be required to carry out the terms of the joint resolution. I feel certain that it will take at least $28,000,000 and probably considerably more than that. I submitted a motion, which was unanimously agreed to by the Senate, directing the Committee on Appropriations to submit a report, at least an estimate, of the amount of money that would be required to carry the resolution into effect. I do not think the resolution can be adopted without considerable protest, and I object to its present consideration.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I want to say that I objected in the committee, just as the Senator from Oklahoma is now objecting, to this remarkable proposed appropriation, and for the same reasons. We found that it would take at least $45,000,000 or $50,000,000 to carry out the proposal, and it may take more. The Committee on Appropriations voted down an amendment offered by me to fix it at $45,000,000 and likewise a second amendment to fix it at $50,000,000, so the Senator from Oklahoma is mistaken in saying there is only $28,000,000 provided, because it will take at least $50,000,000 and possibly much more.

Let me say to the Senator just one other thing. There was voted down in the Committee on Appropriations an amendment offered by me requiring that the equity the Farm Board has in the matter be deducted from the amount appropriated. In other words, this appropriation will inure to the benefit of the Farm Board. It was before that committee in the hearings held that the chairman of the Farm Board admitted that more than $250,000,000 had already been squandered—he did not use the word "squandered," but had been spent by the board—and that there would not be paid back to the Government at least $250,000,000 of the $500,000,000 that had been appropriated to the board.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I understand a request for unanimous consent was made and objection was made. Therefore I demand the regular order.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I just want to explain in a word or two to the Senator from Oklahoma. I think he will probably withdraw his objection on that ground.

Mr. GORE. No, Mr. President; I am sure I shall not.

Mr. KING. If the Senator from Oklahoma does withdraw his objection, I shall interpose an objection myself.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McNARY. I understand the request was submitted by the Senator from Washington and that two Senators have objected to the granting of unanimous consent. Therefore I suggest the regular order and ask that we proceed with the consideration of the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the regular order. The unfinished business is debatable. Let the Senate be in order and the Chair will recognize some one.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I believe I have the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. GORE. When I suggested that it would require at least $28,000,000 to carry the joint resolution into effect, I made the statement intentionally in a conservative form. That would be the irreducible minimum. It would require at least $10,000,000 to discharge the loans already made against the cotton and it would require $18,000,000 to discharge the private loans already in existence against the wheat. That would aggregate $28,000,000. How much it would require to liquidate the storage charges and other charges provided for in the resolution I do not know. I was not familiar with the inside history just related by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. He said an amendment of his proposing to limit the expenditure to $50,000,000 was voted down in the Committee on Appropriations. I would not be at all surprised if it required $50,000,000.

Mr. President, I ask Senators to read the joint resolution. I do not mean to say that it intentionally conceals its purpose, but it refers to another act, paragraphs (a), (b), and (c), of the meaning in which there is no intimation carried in the joint resolution. Also, I ask Senators to read the report. There is no intimation in the report as to the amount of money that would be required to carry the resolution into effect. It looks like an effort on the part of the Farm Board to "bootleg" some of its cotton and wheat into the markets of this country. I believe the resolution, if carried into effect, to give half a million bales of cotton to the Red Cross, would demoralize not only the cotton market but would demoralize the cotton-milling business in the country, what little is left remaining. I understand it would take the value of 3 bales of cotton to spin and to process 1 bale. The joint resolution provides for 500,000 bales. Of that number 125,000 bales, when finally fabricated, would go to the Red Cross to be distributed through the country in the form of gifts and gratuities and 375,000 bales would be used to pay the expense of that processing. I do not think the Senate should venture upon this scheme without further information upon the subject. I shall have something further to say upon it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to say just a word or two in regard to the matter. The Senate, as a matter of fact the Congress itself, deliberately passed a joint resolution which was signed on the 5th day of July, ordering to be turned over to the Red Cross 45,000,000 bushels of wheat and 500,000 bales of cotton by the Farm Board. If the Congress, not the Senate alone, but the Congress, made a mistake in that legislation, of course I have nothing to say. I have simply brought in a joint resolution which passed the House, which was favorably reported by the House Appropriations Committee and has been favorably acted upon by the House of Representatives, to carry out the joint resolution deliberately passed by the Congress.

Now, in regard to the amount of money that it will take, nobody seems to be able to say how much money it will take, but this much is certain: The amount of the wheat and the amount of the cotton that we have ordered the Farm Board to turn over to the Red Cross is definite and fixed. What it will cost to do that, of course will simply depend upon the current price of the wheat and of the cotton. The president of the Farm Board was present before the committee. We tried to ascertain how much it would be. He said nobody could tell, that nobody can tell what the price of cotton will be at the time we want it delivered by the Farm Board to the Red Cross. Nobody can tell what the price of wheat will be when we want it delivered by the Farm Board, but, as I say, the number of bushels to be delivered is definite and the number of bales of cotton to be delivered is definite. If the Senate does not desire to carry out what it deliberately told the Farm Board to do, of course that is for the Senate to determine.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. JONES. I will yield in a moment. I simply want to call the attention of the Senate to the facts confronting us in this matter. Now I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, what the Senator from Washington has said about what took place before the committee is entirely correct. I am inclined to think that the provision ought to be carried out, but I do not think this joint resolution ought to be made the indirect means of furnishing additional money to the Farm Board. I do not believe the Senate and the House ever intended that whatever equities the Farm Board has in this cotton should be paid for in cash and turned over to them by the Government. I do not believe that, and at the proper time I desire to offer an amendment covering the matter. I think there ought to be a limitation on this appropriation. It is perfectly clear that it will not take over $45,000,000, according to Mr. Stone's own testimony, and that ought to be the limit that is appropriated. In addition to that, we ought to say that any equity is to be paid over to the Treasury and not turned over, in this indirect manner, to the Farm Board.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for just a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. JONES. I will yield in a moment. Of course, Mr. President, the action to be taken must be determined by the Senate. If the Senate is ready to set a limit on the amount of money we are to appropriate for this purpose, in the face of what we have done in the preceding joint resolution, of course that is all right. I have no interest in the matter except to carry out the will of the Senate in regard to it. As to whether the amount shall be $45,000,000 or $50,000,000, I will say frankly that, in my judgment, forty-five or fifty million dollars would cover everything unless the price of wheat should go much higher so that the current price would be 75 cents or a dollar a bushel. In that event we could not expect 45,000,000 bushels of wheat, with the charges that are against it, to be covered by that amount; but the committee, when the matter was submitted to them, voted otherwise and ordered a report on the bill. How the Senate will amend it rests with the Senate itself, but I think that we ought to pass something along this line in order to carry out the terms of the joint resolution which the Senate deliberately enacted into law, so far as it could enact it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. I now yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I simply make the point that, because there is a matter now before the Senate, this question can not come up now, except by unanimous consent, and unanimous consent has been denied. I want to appeal to the Senator to yield long enough for the Senator from South Dakota to present a conference report and let us have that acted upon.

Mr. JONES. I will do that.

Mr. NORBECK. I ask the Senator from Florida to present the report. I do not think it will lead to any debate. The Senator from Florida has the papers, I understand.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have not the papers.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. JONES. The Senator from Florida has not at hand the matter which he wants to call up.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to say that I am going to offer an amendment fixing a limitation of $45,000,000, and I hope that the Senator will not oppose it, because I think we ought to provide such a limitation. I think it is bad legislation, under any circumstances, to appropriate an indefinite amount.

I wish to say further that I think the Senator from Washington is mistaken about the price having anything to do with this matter. The price of wheat would be wholly immaterial if the equity should go back to the Government, as it should. The price would only become material in the amount that we would pay the Farm Board for its equity.

Mr. JONES. I understand that the amount that would not go to the Farm Board would be indefinite. It would simply require, as I understand the Senator's proposal, to be paid out of the current price of wheat all the obligations and charges, and so forth, and then that the Farm Board should turn the wheat over to the Red Cross without anything being given to the Farm Board.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; and I was very sorry to find that the cotton and wheat both had been pledged for practically their present value, and that probably not over four or five million dollars of equities would come to the Government, but I think that four or five million dollars, small as it is, relatively, should go back to the Government and not be turned over to the Farm Board for the purpose of disposing of it as they have disposed of the $500,000,000 which was originally granted to them. I hope the Senate will agree to such a limitation as I have suggested.

The Senator from Washington will recall that Mr. Stone in his testimony gave the exact amount that was chargeable to this cotton and to this wheat, and the entire sum was $44,200,000, as I remember, and it was for that reason that I took Mr. Stone's figures as to the charges and then added $800,000 more in fixing the limitation of $45,000,000.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, may I ask those who have objected to the consideration of the joint resolution if they would not be willing to allow it to be considered on that basis? I am perfectly willing for the Senate to pass upon the proposition of fixing a limit.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I would not be willing at this time to agree to that, and of course I shall oppose the joint resolution when it comes to final passage. However, one remark in connection with what the Senator from Tennessee has said illustrates to the Senate the businesslike fashion in which the Farm Board has transacted its affairs. This wheat, as I understand, is already pledged at 40 cents a bushel, and the board will receive reimbursement in that amount in order to discharge the existing loans against it, when the Red Cross can go in the market and buy from the farmers an equal amount of wheat for 27 cents a bushel and create at least a limited market for wheat now in the farmers' hands, instead of for this wheat which is in the hands of the Farm Board. It simply illustrates the recklessness with which the Farm Board has transacted business, and the effort on the part of Congress to operate as a sort of rescuing party for the Farm Board.

I wish to add one further remark. I did not mean to impugn either the motives or the conduct of the Senator from Washington. I say that for fear my remarks might have been misinterpreted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection has been made, but the Senator from Washington still has the floor. The Chair suggests that he decline to yield further except for a question, because we should get back to the business before the Senate.

Mr. JONES. As I understand, the unfinished business is before the Senate, and I will say just a word or two further. Of course I did not understand the Senator from Oklahoma as reflecting upon any member of the committee or anything of that sort.

Mr. GORE. I did not mean to do so.

Mr. JONES. The simple proposition is just this: Are we going to carry out the terms of the joint resolution which we passed a few days ago? The joint resolution for which I have sought consideration does not reflect on or confirm or commend the acts of the Farm Board or anything of that kind, but it is simply to carry out the legislation which Congress has enacted to turn over to the Red Cross for the needy people of this country 45,000,000 bushels of wheat and 500,000 bales of cotton.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield for a question?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the Senator think when the Senate passed the original joint resolution—and it will be recalled that it was passed while I was away, and I did not know anything about it until this matter was brought up in the committee—evidently the Senate did not know of these borrowings by the Farm Board; it did not know that the wheat and cotton were encumbered, as they are, for practically all they are worth?

Mr. JONES. I do not know how fully the committee that had charge of the original legislation looked into the questions involved. That joint resolution, I think, came from the Agricultural Committee, but I have not any doubt that the situation was looked into very carefully.

I hope Senators will consider the various phases of this matter, and I shall try to-morrow to call it up again. Of course, if the Senate does not desire to carry out the legislation which we deliberately passed and enacted into law just a few days ago, that is all right with me. I am simply seeking to carry into effect the legislation that the Congress has deliberately passed.

RELIEF OF HOMELESS PERSONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, it will be recalled that on July 1 I introduced a joint resolution to provide relief for persons temporarily in the District of Columbia, especially with respect to the temporary care of transients and homeless persons, and particularly the veterans of the World War and their wives and children.

Since then the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] has passed both Houses, and an appropriation amounting to $100,000 was made to carry it out. That joint resolution provided that the veterans could borrow on their adjusted-compensation certificates a sufficient amount of money for transportation to their homes and a certain amount for their subsistence.

I observe from the press of last evening that very few of the veterans have taken advantage of the provisions of that joint resolution. I do not recall how many; but I think the press stated, from information obtained from the Veterans' Administration, that the number was about 1,100. I may be mistaken in that.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BLAINE. I do.

Mr. COPELAND. I think the number is much less than that.

Mr. BLAINE. Furthermore, it was stated that on yesterday very few men were making application for the transportation.

Mr. President, I have rested under the apprehension that the joint resolution of the Senator from Nebraska would not bring about the results contemplated by it, and I so stated on the floor of the Senate when it passed. I was not a prophet, but I have some familiarity with the psychology of things and of men, and I thought I had an understanding of the temperament of the veterans who are here. I was convinced then, with that intuitive sense that I had, that they would not accept the invitation that was, in effect, extended by that joint resolution.

Now, we find that the numbers coming here, the recruits, exceed the number of evacuations. By far more men are coming than are leaving. Congress is facing an adjournment. It is very obvious that this session of Congress will adjourn this week. It may be to-morrow, it may be Friday, but at least it is very apparent that it will not be later than Saturday. The appropriation under the Howell joint resolution is not available after to-morrow night. To-morrow is the 14th of July; and, as I understand, the appropriation is not available beyond that time.

I have been informed this morning, informally, that a very few men are making application to-day. We are, therefore, going to find ourselves in this situation: Congress will have adjourned without making any provision whatever to relieve the authorities and to relieve the people of the District of Columbia from that which will be necessary after Congress has adjourned—that is, to provide food for these men.

I do not know how many thousand men are here. The number is estimated at not less than 8,000, and some figures are given out as twice that number. But even 8,000 men who are without homes and without funds will constitute a serious problem for the District of Columbia after Congress leaves.

I do not know how long these men are going to remain. It is rather a baffling proposition; but I do know that they are here. I do know that these men are no longer children. They are adults. They have had various experiences. Anyone who is a veteran of the World War, of course experienced that which is not experienced by anyone else in civil life. They are understanding men. Those whom I have met I have found were men who were sensible, level-headed, moderate in their attitude; but they are men without jobs, men without homes, and they are here. I do not feel that Congress should adjourn leaving the entire burden upon local authority and the local people of the District of Columbia.

I do not know what is going to happen; but I feel that Congress ought to put itself in a position where it will have performed its immediate duty, as I look upon it, and that is to make an appropriation to the District authorities for relief of these men if the necessity continues, as it is very likely to continue.

I am not going to discuss the possibilities that may come upon these men and upon the people of the District of Columbia. These men are not living under ideal sanitary conditions—not by any means. Many of them are living in quarters that are most insanitary, of course, without sufficient food and without some of the ordinary things of life that are necessary to preserve health and some degree of comfort that will preserve the good temperament and good conduct of the men as they have exhibited their good sense, their good temperament, and their good conduct for the many weeks they have been with us.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator will remember that on the 27th of June I introduced a similar joint resolution, but I think the proposal of my friend from Wisconsin is superior. The only objection I have heard to this proposal is that if any provision is made for food it will be an invitation to others to come here. Of course there is something in that criticism; yet, after all, no matter where these men are—whether they are here or in New York or in Milwaukee or wherever it may be—their circumstances are such that they must be provided for by the public. So whatever hesitation we may feel regarding an appropriation for this specific purpose to care for the veterans who are here in the District I think disappears largely by reason of the conditions which prevail everywhere, because we have unemployment throughout our country, not only as to these veterans, of course, but as to thousands of others. But wherever poverty exists, certainly the humane instincts of the public must be aroused to see that starvation must not be permitted.

If the Senator will bear with me for a moment, I am much concerned over what may occur here when we adjourn. There are things that one would like to say but hesitates to say; but, regardless of all that, on the question of humanity alone we can not bear to have these men starve. I have, from my private purse, contributed to the feeding of men from my State, but I want to say for them that they are not tramps. The "king of the hoboes" happens to be a friend of mine, and he has assured me that these men are not tramps. "Mr. Zero," who has done a great work in my State, tells me that they are high-grade men. I have seen the discharge papers of many of them—honor men, men who have distinguished themselves on the other side.

Certainly, Mr. President, we must find some way to provide for these young men. We may say they are misdirected and misguided. I am frank to say that I think they made a serious mistake in coming here. Their cause is not promoted by it, but they are here, they are hungry, and we must make some provision for them; and I hope the Senator will press his joint resolution.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. Some days ago, when the Senator was discussing this matter so forcefully and in such an interesting way, I gathered that the Senator was proposing cooperating with some Members of the House of Representatives, or a voluntary committee, to inquire what would satisfy the ex-service men. I thought they had reached the conclusion that transportation was what was needed. I do not know whether or not the Senator absolutely undertook to make a study and investigation among the men themselves, and, with others in Congress, to ascertain what they required and what they needed and what Congress should do. I have been waiting for a report from the Senator on that subject. I do not know how far he went. My impression was that a conference was to be had with the leaders of the men who were here, and perhaps some plan would be agreed upon so that we could meet the situation.

I think we have to do something about it if they are not going away. I had the impression that perhaps the joint resolution we passed was sufficient, that the provision of $100,000 was all that was required, but they do not seem to be going away under that plan very fast, and more are coming in than are leaving, according to reports. So that we did not solve the problem by passing that joint resolution. Whether or not the measure which the Senator is about to propose would solve it I do not know. It depends on what he gathered from his conference with the people who are rather vigorous leaders on the part of the ex-service men.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, at the time to which the Senator from Florida refers I did not contemplate any conferences such as the Senator has suggested. I think the Senator's impression comes from the fact that the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], as I recall, offered a resolution providing for the appointment of a committee to confer. The only conference I had was with leaders on this side of the Senate, and also some leaders on the other side of the Senate, with respect to the possibility of getting legislation.

After the Howell joint resolution was passed, then, of course, it was very clear that I would abandon efforts which I contemplated at that time, in order to permit the joint resolution as passed to be carried out, if it could be carried out. I did not want to interfere with that situation. I did not want to discourage anyone from accepting the loans authorized by that joint resolution. I thought that was a matter entirely within the individual opinion of the several veterans who are here, and I gave no advice upon that question at all.

Therefore, I deferred calling up the resolution to which I have directed my attention until it became very plain that the provisions of the Howell joint resolution are insufficient to accomplish what the author and others thought would be accomplished. For that reason I desire to call up this resolution to-day.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I take it that the Senator from Florida is aware of the fact that the joint resolution we passed appropriating money will expire to-morrow night. That money had to be advanced before the 15th of July. So I take it that the reason for the Senator speaking as he is is that it is humanly impossible to evacuate these camps before midnight to-morrow. It was hoped, when the joint resolution was passed, that thousands of the veterans would avail themselves of the opportunity to go, but, of course, they have not done so. The Senator said about 1,100 had applied. I think about 700 is the number who have applied. We have these thousands, 10,000 to 15,000, who are here, with no means of support, and what are they going to do? What is the District of Columbia going to do?

All the impulses of my heart say that these men must be fed. I do not care where they come from or where they may be, they would have to be fed wherever they came from, and we might just as well feed them here as to feed them anywhere else, as far as that is concerned. But it has become a pressing problem, not alone as far as our instincts of humanity are concerned, but on the health side it certainly is a menace to public health to have thousands of men brought together, without latrines and other sanitary provisions for the protection of the mass. If there is anything in medical science, it stands to reason that it is only a question of time when, with those men living under such insanitary conditions as exist, disease will be invited, and certainly if the camps shall be involved, the community will be in danger. So it becomes a great public-health problem.

In formulating my own resolution, which I introduced a few days before the Senator introduced his, I had in mind what we call the imminent-peril clause of the New York charter, which provides that under certain circumstances the board of health may meet and declare that there is a state of imminent peril to the public health, and then, with the approval of the mayor, may take any step necessary to guard the public health. Certainly we have a situation here which is a direct menace to the welfare of the community, as well as one which violates all of our instincts of humanity.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I would not be so insistent in the matter if it were not for the legislative program, and on account of the restrictions placed upon the Congress by its own rules. Before an appropriation can be made, it becomes necessary to have an authorization by the Congress. That means that if this joint resolution is considered to-day and passed, it will go to the House, and there be considered. If it should be passed in the House, as I understand, it will be necessary to have an estimate from the Bureau of the Budget and a transmittal of that estimate by the President of the United States.

I understand the House has a practice, although it may not be a formal rule, that it will not make an appropriation without a prior estimate on the part of the Bureau of the Budget and the transmittal of that estimate to the Congress by the President of the United States. Therefore, it is very obvious that unless we can get action upon this joint resolution this afternoon, there will be no opportunity to provide the necessary funds.

I am not going to discuss the possibilities in the situation. If these men are subjected to a diet which will promote dysentery among them, then we may have this condition facing the District. Should the health department find that there may be an epidemic of typhoid, the health department, I assume, under the District Code, would have the right to institute a quarantine. If that should occur, then the District of Columbia, under the law, would be compelled to furnish the necessary food and the necessary housing conditions for these men. In other words, it could not institute a quarantine against a group of men and permit them to starve to death or subject them to exposure. They would have to be fed and housed. So, if that unhappy situation should occur, the District of Columbia would face an enormous expenditure; and I do not feel that we should subject the people of this District, who have no representation in the Congress, who have no one to speak for them unless some Member of Congress speaks for them, to that situation. I do not believe we should leave the people of this District in that situation; and, as the Senator from New York has said, out of the dictates of humanity, Congress ought to respond to the dictates of humanity and exhibit a consideration for these men, many of whom, as the Senator pointed out, are to-day wearing the distinguished-service cross, most of them men who had service overseas during the World War.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator has correctly said that if there should be an epidemic of dysentery or of typhoid fever the District of Columbia then would be obligated to quarantine, and then to feed, of course, those within the boundaries of the quarantine. How much better it is to prevent the dreadful circumstance of an epidemic by maintaining these people, if they are insistent on staying here, in some degree of nourishment, so as to prevent an epidemic. Anyhow, I agree with the Senator that it would be a great pity, hardly less than a crime, as I see it, if we were to adjourn Congress and not make some provision for the material welfare of these men so long as they choose to stay.

The Senator's joint resolution is broad enough so that it would make it possible to extend the term of the transportation item, so that if the commissioners thought the public interest might be served in some other way, the fund might be used in that way, and I assume that might include transportation if necessary. Certainly we ought not to adjourn this session of the Congress without making some provision for the care of these men.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, since this probably will be the last opportunity, and having no desire to trespass upon the wishes of the Senator from South Dakota, assuming that this may be disposed of very readily, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 191, without displacing the unfinished business.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I would like to accommodate the Senator from Wisconsin, and I appreciate the sentiment that prompts him, but I have been here for two hours now trying to get the farm relief bill up, and it seems in this Chamber that the only thing that is not important is the unfinished business. I do not want to be giving way all the time. Two hours of the day have already gone, and I am sure this joint resolution would lead to debate. I have no doubt of it. Other Senators have told me it would lead to debate, and I am therefore compelled to object.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator to withhold his objection for the present so I may call his attention to the fact that this is not my affair? I have no individual personal concern about it, except as that concern comes from a response to the demands for humanity. I have an official responsibility, and that official responsibility is likewise upon the shoulders of every Member of Congress. So, when the Senator refers to "accommodating the Senator from Wisconsin," I know that he means it in a kindly way; but the accommodation is for the benefit of the entire membership of the Congress and for the specific purposes which we have discussed here this afternoon.

I hope the Senator from South Dakota will withdraw his objection. If consideration of the matter does lead to general debate, the Senator can at once ask that the unfinished business be taken up. I am not even asking that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily.

Mr. NORBECK. If the Senator from South Dakota had any idea that it was as easy to get action as that, there would be no objection, but I am thoroughly satisfied that is not going to be the case.

Mr. BLAINE. Let us try it for a few moments, anyway.

Mr. NORBECK. Oh, no. There are Senators who have left the Chamber who asked me not to permit this matter to come up in their absence, and I do not want to do it. If we could have gone on with the farm bill this morning, I think we would have had it out of the way by this time. There is humanity on the farms requiring attention as well as in the towns. The humanity problem is a broad one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TOWNSEND in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. NORBECK. I object.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Couzens	Johnson	Reed
Austin	Dale	Jones	Robinson, Ark.
Bailey	Davis	Kean	Robinson, Ind.
Barbour	Dickinson	Kendrick	Schall
Bingham	Fess	Keyes	Sheppard
Black	Fletcher	King	Shipstead
Blaine	Frazier	La Follette	Shortridge
Borah	George	Lewis	Smoot
Bratton	Glass	Long	Steiwer
Brookhart	Glenn	McGill	Stephens
Bulkley	Goldsborough	McKellar	Thomas, Idaho
Bulow	Gore	McNary	Townsend
Byrnes	Hale	Metcalf	Trammell
Capper	Harrison	Moses	Tydings
Cohen	Hastings	Norbeck	Vandenberg
Connally	Hatfield	Norris	Wagner
Coolidge	Hayden	Nye	Walcott
Copeland	Hebert	Patterson	Watson
Costigan	Howell	Pittman	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

FARM RELIEF

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4940) to provide temporary aid to agriculture for the relief of the existing national economic emergency.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, the unfinished business is the farm bill and I want to explain it just briefly for the benefit of those who may have missed the previous statement.

First it applies only for one year. It applies only to three commodities. It will not be a burden on the taxpayers. It is to an extent a new thing. It is a form of allotment plan. The Secretary of Agriculture will determine how much of a crop is domestic consumption and how much is not. On the basis of that which is not domestic consumption a bonus certificate would be given. For instance, if he should decide that 90 per cent of the hogs are domestic consumption, then 10 per cent would be exported and the farmer would get 2 cents per pound on 90 per cent of his hogs, but not on the other 10 per cent because that would be exportable.

If the Secretary of Agriculture should determine that 75 per cent of our wheat is domestic consumption, then the 42-cent certificate would go to the farmer on 75 per cent of his crop. The other 25 per cent would not get the benefit of it. The fund is made up on the basis of the charge on processing. In the case of hogs there is a tax of 2 cents a pound on the packing house, or whoever processes the hogs. In the case of wheat it is a 42-cent tax on the miller. That goes into a special Government fund.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. NORBECK. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I want to inquire whether the tax is an addition to the market price, or how is that to be handled?

Mr. NORBECK. It has nothing to do with the other tax. The 42 cents is a direct bonus to the farmer to make up the difference.

Mr. FLETCHER. In other words, he gets the current price plus the 42 cents?

Mr. NORBECK. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. And the man with the hogs gets the current price plus the 4 cents?

Mr. NORBECK. Yes; that is it exactly.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is paid by the processor?

Mr. NORBECK. Yes. The processor pays into the Treasury the fund, which continues to run until the certificates have been paid, but the payment is withheld for a while in order that the fund may accumulate. It is expected there shall be money in the Treasury to take up the certificates as they will be presented.

I am one of those who have always believed we would have to have something like the allotment plan, and that we should get our experience on a small number of products and not try to get it on a large number. If there is any hope in the bill, it is that it is limited to one year and limited to three staple commodities. It is not so involved but what it can be handled. It is not so involved but what it can be understood. If it works out well this year, it will tend to point the way for the future. It is not a demand on the Treasury for money. It is simply insisting that if an American standard of living shall be maintained for the industrial world, that same standard shall apply to all industries alike, and agriculture should not be excluded from its benefits. It is an effort to put agricultural products on the basis of the domestic price instead of the world price. It is an effort to put American agricultural products on the same plane with American industrial products. It is not an effort to give the American farmer a wage. It is not a charity. It is simply a suggestion that might apply to all classes.

If there is anything that we have learned in the last 15 years it is that we can not depress one class without depressing others. We can not have disaster in one group without having it spread to other groups. We can not have broken banks and broken credit, and confine it and quarantine it as we would smallpox, because it spreads over the Nation. This is a feeble effort in that direction. It will not do much, but it will do something. It is rather an attempt to see whether the other sections of the United States can see the thing in the same light, whether there is now a feeling that after all we have got to get together and that there can not be two different standards in the same country, not that the farmer shall get the wage of union labor but union labor has suffered from the condition of the farmer, too. What does it avail the union man that he is to get $1.25 an hour if he is without employment? No one is suffering more from the agricultural disaster than is the laboring man. Even though he is protected by the union scale and union agreements he only finds that they are futile and that he is walking the streets.

The purpose of the bill is to correct the condition in which we find ourselves. We can not interfere with the economic laws in favor of one group and against another group. We can not give somebody a dollar without taking it away from somebody else. If the bill is to be broadened to include this, that, and the other thing, it will simply destroy it. I would rather see it beaten than to see it taking in other commodities that are difficult to handle.

Why have we chosen these three commodities? It is for the reason that these are three commodities on which the tariff is not effective and which are processed. We are asking here not to include dairy products, because 50 per cent of the dairy products are not processed but are sold in the form of milk and there would be difficulty in applying the provisions of the bill to that kind of a product. We might go on down through a list of 100 commodities and say we would like to include them all, but we would get into such difficulties that we would destroy the purposes of the bill.

Mr. President, I do not care to prolong the discussion. If there is anyone who cares to ask a question, I shall be very glad to answer it if I can. With this brief explanation I shall rest the case and ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. NORBECK. I yield.

Mr. NYE. In order that the RECORD may be made doubly clear, if he has not already made it sufficiently clear, what does the Senator feel would be the effect upon the general run of agricultural prices if there should be brought some semblance of stabilization to the three stable commodities which are included in his bill?

Mr. NORBECK. I think that every economist and every student of business and every good observer admits that a business recovery has got to start in the country sections. If so, God pity the towns under this situation, for agricultural products have a purchasing power of only one-fourth what they had during the war—oh, no; one-fourth of what they had before the war when we had normal conditions in the land. So if the factories are only putting out of what goes to the farm one-fourth as much, it is because the farmers only produce one-fourth as much with which to make the exchange. Therefore, under present conditions, 75 per cent of the factories that supply the farmers have got to be idle.

Not only is that true, Mr. President, but the one-fourth is being produced at a loss. The farmers have had a capital tax for a dozen years or more; they have been living on their savings; they have been living on their accumulation; they have been living on values.

What will be the effect of this proposed legislation? I will say to the Senator from North Dakota that I do not look for any hasty effect. It is impossible to retrace in a few months the steps which have been taken during ten or a dozen years, but it will have some effect on the price of this year's crop and it will give hope to people who are hopeless, and it will increase buying power. The money may quickly roll away from the farmers, but the dollars will roll to other places and begin to do business in other places all over the land. I think there will be a limited but a quick response and a very favorable one in business circles as a result of the enactment of the pending bill.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I think the Senator missed the particular point I was trying to make in my inquiry. I was trying to get the Senator to respond with his thought of what effect his bill would have upon agricultural prices generally by stabilizing, in a degree, the prices of the three staples which are included in his bill.

Mr. NORBECK. I beg the Senator's pardon. I realize the Senator is a student of this question and is deeply concerned about this bill. My thought is that it would have a stimulating effect all along the line. We know full well that when any one food product is cheap it tends to bring down the prices of the other food products. The farmer has nothing to sell but food products, and, if their sale price can be brought up to a pretty fair level, it will no doubt have a stimulating effect on the others and help to hold them up to higher levels.

I may explain further, Mr. President, that as the bill was introduced in the House it provided for a 5-cent duty on cotton. The committee of the Senate, of course, came to the conclusion that that would have to be stricken from the Senate bill, and, although I do not think it makes any difference in the benefit to the cotton producers, and neither do the cotton men with whom I have consulted; of course, if the bill goes to the House, a 5-cent tariff on cotton will probably be put in it, if it is the desire of that body to do so.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I suggested the absence of a quorum before the Senator from South Dakota addressed the Senate. I did that for the reason that it was suggested that there were Members of the Senate who were interested in a resolution relating to an appropriation for the relief of veterans now in Washington, and they asked that that matter be not brought up in their absence. I assume those Senators may now be present, and I now ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 191.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, at that time I talked with the Senator from Wisconsin, and I understood it was his opinion that he could get his resolution through in a couple of hours. It is now 2.30 o'clock and if the measure should now be taken up it would be 4.30 o'clock before it would be finished, and my bill would be put over until to-morrow, taking his own estimate of the time. I therefore have to object, or else surrender and withdraw the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TOWNSEND in the chair). Objection is made.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, there is no justification for the suggestion that I said it would take two hours. I said nothing about a limitation of time. I did suggest to the Senator from South Dakota that his bill would not be displaced if the other measure were taken up and that he at any time could ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business; in other words, that he would control the time that might be taken for the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 191. Of course, the Senator could control the time, and, if he wanted to let the debate run for two hours, that would be a matter wholly within his jurisdiction. My opinion was that, if there were no objection to taking up the joint resolution, it might be disposed of very quickly one way or the other. I do not want, as I said, to be too persistent, but this is the last opportunity, and, if the Senator still feels disposed to object to the unanimous-consent request I shall make a motion, not at this time but at some time during the afternoon after the debate runs along. I do not want to interfere with the Senator's bill; I have no disposition to do so; I appreciate how the Senator feels about it, and I am not going to do so, excepting as this emergency may demand that some action be taken.

Mr. NORBECK. I can only answer in the words of the Senator from Wisconsin that if this is the last chance for his measure it is the last chance for farm relief, and I can not yield. I, therefore, object.

Mr. BLAINE. Then, Mr. President, I give notice that a little later in the afternoon I shall move to displace the unfinished business and to take up Senate Joint Resolution 191.

I will not do it now, but during the afternoon I shall make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry will be stated.

The first amendment was, on page 3, section 3, line 12, after the word "act," to strike out "wheat" and insert "cotton, wheat," and in line 14, after the word "resale," to strike out " and cotton shall be deemed to be marketed when ginned for the producer or when unginned and sold or otherwise disposed of by him for processing or resale," so as to make the clause read:

(b) Each producer of cotton, wheat, or hogs shall be entitled, subject to the conditions of this act, to have issued to him promptly an adjustment certificate covering the domestic consumption percentage of each lot of the commodity of his own production which, after the fifteenth day following the date of approval of this act, is marketed by him. For the purposes of this act, cotton, wheat, and hogs shall be deemed to be marketed when sold or otherwise disposed of by the producer for processing or resale.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, section 4, line 3, before the words "to be," to strike out "tax" and insert "charge," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 4. (a) On and after the day following the date of the approval of this act there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid upon the first domestic processing of any cotton, wheat, or hogs (whether imported or of domestic production), a charge to be paid by the processor and to be known as an adjustment charge. Such adjustment charges shall be as follows: 42 cents a bushel for wheat, 5 cents a pound for cotton, and 2 cents a pound for hogs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 2, after the word "the," to strike out "taxes" and insert "charges," so as to make the clause read:

(g) All provisions of law (including penalties) applicable in respect of the taxes imposed by section 600 of the revenue act of 1926 shall, in so far as applicable and not inconsistent with this act, be applicable in respect of the charges imposed by this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 3, to strike out:

IMPORTATIONS

SEC. 5. (a) On and after the day following the date of the approval of this act there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid upon the following articles, when imported from any foreign country into any place to which Title I of the tariff act of 1930 applies, the following duties:

(1) On cotton having a staple of less than 1⅛ inches in length, 5 cents per pound; and

(2) On all dutiable articles wholly or in chief value of cotton having a staple of less than 1⅛ inches in length, an additional duty of 5 cents per pound on such cotton contained therein.

(b) During the period for which an adjustment charge is in effect with respect to any commodity there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid, upon importations from any foreign country into any place to which Title I of the tariff act of 1930 applies, of goods processed or manufactured from such commodity which, if domestically processed, would be subject to adjustment charge, a duty equal to the amount of the adjustment charge which would be payable with respect to such domestic processing. Such duty shall be in addition to any other duty imposed by law.

(c) The duties imposed by this section shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in the same manner as duties imposed by the tariff act of 1930, and shall be treated for the purpose of all provisions of law relating to the customs revenue as duties imposed by such act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, section 6, after line 3, to strike out "During such period, the provisions of section 5 (relating to import duties) shall remain in effect as to the products of such commodity, and if such commodity is cotton, such section shall also remain in effect as to cotton and the products of silk and rayon," so as to make the clause read:

(c) Notwithstanding the limitation of section 2(a) on the period of duration of this act, section 4 of this act (relating to adjustment charges) shall continue in effect with respect to any commodity, for such additional period as the Secretary of the Treasury may by proclamation fix, in order to make available receipts from adjustment charges with respect to the commodity sufficient to redeem all adjustment certificates issued with respect to the commodity.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, section 7, line 23, after the word "cotton," to strike out (excepting section 5, relating to duties on importations) so as to make the clause read:

(4) The term "cotton" means cotton of any tenderable grade under the United States cotton futures act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment, the question is, Shall the bill be ordered to be engrossed for a third reading?

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. BLAINE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Austin	Bratton	Cohen	Davis
Bailey	Brookhart	Coolidge	Dickinson
Barbour	Bulkley	Copeland	Fletcher
Bingham	Bulow	Costigan	Frazier

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is, Shall the bill be read a third time?

STATEMENT OF SENATOR HATTIE W. CARAWAY, OF ARKANSAS

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have in my hand a statement issued by Mrs. CARAWAY, the junior Senator from Arkansas, which I send to the desk and ask to have read and made a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the statement will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

I have stayed at my post in the United States Senate as long as I thought I could be of any service to this country, notwithstanding the fact that I knew my campaign in Arkansas needed me if I am to be reelected. But I have stayed here, supporting every effort to secure relief for the people of this country, until finally Mr. Hoover has sounded the death knell to much of it with his veto.

I am now going back to Arkansas to campaign for reelection to the Senate on my record. I believe my people will approve of the record I have made in the Senate.

By HATTIE W. CARAWAY,
United States Senator.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, Mrs. CARAWAY was, I believe, the first lady who has ever been elected by the people of this country to sit in this body. She has made a record here in the Senate that I think should be called to the attention of the Nation. She has been here in Washington with her husband for many years, but has been in the United States Senate for several months only.

I believe I can say, from the investigation I have made, that the record of Mrs. CARAWAY comes nearer sounding the humane sentiments and impulses, or at least as near it, as that of any Senator in this body. She had stood for what the people of her State of Arkansas needed; and it is probably due to her votes and some of her efforts that the people of that State have been protected, in a tariff on oil, against foreign oil from South American countries. She has worked hard for all farm relief proposed, and though we have failed to secure much result, she has stood steady for the farmers, none the less.

Mrs. CARAWAY voted here for the Couzens amendment to the income-tax schedule, an amendment proposed by the distinguished senior Senator from Michigan to collect higher taxes from the great incomes of the United States and from big wealthy interests.

She voted for the Connally amendment when it was defeated, and which was later accepted in the Senate.

She has voted also for such legislation as the anti-injunction bill of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], which gave to this country a law to prevent the issuance of injunctions in labor disputes and in other disputes, a needed relief, well recognized for a number of years.

She supported the "lame-duck" amendment.

She supported the bill for the freedom of the Philippines.

She supported the tariff on lumber.

Mr. President, in connection with these bills which she has supported here, Mrs. CARAWAY has fought and has voted against legislation which to her mind, and I believe to the minds of the people of Arkansas and of this country generally, was injurious to the better interests of the people, particularly the common people, of the United States.

We have had in this body entirely too much representation from some of the Southern States that has not been in accord with the will and with the varied interests of the people. I believe that if the people of Arkansas are ever to be represented by what they think is to their interest and what the common people everywhere think is to their interest, when they review the record of Mrs. CARAWAY here in the United States Senate they are going to find out that the people of our entire country have never been better represented; that their interests have never been better protected; and that never was as much work done in a similar length of time by any one man who ever sat in this body as a United States Senator from the State of Arkansas as has been done by Mrs. CARAWAY.

The near infamous legislation which we had to enact here by reason of necessities that were urged by some of our distinguished colleagues, with good motives, such as putting a tax on bank checks, putting a tax on candy, putting a tax on the purchasing of automobiles—in other, words, a series of sales-tax measures—all of these were opposed by Mrs. CARAWAY in this body. She will be praised for years for that stand she took. On the contrary, she took the view that what we ought to have done—and I took the same view, Mr. President, and many of us here took the same view—was to have elevated the income and inheritance taxes on the large fortunes of this country, not only for the purpose of raising revenue for the support of the Government but for the purpose of preventing a swollen-fortune system that is now the cause of all the trouble and economic distress with which this country to-day is faced.

Mr. President, it would be a fatal error, it would be a distinct loss, it would be a march backward for the common people of this country, should Mrs. CARAWAY not be returned to this body, and if in her stead should some one be elected of the old reactionary type of which too often we have had representation from the Southern States.

It is said to be an experiment for a woman to sit in the United States Senate, but it is not an experiment for Mrs. CARAWAY, and the record that she has made shows it. It never has been my object to encourage the women of the United States to be politically minded, particularly; but I believe that to-day, with the rising tide, with the minds of our common people set toward the proposition that in order to bring back relief in these United States it is necessary to attack the system of swollen fortunes, that it is necessary to curb these large estates with inheritance taxes and with income taxes, that it is necessary to beard the lion in his den, in the words of Daniel Webster, and say that when we allow people to accumulate more than they can have any earthly need for, we are doing a great injury to the future welfare of this Republic—I believe with that sentiment prevailing, and becoming constantly more prevalent among the people to-day, it behooves many of us who sit in the United States Senate and in the halls of Congress to-day to write our friends in Arkansas and acquaint them with the great record and the great service of Mrs. CARAWAY. the first woman to sit in the United States Senate by reason of an election of the people of any State.

I do not know the opponents of Mrs. CARAWAY in Arkansas, except one of them. I believe I do know two of them. So far as I know, they are very fine gentlemen. However, Mr. President, I had occasion only yesterday evening to be with two of the most distinguished Senators who sit in this body, and for a number of hours we discussed how hurriedly Members of the Senate had had to decide upon momentous issues in this little, short session of Congress. After going over the list and discussing it from the Republican side and from the Democratic side, I was pleased to have one of those gentlemen say that in his opinion the votes that had been cast in this body by Mrs. CARAWAY came as near, if not nearer, to being right than those of anyone he knew who had ever sat in this body.

I should hate to see the day come—I should regret exceeding to see somebody come from the State of Arkansas who would give this body a vote different from what it has had in the vote of Mrs. CARAWAY. The common people of this country need that Caraway vote and the stand that Mrs. CARAWAY has taken here in this body. Knowing as I do the temper of some of us who have held office probably nearly all of our lifetimes, and hope to hold office the balance of the time, knowing the views that we all have in that kind of a way, I believe that we need this lady for the benefit of the 95 hard-boiled politicians who sit here; that it strengthens the human impulse in this body and reminds us of things beyond our usual recollections in the common touch of humanity which a person of the type of Mrs. CARAWAY brings into this body.

We all will make mistakes here. Lots of us will make mistakes; but on the one single vote of this one Senator from Arkansas has hinged in several cases the result in several important issues and matters. The independence that has been shown by that lady is a remarkable credit, and will stand forever as a landmark to the womanhood of this Nation.

Fortunately for her, in this body her colleague from her State is the leader of the Democratic side. From long acquaintance and from leadership of this body it naturally would have been expected that the vote of Mrs. CARAWAY, from Arkansas, would have been in accordance with the vote of her colleague from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I remember reading in a magazine when I first came to the Senate an article which gave about a little 2-line analysis of every Member of the Senate, and when it reached the name of Mrs. CARAWAY it said, "Senator ROBINSON'S other vote." To my surprise, however—and I do not at this time intend in any respect to criticize anyone's record—as I have sat in this body and observed vote after vote that has been cast by our leaders of the Republican side and by our leaders of the Democratic side, I have often watched with unerring view Mrs. CARAWAY voting contrary to the advice and suggestion of her own party leader, who comes from her own State. But in the final analysis, Mr. President, to-day as we sit here, with our hindsight much better than our foresight, we now know that the votes that have been cast here by Mrs. CARAWAY were far more wise and worthy, far more necessary for the people, and that in rejecting counsel which ordinarily would have been followed her independent course of action has been one of the things here in this body which stamps her as a courageous person, the kind of person long needed, and more of whom we are now seeking for membership in this great legislative body.

So, Mr. President, I hope and I believe that all of us here will listen to the words that come from the State of Arkansas, hoping for the sake of this country that that little woman who has been sent to the United States Senate will be returned here. I hope and I believe that many of us here who call ourselves progressives—and I believe I am one of those listed as a progressive Senator, though I hope I do not try to get myself into a family where I am not welcome—I believe that those of us who call ourselves progressive Democrats and progressive Republicans not only are hoping that the American people will assist in sending Mrs. CARAWAY back as a Member of the United States Senate but when the election returns shall have been read that there will be many more to add to the membership of this body who will vote as Mrs. CARAWAY voted on the rights of the people to have a better share in the fortunes of this land; who will vote as Mrs. CARAWAY voted against adding an extra cent on sending a letter through the mails; who will vote as Mrs. CARAWAY voted to protect the oil people and the farmers of Arkansas, Louisiana, and many other States against the slave traffic of Venezuela; who will vote as Mrs. CARAWAY has voted on such issues as the "lame duck" amendment; who will vote as Mrs. CARAWAY has voted, Mr. President, for all the progressive policies, for every issue of human uplift.

I hope that when the returns are read in November, or in September, or in August, whenever the primaries may be held, they will point to the fact that Mrs. CARAWAY, and many of her kind, have been sent here to serve for the people in this great United States Senate.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senate Joint Resolution 171 be made the special order of business following the disposition of the pending bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. I object.

FARM RELIEF

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4940) to provide temporary aid to agriculture for the relief of the existing national economic emergency.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I can not urge too strongly the adoption of legislation of the nature of the pending bill, introduced by Senator NORBECK, providing temporary aid to agriculture for the relief of farmers in the existing economic emergency. The evidence is overwhelming that the farmers of the West will soon be closed out if they do not get financial relief at once.

I am perfectly aware that the Norbeck plan is not the final solution of the farm problem, but it will help; and never in the history of this country was the farmer so greatly in need of financial assistance with which to carry on.

This Congress should go a lot further than is proposed in this bill. But first we must do something to raise the price level of farm commodities.

While discussing the need of prompt relief for the farmer I desire to ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD a few letters from farmers of Kansas and other States urging the necessity of better farm prices and more farm credits if they are to continue to exist.

There is a general feeling in the farm country—and it is in part justified—that this Congress has been extending aid to the banks, to the railroads, to the insurance companies, to big business generally, but has done little of direct benefit to agriculture, the basic industry.

I want to emphasize that, in my judgment, the farm price level is the key log to the price jam right now. Unless and until these prices rise there is no chance for an economic recovery for the rest of the country.

This Nation can not start back the road to recovery on 25-cent wheat—that is what the new crop is bringing in Kansas to-day. Think of it, Mr. President—25 cents a bushel for wheat.

I say Congress has a duty to perform before it adjourns, and must perform that duty; Congress has no right to evade a plain duty by running away from it, even with the best intentions in the world.

This Congress has a plain duty to use its powers to enact legislation tending to restore commodity-price levels, without which prosperity can not return.

Prosperity in this Nation depends upon the people as a whole having purchasing power equivalent to mass production power.

Mass purchasing power depends, in the last analysis, upon the basic commodity prices. And the most important commodity prices, most important to the country as a whole, are farm-commodity prices.

In other words, the corner stone of national prosperity is farm prices.

In the end wages are paid by basic commodities, dividends are paid by basic commodities, interest and taxes are paid by basic commodities.

Labor applied to basic commodities produces wealth; thrift applied to wealth produces what we call capital, which really is wealth in reserve.

Our national prosperity rests upon the foundation of basic commodity prices. And in my judgment the most important of these basic commodity groups are farm commodities.

When the farmer gets the cost of production for his products the country will be on the road to prosperity, and it will not travel that road until the level of farm prices is raised to the cost of production.

Farm prices have been driven to extremely low levels. These low farm prices have paralyzed all business, all industry, have deprived 10,000,000 workers of their jobs.

Farm prices must come up before there can be any farm prosperity, therefore farm prices must come up before there can be national prosperity.

Please remember also that when farm prices rise the general price level of all basic commodities will rise at the same time.

Farm representatives think that this Congress should not adjourn until legislation intended to promote the much-needed rise in farm prices has been enacted.

I say again, until the farmer gets better prices for his products we can not have much better conditions for this country as a whole.

The farmer's buying power has been decreased 51 per cent since the war. There has been a decline of 64 per cent in basic commodity prices since 1920; a 40 per cent drop since 1929.

Before the war the farmer got $1, distribution costs were $1, and the consumer paid $2 for the product for which the farmer got a dollar. This is approximately correct.

To-day the retail price for that same amount would be $2.38, the cost of distribution would be $1.68, and the farmer would get 70 cents. In a general way, these figures apply to all basic commodities.

There we have the economics back of the decision of farm leaders. Let us try to hold this Congress in session until the country as a whole is relieved by the enactment of a sound program for the relief of agriculture.

Congress has no right to desert the ship by adjourning without doing what I am sure is its most important job on the road to prosperity through sound economic relief of agriculture.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas that certain letters be printed in the RECORD?

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DODGE CITY, KANS., July 9, 1932.

Hon. Senator CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: A few lines relative to the farmers' condition in western Kansas may interest and spur you on your efforts to bring agriculture back to normal conditions. As secretary-treasurer of the Ford County National Farm Loan Association I know the straits the farmers are facing. Unless the present session of Congress does something to assist the farmers in realizing a profit on their products instead of a loss as they have been during the past two years, at least 7 farmers out of 10 will be broke. Many farmers and stockmen are on the brink of bankruptcy. If the Congress will enact the bill giving a premium of 42 cents on every bushel of wheat that the farmer had January 1 and on the 1932 crop, it sure will save many a farmer's home. The only way to bring the United States to normal conditions is through agriculture.

The farmers and laboring people of western Kansas sure appreciate your work in behalf of the people who are the very backbone of our Government. If Congress adjourns without doing anything to bring agriculture back to a paying basis, there will be fewer Republicans in the next Congress.

Respectfully yours,

G. J. STAUTH.

VIOLA, KANS., July 4, 1932.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
Topeka, Kans.

DEAR SIR: I have been thinking for some time that I would write you in regard to the terrible condition we wheat farmers are in at the present time.

During the war wheat would have gone to $3.50 per bushel had the Government not stepped in and set a price on only wheat, letting farm machinery treble in price. The Government urged the farmer to raise more wheat and win the war. Which they did without much complaint.

Now the State legislature imposes a 3-cent tax on gasoline to make roads and we still have mud roads. Then the Government puts 1 cent on gasoline and 4 cents on lubricating oil. But wheat stays down to 25 cents. There are any amount of the farmers here in Sedgwick County that are not going to cut their 8-bushel crop this year. Why? Because the wheat is mortgaged at the bank, the machinery is mortgaged, and the banker won't loan enough money to buy fuel and oil to cut the wheat.

Our wheat here is making from 8 to 12 bushels. How much will we make after expense and rent is paid?

Would be glad to hear from you and your opinion as to whether it will pay to bin this wheat on the farm and how long we would have to hold it to get enough to pay expenses. I have some '31 wheat on hand yet.

Yours truly,

T. M. COYNE.

HARPER, KANS., July 5, 1932.

Senator CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.

MR. CAPPER: You are getting letters from so many Kansas people, I, too, am prompted to write you about conditions in Harper County. People here (not only farmers but landowners) are losing their farms, deeding their farms and homes to banks or loan companies, because they can not keep their taxes and interest on their mortgages paid up when they get only 25 cents per bushel for wheat, 6 cents per dozen for eggs, 11 cents per pound for butterfat, and can not sell potatoes at any price here. My taxes are only a few cents lower (less than $1) than they were four years ago, and interest is just the same as four years ago, but grain, livestock and all farm produce has dropped from one-fourth to one-half in price in that time.

We read what is being proposed in Congress, and what Hoover and others are saying about helping the farmer, etc., but why in the world don't they do something to really help the poor man or farmer? The appropriations benefit the New York banks, and large banks, railroad companies, Wall Street, and the fellow who has money already. If a farmer gets any benefit from it he must pay back (before he gets his crop return from what he has borrowed) and is tied up in such a way he had better not get into the mess.

Germany was given a year's interest on a large war debt. I see no reason why interest on all farm loans could not be canceled for a few years. A moratorium like that would help lots of farmers and not hurt those (or companies) who hold the loans. Congress can pass laws to that effect if they really want to.

Respectfully,

C. M. NOVALL.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 6, 1932.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: S. 4940 by Senator NORBECK has been reported favorably by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and the report to accompany this bill is attached for your information.

The American Farm Bureau Federation is anxious that this session of Congress enact some legislation which strikes directly at price enhancement for farm commodities. It seems that adjournment is about to be taken with no fundamental farm legislation enacted. It is recommended that S. 4940, which undoubtedly will benefit prices on hogs, cotton, and wheat—three basic farm commodities of interest to the whole Nation—be enacted before adjournment.

The bill is brief and is easily understood. The report thereupon also is brief and will give you a complete description of the measure.

Unless farm prices are increased the Nation as a whole can not recover its usual economic stability. This measure is worth immediate enactment.

Very respectfully,

AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
EDW. A. O'NEAL, President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I was called out for a few moments. I assume that all the committee amendments have been agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They have all been agreed to. The question now is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

MERGER OF DISTRICT STREET RAILWAYS

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 154, to authorize the merger of street-railway corporations operating in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. KEYES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield to me?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. KEYES. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Dale	Jones	Robinson, Ark.
Austin	Davis	Kean	Robinson, Ind.
Bailey	Dickinson	Kendrick	Schall
Barbour	Fess	Keyes	Sheppard
Bingham	Fletcher	King	Shipstead
Black	Frazier	La Follette	Shortridge
Blaine	George	Lewis	Smoot
Borah	Glass	Long	Steiwer
Bratton	Glenn	McGill	Stephens
Brookhart	Goldsborough	McKellar	Thomas, Idaho
Bulkley	Gore	McNary	Townsend
Bulow	Hale	Metcalf	Trammell
Byrnes	Harrison	Moses	Tydings
Capper	Hastings	Norbeck	Vandenberg
Cohen	Hatfield	Norris	Wagner
Coolidge	Hayden	Nye	Walcott
Copeland	Hebert	Patterson	Watson
Costigan	Howell	Pittman	White
Couzens	Johnson	Reed

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr.

AUSTIN] to proceed to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 154.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, this joint resolution has to do with the merger of street-railway companies in the District of Columbia. The measure came over from the House. There is also on the calendar a Senate bill relating to the same question, and the Senate bill is Calendar No. 497, and was reported out of the Committee on the District of Columbia on March 24, 1932, with amendments. I have not had time to examine the House joint resolution, but I understand it is materially different from the Senate joint resolution. I do not recall that there was any hearing on the House joint resolution. In my opinion, if the measure is to be seriously considered at this session of the Congress, consideration should be given to the Senate joint resolution.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Are the differences so great that they could not be reconciled by amendments on the floor?

Mr. BLAINE. As I stated, I have no information, and I understand there has been no hearing by the District Committee on House Joint Resolution 154.

Mr. COPELAND. If there have not been any hearings, I am surprised, because I have been a member of the District Committee for 10 years, and it seems to me we have spent at least half of our time in hearings on the merger measure.

Mr. BLAINE. That only states part of the proposition. I do not recall that there has been any hearing on House Joint Resolution 154.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Looking over the joint resolution, it seems to be a measure of very great importance—of the greatest kind of importance—to the users of the street railways in Washington. It seems to me that to attempt to bring it up in the last days of the session is a very remarkable thing. I do not think that Congress ought to pass upon it in any hurried way such as will be necessary if the motion is agreed to and the joint resolution is to be considered to-day. I am wondering what the Senator from Wisconsin thinks of bringing it up in the last hours of the session?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, this is the most important, the most complicated measure that Congress has considered during the time that I have been in the Senate. It is one that more vitally affects the people of the District, especially the street-car users, than any other bill that has been before the Congress. I submit that the Senator from Tennessee has suggested exactly what the situation is. This is too important a measure to consider in the closing days of the session and too important to amend upon the floor.

I invite the attention of Senators to the fact that there are more than 60 amendments to the Senate joint resolution and it is that joint resolution that we ought to consider first.

Mr. McKELLAR. Unless we are to remain here the rest of this month and a part of next month, I do not see how it is possible for the amendments to have consideration. The Senator from Wisconsin is a member of the District Committee. I want to ask the Senator some questions about the measure. Does it propose to reduce the fares in any way for the privilege of consolidating and combining the two companies?

Mr. BLAINE. It does not.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the people are to get no benefits from the consolidation, why is it necessary to have the companies consolidated?

Mr. BLAINE. As a matter of fact, the people of the District are to receive no benefits whatever, while on the other hand the street-car companies are to be relieved of several hundred thousand dollars of payments which they are now required to make.

Mr. McKELLAR. I recall that ever since I have been here they have been trying to get relieved from certain forms of taxation like the keeping of crossing policemen at certain important crossings, and street improvements, and matters of that kind. What I want to know is why is it we are called upon in the closing days of the session to pass an important measure like this one which means no resulting good to the street-car-using public? I remember when I came here we bought six tickets for a quarter, or 4⅙ cents a piece. The rates have been increased until now the cash fare is 10 cents. That has all taken place notwithstanding the fact that the companies had a contract with the city of Washington to carry the people at 4⅙ cents. Under these circumstances it seems to me that it is very unbecoming of the street-car companies to ask these great favors in the way of consolidation without doing something for the street-car-riding public of the District.

Mr. BLAINE. Let me add another suggestion to what the Senator has said. It not only affects the street-car riders, but it also affects every citizen of the District of Columbia who is a user of electric light or power, because in this measure we write into the law a 15-year privilege to the Potomac Electric Power Co. whereby that company is charging the electric-light users a sum greater than ought to be charged to them.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. COPELAND. I wanted to ask the Senator with reference to electric power. The only reason why I say anything about it at all is because during the past years we have had this matter up time and time again. It is nothing new to those of us who have served upon the District Committee. As I understand the matter, the author of the joint resolution and those interested in it are perfectly willing to accept the Senator's views as regards electric power.

I would like to say also to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] that it is not the fault of those who have been pressing the matter that its consideration has been delayed until the last days of the session. The joint resolution has been called up in the months past time and time again. I would like to say further, as I have said in the committee, that I am sick and tired of the merger bill. We ought to get rid of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then let us defeat it.

Mr. COPELAND. There will be no railroads left if we delay the matter much longer, because the competition of the cheap taxis in Washington is so great that the street railways are in serious danger of going out of business, as I view it. If we are to save the street railways for those who desire to ride on them, it is very important indeed that there should be prompt action.

Further, to go back once more to the question of electric power, I am in hearty sympathy with what the Senator from Wisconsin has said about it. I am sure that the Senator in charge of the measure, who can speak for himself, will say that, so far as that matter is concerned, it need not be a matter of controversy; that while the street-railway companies would like to have certain language used in the measure, they are perfectly willing to concede that point for the sake of the advantages which will take place from the economical operation of the railroads when merged. Separately they are bound to disappear, while put together they may go ahead serving the people of the District.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, this question is closely allied, as the debate already indicates, with the power question, so that if I offer a few remarks on the question of electric power and some of its diversifying trails I shall still be talking directly to the question.

Mr. President, before this session of Congress closes somebody ought to submit a partial review, at least, of the developments that have taken place in the investigation of the Power Trust by the Federal Trade Commission. Let me say first that in my judgment the investigation has made more useful disclosures in the direction of showing the control of some of the necessities of life by the greatest combination that was ever put together by human hands, than any other investigation has ever developed or shown. The Federal Trade Commission has had difficulty for the last several years, ever since it has been investigating the Power Trust, to get sufficient funds to carry on the investigation. There has been one contest after another to take away the jurisdiction and the power of the Federal Trade Commission and to deprive it of the necessary public funds to make the investigation.

The President's Budget, to begin with, for the next fiscal year did the best it could to put the Federal Trade Commission out of business so far as this investigation is concerned. I want to read from the hearings before the Subcommittee on Appropriations of the Senate. Mr. Humphrey, the present chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, appeared before the subcommittee. He wrote a letter to the chairman of the committee in which he clearly set forth in a very few words the attitude of the present administration in regard to this investigation. In that letter, directed to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and dated April 27, 1932, he said:

> The Budget Bureau refused to submit any estimate whatsoever for continuing the work of the investigations ordered by the Senate—

He was speaking of this investigation of the Power Trust that was ordered by resolution of the Senate—

> The Budget Bureau refused to submit any estimate whatever for continuing the work of the investigations ordered by the Senate on the ground that the expenditure for such investigations was entirely unjustified.
> The Budget estimated a loan for the amount necessary to continue the regular work exclusive of such investigation, and the entire sum as given in the House bill is necessary to carry on the regular work of the commission.

In other words, the investigation would cease if the President's Budget Bureau had had their way. Senators will remember that the investigation was continued, though crippled somewhat, by the action of the Senate in putting in an appropriation in the appropriation bill so it could be continued. That investigation has shown more of the great monopoly known as the Power Trust in its activities in all branches of government than any other investigation has ever shown.

From the top to the bottom of our governmental structure this great trust has been instrumental for the last several years in trying to shape legislation, both State and National, to its interest; in trying to create and build up a large sentiment in the United States that would lead toward its point of view as to the great questions involved in the development and distribution of electricity. Every locality in the United States has an interest in this unseen force, which has become a necessity of life, which goes into every modern home and from the home on up to the largest factory, and which turns the mightiest wheels of commerce. By the investigation the hand of the Power Trust has been uncovered in its activities in school districts, in municipal elections, in State elections, in the appointment of commissioners under State laws, in the election of Senators of the United States, in the election of Members of the House of Representatives, in the framing of platforms of national conventions, and in the election of Presidents of the United States.

I shall not be able, Mr. President, this afternoon, of course, to cover all the ground. I shall be able only to point out some places of interest, to touch some of the high points; but I am going to review the activities of this great trust as it has reached forth its mighty hand into every community in the land.

One of the things that have been shown by this investigation has been the evil of the holding company, which is something comparatively new in our industrial development. Holding companies, Mr. President, are sometimes necessary; I do not want to be understood as condemning all holding companies; but the activities shown by this investigation and other investigations and other developments demonstrate that ninety-nine times out of a hundred such holding companies are only devices invented and put into effect by men who want to deceive the people as to real conditions, who want to cover up the sins of monopoly. As a rule, holding companies are parasites sucking by the millions the pennies out of the hand of labor. They have no excuse in most cases for existence. Their machinery is oiled; their enormous profits are made possible by the contribution of those who dwell in the little homes of our country. From every home, great and small, come contributions that are covered up and that in the aggregate amass large fortunes, exorbitant and unreasonable profits. It is often true that this result is brought about by the device of a holding company.

I want to read, Mr. President, several short extracts from a work entitled "Regulation of Public Utilities," by Cassius M. Clay. Mr. Clay gets most of the information embodied in this book from the various investigations of the Federal Trade Commission. On page 238 of the work I have mentioned, he says:

> According to the figures of the Federal Trade Commission, holding company groups control 76.5 per cent of a total generating capacity of the United States for the year 1925, of which 11.7 per cent was under the control of the largest single group. If we add to this percentage the generating capacity of four large companies which were listed in this tabulation as "independent companies," but which have since come under holding company control, the result is 84.6 per cent of the total generating capacity. Municipal plants account for 3 per cent of the total, leaving the balance, 12.4 per cent, listed under "independent companies."
> * * * The holding companies * * * are not simply the real proprietors of most of the public utilities of the country. They are not simply the parents, dependent for their income on the success of their children. They are both parents and proprietors; but more important, they are managers as well, making decisions, sharing responsibility, and in constant touch with the properties which serve the public.

Think of it, Mr. President! Over 84 per cent of the electricity generated is, in one way or another, controlled or mixed up with holding companies; and, as I said, in 99 cases out of 100 there is no more excuse for the existence of a holding company than there is for a wagon to have five wheels. I want to read further from the same book. At page 155 Mr. Clay says:

> 2. Holding company activities which are beyond the effective scope of existing regulation. The financial structure of the electric-power industry at the present time is highly organized, with a constantly increasing percentage of the entire industry under holding company management. In the State of New York, for instance, it was figured that in 1928, 98½ per cent of all kilowatt-hours sold to consumers other than electrical corporations was sold by utilities controlled by holding companies. In the development of the industry the holding company has been a means to several important economic ends.

Mr. Clay says further on:

> Instances have undoubtedly occurred, however, in which holding companies have been superimposed or pyramided on top of one another, primarily for speculative gains or in order that a relatively small financial interest might exercise control over great investments of capital.

So, Mr. President, when we take up the question of holding companies, which, as I shall show, are not regulated, effectively at least, either by State or Federal law, we have taken up one of the most important means by which the Power Trust are able to manipulate and conceal their enormous earnings and their large expenses, which often have nothing to do with the electrical business but have to do with politics, have to do with the election of a member of a school board in a little village, have to do with the election of a President of the United States, and everybody in between those two offices. They have to do also with the method by which they employ women to go into women's clubs, to deliver lectures on some proper subject, and somewhere in the lecture there will be a sentence or a paragraph that will leave the poison of the doctrine of the Power Trust to grow in the minds of the people to whom the address is made, without any of the hearers ever knowing or suspecting that their speaker has been paid big money by the Power Trust. All these expenses are paid by the people. The Power Trust has only one means of revenue and that is the sale of electricity.

From the same writer I want to give you, Mr. President, an actual case of this evil. I read now from page 240:

Of social significance—

Says the writer—

also are the apparently needless complexities of some holding company structures, the effect of which is to increase the risk to the uninformed investor.

Mr. President, it is not only the little fellow, who pays in pennies the tribute that has been levied on him but it is the deception that is practiced upon the investor; and I will show, I think, before I get through, that millions and hundreds of millions of dollars invested by the small investor have practically all been lost. Reading further:

These intricacies are in general of two kinds. One form, a lack of simplicity in the capitalization of the top holding company, is apt to arise from the accumulation of financial operations over a number of years. The Associated Gas & Electric Co. would seem to furnish the outstanding instance of such a complexity of capital issues. At the hearings before the New York Revision Commission it was brought out that this company had outstanding "three classes of common stock"—

Now, listen, Mr. President: I pause again to let the orators in the rear have their time. When they are through I will proceed, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COPELAND in the chair) rapped for order.

Mr. NORRIS. There is lots of room in the cloakrooms. There is lots of room out in the lobby. There is lots of room out where the bonus boys are camped. If Senators want to talk, and talk out loud, they can find a place in one or the other of these suggested districts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Senate be in order.

Mr. NORRIS (reading):

At the hearings before the New York Revision Commission it was brought out that this company had outstanding "3 classes of common stock, 5 series of preferred stock, 8 series of debentures convertible into stock, either at the holder's or the company's option, 6 series of debentures convertible into debentures at the holder's but not at the company's option, and 1 series of investment certificates convertible at the option of the holder for a term of years, and at the option of the holder or the company thereafter."

Can anybody understand that? Can you visualize in your mind what all of that means—25 or 30 different kinds of stock, and no reason for it except to deceive the public?

The writer continues:

To explain intelligently the status of any particular security in an instance such as this would tax a financial expert, and obviously the average bond salesman may be pardoned if he should find it beyond his powers. While this is undoubtedly an extreme example, the company is a large one, controlling, with its subsidiary and affiliated companies, together known as the Associated Gas & Electric group, properties located in a great many different States, the Philippine Islands, and Canada. In 1926 the total investment in the business of these subsidiary and affiliated companies amounted, according to the Federal Trade Commission, to nearly $171,000,000.

It will be noticed that the author refers to their affiliated companies and their subsidiaries. I have been reading only the kinds of stock. If we should follow this corporation down, and take the subsidiaries and the affiliated companies, we would have another picture that would make it impossible for anybody, unless he employed an expert, to tell which was which, and which one owned the other.

I want to give the Senate another illustration from the same author. I am now reading from page 243. He is speaking of the way these things are pyramided:

A good example—

Says the author—of the pyramid type of structure, using the $1 par value stock as the mechanism of control, is the Lexington Utilities Co., itself a subsidiary of the Kentucky Utilities Co., which, in turn, is controlled by the International Utilities Co.

The consolidated balance sheet of the Lexington Utilities Co. and subsidiaries as of April 30, 1928, showed capital issues, as follows:

Bonds	$4,596,200
Preferred stock, par value $100 per share, with full voting rights, 1 vote per share (20,624 votes)	2,062,400
Common stock, par value $1 per share (100,000 votes), all owned by Kentucky Utilities Corporation	100,000

There are 100,000 votes, controlled by $100,000; and that controls several million dollars of capital that the common, ordinary people have contributed and made up in the way of investments.

Thus, in this instance, an investment of $100,000 out of a total of $6,758,600 controls all the rest.

On page 167 the author gives an illustration or two:

Compare the classic instance shown by the Federal Trade Commission, in which an investment of less than $1,000,000 was able to exercise the voting control over $370,000,000 of operating capital. Federal Trade Commission, Control of Power Companies, Senate Document No. 213, Sixty-ninth Congress, second session, at page 197.

That is official information. That is information given to us by the Federal Trade Commission, taken from the books and the testimony of these corporations themselves.

He says, again:

According to figures recently available, the electric power companies increased their revenues—

I wish the Senate would listen to this. This trust is dealing in a necessity of life. The depression has not affected it as it has everybody else.

According to figures recently available, the electric-power companies increased their revenues, during the depression year 1930, to $2,155,000,000 from $2,106,000,000 in 1929.

In that year of depression their revenues increased about $50,000,000.

While during 1930 industrial-power sales decreased 5.6 per cent, this decline was more than overcome by the increase of 13 per cent in residential consumption and 6 per cent in retail consumption.

So that while everybody else has been suffering, while everybody else has been trying to be as saving as possible, while millions of our people are suffering for the necessaries of life, this great monopoly, the Power Trust, during those two depression years has not only kept up its ordinary income but has increased it.

I want to read now from Mr. Clay, on page 246. Speaking of this method of controlling these great corporations, he gives a quotation from one of the reports of the Federal Trade Commission. Again, this is the official report of one of our governmental commissions that a few of us have been struggling from year to year to get money enough to keep going, while the administration has been trying to kill it and to crush the life out of it.

These controls raise certain questions as to ethics.

The commission tells us here how these various holding companies operate:

A certain operating company needs a new generating unit or a transmission line and needs funds with which to pay for the facilities. Being controlled by a company that is in turn controlled or otherwise dominated by a certain investment banking organization, the company is not free in choosing the channel through which to obtain the funds for purchasing the supplies and equipment, and in choosing the organization that is to carry on the construction work.

In other words, in plain language, a certain company manufacturing, distributing, and retailing electricity needs a new generating plant. They need more funds to extend the business; but they have not anything to say about where they shall get the funds, from what source they shall ask for funds, what kind of an improvement or different machine they shall buy. It is not within their power to say. These holding companies make that impossible.

The commission says:

Under these circumstances it is customary for the controlling service organization to provide the various service agencies and charge fees for its services to the operating companies of its group. Its banking organization arranges for and participates in the marketing of the company's plant and equipment, and collects a fee; its engineering organization designs the plant and equipment and collects a fee; its purchasing organization places the orders for the supplies and equipment, inspects the purchases, and collects a fee; its construction organization performs the construction work and collects a fee; and its consulting managerial organization supervises the management and operation of the new facilities and collects a fee. To a considerable extent, especially when the interests controlling the service organization also control the holding company, this savors of trading with and making a profit out of one's self.

And that is about what it is. Everybody and every operation makes money out of it, gets a fee out of it, and these millions of money all come from the users of electricity. Part of the money which they pay for the services which they get goes to control the Senate of the United States, the White House, the House of Representatives, every governorship, every commission in every State, and in every municipality all the officers that are to be elected. All of the money comes, in millions of pennies, from the men and the women who toil. Every student getting his lessons by the light of an electric lamp contributes something. Every washerwoman who uses an electric washing machine makes her contribution. Every school child, every home, nearly every one of the great common people of America, is contributing daily in pennies to this amount, which in the aggregate runs into the hundreds of millions of dollars, to oil this machinery and to pay the men who sit around mahogany-top tables and neither toil nor spin.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I would like to call the Senator's attention to something which came to light yesterday—the fact that a letter was sent by the chairman of the Power Commission inviting one of the branches of the Power Trust to sit in with them to consult over the granting of a certain franchise right up in New York State so that they might avoid disturbances from outside parties in considering the matter. Was that called to the Senator's attention? Has he seen that letter?

Mr. NORRIS. I have not.

Mr. LONG. We got practically no publicity of that letter in the papers. The public press of this country, with the exception of the Hearst papers, carried practically no mention of it. Mr. George Otis Smith boldly wrote the attorney of the Niagara Power Co. I have the letter here, and I would like to call it to the attention of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator for the purpose of letting him read it if he wants to.

Mr. LONG. This letter is from the Federal Power Commission, Washington, December 3, 1931. It was written in this connection: The city of Lockport, N. Y., was trying to get a franchise to use certain water power, and they were being opposed by the Niagara-Hudson Power Corporation. A hearing was scheduled for about December 8. On December 3, when the people from New York who were interested were coming down to appear before this Power Commission, Garsaud and Smith and the other bunch about like them, Mr. Smith wrote a letter to this corporation, as follows:

Mr. RANDALL J. LEBOEUF, Jr.,
General Counsel Niagara-Hudson Power Corporation,
New York City.

MY DEAR MR. LEBOEUF—

I want the Senator to get this. They would have hung people if such an indiscretion had been committed against the power company by anybody here. If the same kind of an indiscretion had been committed here against them, there would have been no end of punishment. The letter is as follows:

FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION,
Washington, December 3, 1931.

Mr. RANDALL J. LEBOEUF, Jr.,
General Counsel Niagara-Hudson Power Corporation,
New York City.

MY DEAR MR. LEBOEUF: At the hearing of the Niagara case next Tuesday the same procedure may be followed, if found desirable, as in recent hearings in Milwaukee and in the one now in progress here in Washington; that is, if counsel feel that disposition of any of the questions of fact at issue can be expedited by preliminary conference a continuance for that purpose may be granted immediately after the opening of the hearing.

While conferences have been open, we have experienced no difficulty thus far in the matter of disturbing interruptions from outside sources.

Yours very cordially,

GEORGE OTIS SMITH, Chairman.

In other words, the whole American family that is outside the breastworks, the "outside sources," are the ones who have to contribute and pay whatever total is set up on them by this nefarious combination they have over here. They want conferences and arrangements made, because they are experiencing no difficulty in keeping down the interruptions and the interferences from "outside sources."

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LONG. That is the kind of a situation we have here, and with that burning on the lips of the people of this country to-day the administration has had the temerity to put that Marcel Garsaud back up there to try to force that tool of the power interests on the American people here for another term.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I should like to add one item in connection with this subject matter about which the Senator from Louisiana has spoken. I think it was established beyond doubt at the hearings before the Interstate Commerce Committee that the Federal Power Commission had given what they called a temporary license to the Niagara Falls Power Co. for the diversion of 275,000 second-feet of water, in the opinion of sound lawyers, without any legal authority.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me to prefer a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate shall have concluded its work to-day it take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I object.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I thank the Senators for their interruptions. They only show that if we went to the full as to what could be shown we would be here a year disclosing things just like what the Senators have called to our attention.

When there is litigation, again the poor fellow gets the worst of it. Mr. Clay, on page 81 of the book to which I have referred, speaks of a case of that kind. Listen to these dates:

On May 1, 1930, the commission fixed a permanent rate schedule, cutting some rates and increasing others. This rate order the company has announced it will comply with "under protest," and while it has stated that "no further application to the courts is contemplated at this time," the original case still goes on. Down to the decision of the special master it involved 62,864 pages of testimony and 4,323 exhibits. The company alone is said to have expended $5,000,000 in the contest, yet after 10 years the question of what return the company is constitutionally entitled to as a minimum of fairness remains in doubt.

Ten years of litigation! It is stated that the company has spent $5,000,000. But let nobody misunderstand; the company has not spent a cent. That is all charged up to those who are using the telephones, this being a telephone case.

The company can spend the money without limit, it makes no difference, it is all in the rate, and the poor consumer pays it all. On the other hand, when the commission, which is supposed to represent the people in these legal contests, spends money, it is paid for by taxation; so that the people pay both sides of the lawsuit. The litigation to which I have referred lasted for 10 years, pretty nearly 63,000 pages of testimony were taken, and over 4,000 exhibits were offered. What would the attorneys' fees be in a case of that kind? How would you expect anyone to act intelligently in the case unless he read the evidence; and by the time he got through reading the evidence he would be ready to die of old age. It is endless, interminable, and all for the purpose of exasperating the people who have to foot the bills. They are made to pay for their own undoing, for their own dilemma. For the very hardships which are inflicted upon them the men and the women of the country who are abused by this kind of tactics are charged.

I read further from the book:

As additions and improvements made in the period that must necessarily intervene before the litigation is finally settled must be valued and the question of depreciation reopened, it is evident, says the report of the minority of the revision commission, that "the case is close to where it started."

Mr. President, the question of valuation always enters into the rate base, and the litigation connected with valuation often brings about not only delay but great injustice.

I want to quote from Mr. Commissioner Eastman, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, a few sentences on that subject. He said:

The valuation doctrine has hampered and embarrassed and grievously delayed regulation to an extent which has given rise to serious and warranted concern. If the total amount which has been spent upon railroad and utility valuations could be ascertained, if the total time consumed in wrangling upon this subject before commissions and courts could be totaled, if all the lawyers and so-called experts who make a living, and often a fat living, from this hurly-burly could be placed in line, I believe that the country would be staggered by the exhibition.

Nor is this the worst aspect. The significance of the rate controversies that wearily drag their way through the courts is not to be measured by their number. More serious, perhaps, from a social standpoint is the poisoning of the relations between the utilities and the public, the undermining of the confidence of the people in "the effective capacity of government." This feeling of popular distrust has been deepened through the revelation of the ingenuity, vigor, and resourcefulness with which those representing the electrical utilities have attempted to guide and direct the dominant public opinion of the country and make it "utility minded."

Mr. President, coming from a man who has had the experience and who has the ability of Mr. Eastman, I believe that his statement ought to and will carry great weight with those who will weigh his words. It will to some extent show the reason why the men controlling the Power Trust are willing to spend the money they have wrung from the people of the United States in trying to corrupt their Government; in trying, as Mr. Eastman said, to make the public "utility minded." The people of the United States have spent hundreds of millions of dollars every year that is used for fooling and defeating the very people who pay the money.

Here is something from the Federal Trade Commission to which I have called attention several times in the past, but it is stated here briefly, and I desire to repeat it:

The recent investigation of the Federal Trade Commission revealed that the National Electric Light Association, the official organ of the industry, has used the following main avenues of communication: Advertising and news editorials; textbooks and teachers; public speeches, pamphlets; political activities. Rarely, if ever, has the general public been so consistently and thoroughly propagandized as in the recent so-called educational campaign of those representing the utility interests, except, of course, during the World War. As stated by one of the publicity experts, every known device and method has been used except sky writing. It would seem some of the more undercover methods used to present the side of the utilities to the public are due to publicity experts being given too free a hand.

Mr. President, during the two great depression years the Power Trust has been very successful financially, and the injury which has come to the great corporation structures that have been built up and pyramided one upon another has not come because they were not making the same profit in the business and doing practically the same amount of business. It has come because of the legerdemain which they have undertaken to utilize in the financial structures and in the control of finances and in the putting of water into stocks, turning water into imitation gold and selling it as real gold to the investing public.

Mr. President, probably we have all read recently of what happened to Kreuger's great match company. I want the Senate and the country to realize, if possible, just what kind of institution that was. Although it did not deal in electricity, yet the same methods were used in building up the holding companies that have been used all through the United States by the Power Trust.

In the New Republic for May, 1932, is an article on this subject written by Mr. John T. Flynn, which contains some very valuable statistics and information. Among other things he said:

We have had a string of disasters like this one—some of them arriving at their dénouement through a devastating stroke of larceny like Kreuger's, some of them through the continuous attrition of endless exploitation like the Insull companies.

I shall have more to say about the Insull companies later on.

But in all of them, the final crash has resulted primarily from the crazy form of organization which permits a few men to hide their operations under a tangle of corporations behind which no system of accounting, no form of regulation, no kind of scrutiny can penetrate.

All over the world—in 43 countries—are some 250 match factories working away in the perfectly legitimate business of making matches. There are also iron mines and coal mines, banks in France and Holland and Sweden and Germany, paper mills and power plants and telephone plants and forests and chemical plants. All these are engaged in the business of producing materials which the world needs. They employ some fifty or sixty thousand men. There is no reason in the world why they should be united in organization. There is actually no union or tie between them. But the ownership of these countless industries is seized upon by a group of clever gentlemen, who have not the slightest interest in their primary and essential functions, and is made the basis of a vast game of stock and money manipulation which enriches these gentlemen for a time, then almost ruins them and brings losses amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars to the investors who were fooled into trusting them.

The 250 match factories throughout the world are held at least in ostensible ownership by a corporation organized under the beneficent laws of Delaware and called the International Match Co. The money for this purpose is supplied mainly by investors who buy bonds and nonvoting stock. The actual ownership and control is in the hands of the concern that owns the class A stock. This stock is owned by the Swedish Match Co., and the Swedish Match Co. is controlled by the Kreuger & Toll Co., of Sweden.

It gets a bit more complicated if you examine it more closely. Thus, here in America, we have several large match-making corporations. One is the Federal Match Co. Its stock is owned by a Swedish corporation called the Vulcan Match Co. That is in turn controlled by an American company—the International Match Co. Once again control crosses the sea to the Swedish Match Co., which is finally owned by Kreuger & Toll.

I wonder if anybody can follow it and get a complete comprehension of what is actually taking place. Here is one company owned by another. That company is owned by a company over in Europe, and the company in Europe is owned by another company over in the United States, and that American company is owned in turn by a company over in Sweden, and that company is owned by somebody else, and somebody else is owned by Kreuger & Toll.

All the money taken by the publicly labeled scoundrels who peddle blue-sky securities, and on whom the better-business bureaus wage continual warfare, is but a drop in the bucket to the billions of dollars which have been lost to American investors and banks through the operations of the very respectable financiers who have been building the holding-company schemes which have been collapsing, or at least tottering, in the last two or three years. Insull and Kreuger alone will account for a loss of half a billion, but there have been numerous others—several railroads, many smaller utility tangles, many investment and finance companies, and no end of banks like the Bank of United States in New York City—all of them receiving their last fatal death blows from the weakness bred in them in the very moments of organization.

Mr. President, at this point in my remarks I ask unanimous consent to include the entire article from which I have been quoting.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the New Republic, May 25, 1932]

KREUGER—ANOTHER HOLDING COMPANY DEBACLE

Wherever the story of Ivar Kreuger and his superb and masterful rascality is told—with a little awe and something akin to admiration—it will be the tale of the substituted debentures and forged concessions which will fill the foreground of the story. But these are merely incidents. They are afterbits of crooked strategy which the bewildered juggler found it possible and convenient to adopt to keep his impossible trick going a little longer. The important thing—and this we may be sure will be overlooked—is the financial device, the complicated collection of corporate implements, the initially dishonest financial structure held together by its inevitable holding company, which made possible all the things which Kreuger did.

We have had a string of disasters like this one—some of them arriving at their dénouement through a devastating stroke of larceny like Kreuger's, some of them through the continuous attrition of endless exploitation like the Insull companies. But in all of them the final crash has resulted primarily from the crazy form of organization which permits a few men to hide their operations under a tangle of corporations behind which no system of accounting, no form of regulation, no kind of scrutiny can penetrate.

All over the world—in 43 countries—are some 250 match factories working away in the perfectly legitimate business of making matches. There are also iron mines and coal mines, banks in France and Holland and Sweden and Germany, paper mills and power plants and telephone plants and forests and chemical plants. All these are engaged in the business of producing materials which the world needs. They employ some fifty or sixty thousand men. There is no reason in the world why they should be united in organization. There is actually no union or tie between them. But the ownership of these countless industries is seized upon by a group of clever gentlemen, who have not the slightest interest in their primary and essential functions, and is made the basis of a vast game of stock and money manipulation which enriches these gentlemen for a time, then a'most ruins them and brings losses amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars to the investors who were fooled into trusting them.

The 250 match factories throughout the world are held at least in ostensible ownership by a corporation organized under the beneficent laws of Delaware and called the International Match Co. The money for this purpose is supplied mainly by investors who buy bonds and nonvoting stock. The actual ownership and control is in the hands of the concern that owns the Class A stock. This stock is owned by the Swedish Match Co. and the Swedish Match Co. is controlled by the Kreuger & Toll Co., of Sweden.

It gets a bit more complicated if you examine it more closely. Thus, here in America, we have several large match-making corporations. One is the Federal Match Co. Its stock is owned by a Swedish corporation called the Vulcan Match Co. That is in turn controlled by an American company—the International Match Co. Once again control crosses the sea to the Swedish Match Co., which is finally owned by Kreuger & Toll.

In a little while Mr. Kreuger might have succeeded in creating a monopoly in America. For it has now come to light that the 350,000 shares of Diamond Match Co. common stock (a controlling interest), delivered mysteriously a year ago to four large American banks, were in reality held by them for the Kreuger interests.

Among all these numerous corporations, funds and securities were handed back and forth, dividends and interest payments to stockholders and bondholders of one company coming to them in checks of another, so that no one knew very clearly what was going on, and, apparently, no one cared. The simple and obvious fact that men do not construct impenetrable entanglements like this where their purposes are wholly proper seems to have little or no weight, though we are now slowly finding out this ancient truth.

All the money taken by all the publicly labeled scoundrels who peddle blue-sky securities and on whom the better-business bureaus wage continual warfare is but a drop in the bucket to the billions of dollars which have been lost to American investors and banks through the operations of the very respectable financiers who have been building the holding-company schemes which have been collapsing, or at least tottering, in the last two or three years. Insull and Kreuger alone will account for a loss of half a billion, but there have been numerous others—several railroads, many smaller utility tangles, many investment and finance companies and no end of banks like the Bank of United States in New York City—all of them receiving their last fatal death blows from the weakness bred in them in the very moments of organization.

Kreuger, of course, turned out to be one of the greatest of international crooks. But please let us not forget this fact, for the benefit of those who are always talking about Government interference in business. Kreuger, left to his own natural talents and devices, might have succeeded in swindling a few people out of a million or two. He was able to swindle thousands of stockholders and bondholders in America out of several hundred millions because the Government has interfered in business and has implemented business—and of course, Mr. Kreuger—with this vicious device, the holding company, which makes it possible not merely for Kreuger, but for scores of other adventurers to wreck the investments of millions of people. The law should take this implement out of their hands.

Here are some pregnant sentences from cables to the New York Times following the Kreuger debacle:

"Berlin: Germany is among the countries which would be least affected by the troubles of the Kreuger concern.

"London: British interests in Kreuger and Toll are understood to be merely a minority shareholding in the prosperous British Match Corporation (Ltd.), which is not involved in the investigation.

"Paris: Kreuger & Toll interests in France are not very important."

Not so in America. Here a prodigious volume of loose and foolish millions has been running wild under the guidance of our new supermen—those amazing wizards of finance who used to tell us to rely upon their boundless sapience. Mr. Kreuger, who had got his education in business here, beheld our golden flood and its mighty guardians. For his reckless adventures, therefore, he came to America for funds. Here is what he got and the securities on which he obtained the money:

Kreuger & Toll 5's, 1959	$48,000,000
American certificates	60,000,000
Common stock (A and B)	7,500,000
International Match 5's, 1941	50,000,000
International Match 5's, 1947	$48,000,000
International Match preferred	17,500,000
Grangesburg Iron Co.	15,000,000
Ericsson Telephone Co.
Skandinaviska Kredit A. B.
Stockholms Intecknings Garanti A. B.
Total	246,000,000

To-day, all that mess of securities, held by some 32,000 American investors, is worth less than $10,000,000.

Here is a little episode which has become a bit snarled in the flood of news, but which is quite simple.

Mr. Kreuger, as may be supposed, was forever in need of funds. In the end the need became desperate. He required an immediate loan and went to the Riksbank for it. He proposed to give as security his share in the Boliden gold mine, supposedly one of the richest in the world. But he no longer had these shares. He had made a loan from the Skandinaviska Credit Bank and pledged them as collateral. The International Match Co. in America held $50,000,000 in German bonds. Kreuger wanted them. He therefore cabled the International Match Co. to send the German bonds to the Skandinaviska Credit Bank. It complied. In their place Kreuger sent a lot of Italian credit bills and alleged foreign-match-monopoly concessions. Kreuger then got his Boliden shares released by the Skandinaviska Credit Bank, which now had the German bonds instead.

He then took his Boliden shares to the Riksbank and got his loan—40,000,000 kroner.

But what of the International Match Co., which got the foreign treasury bills and concessions? These consisted of an alleged Polish match concession and three others, from unknown countries, but designated in the portfolio of the International Match Co. as countries X, Y, and Z. They were valued as follows:

Concession of X country	$28,979,596
Concession of Y country	27,830,600
Concession of Z country	9,500,000
Total	66,310,196

We are now told by the American banker, Mr. Durant, of Lee, Higginson, who sold Americans bonds worth millions and who was supposed to check up on such matters, that they were monopoly concessions from Italy, Spain, and the Diamond Match Co. They were forgeries, but apparently useless forgeries, because the astute Mr. Durant did not even ask to see them. One of these directors on the witness stand almost wept at Kreuger's demonstration in deception and his own misadventure in misplaced confidence. But what about the bondholders and stockholders who placed confidence in this director and all the other directors, who supposed they were directing and guarding the assets of the International Match Co. and who have now lost perhaps $250,000,000 through that misplaced confidence? What about the bankers who, in cold print, sold bonds with an assurance that they had fully examined all the affairs of the Kreuger interests and who had not checked them, who had taken Kreuger's unsupported word, who were even content with such tragic nonsense as his X, Y, Z countries, and who permitted the juggling of cash, checks, securities, concessions to go on between banks, subsidiaries, and holding companies with apparently no scrutiny and no curiosity?

One naturally asks what the directors of the International Match Co. were doing all this time. This is a Delaware corporation. The majority of its directors are American. It is financed by American money. It is supposed to be watched over by the great banking firm of Lee, Higginson & Co., which has sold several hundred million dollars of Kreuger securities to the trusting American people. What were these directors and bankers doing?

Well, as for the directors, they are, save for one or two Swedish gentlemen, American business men of almost overpowering intelligence, the kind that "have made America what she is to-day," and I hope they're satisfied. But one wonders during what odd moments they were directing the International Match Co. Most of them are directors in so many corporations that it is difficult to understand how even such mighty fellows could really spare the time for even a few of them. Here they are, with the number of corporations of which each is a director:

Percy A. Rockefeller	51
S. F. Pryor	41
F. W. Allen	21
H. O. Havemeyer	17
John McHugh	17
F. L. Higginson	13
Donald Durant	8
A. H. Larkin	8
B. Tomlinson	5

Mr. Rockefeller, for instance, when not directing these various 51 corporations, devotes a good deal of time to operating in Wall Street, playing bear, and we know how that uses up one's mental energies. What are these fellows doing on this International Match board, and on all those others, for that matter? They are in reality making a thoroughgoing comedy out of American business. How will they explain—and how will the president of the International Match Co., Mr. Durant, explain—how Kreuger could remove $50,000,000 worth of securities from their vaults on a simple request and substitute a handful of junk without their knowing it? Mr. Durant has testified that he accepted these alleged concessions from three countries without knowing what countries they were and without any scrap of evidence that they really existed.

American bondholders and stockholders were entitled to interest and dividends. Once the Vulcan Match Co., a subsidiary of the International Match Co., required $325,000 for dividends. The money was sent to the Vulcan from the Norden Export Corporation, another Kreuger concern, having no immediate corporate connection with the Vulcan.

In Amsterdam was a fictitious corporation called the Granata Co. In the remote Duchy of Lichtenstein was still another corporate ghost, the Continental Investment Co. The International Match Co. got money for its essential earnings from these two corporations in varying sums, charging them interest on some sort of nebulous claims, up to as much as 24 per cent—whatever was necessary to produce the required interest. But, oddly, the checks for these sums always came, not from the Granata or the Continental, but from Kreuger & Toll in Stockholm, or from Kreuger himself.

Now, Kreuger was not personally around actually doing these things. He merely gave orders. But the International Match Co. had a president. It had officials. It had directors.

This is only part of the story. A syndicate of American bankers headed by Lee, Higginson & Co., in September, 1928, sold in America $60,000,000 of American participating certificates in Kreuger & Toll Co. These certificates were secured by the deposits of a group of foreign securities. Here are the securities:

Yugoslavia 6¼'s, 1958	$7,000,000
Latvia 6's, 1964	6,000,000
Poland 7's, 1945	5,100,000
Ecuador 8's, 1953	1,986,900
Ecuador Mortgage Bank Gtd. 7's, 1949	1,000,000
Greece 8½'s, 1954	4,768,693
Rumania 7's, 1959	2,000,000
Rumania 4's, 1968	1,852,628
France 3's and 4's (Fcs. 344,000,000)	13,477,576
Belgian National Railway Pfd. (Fcs. 80,000,000)	2,224,460
Prussian Mortgage Bank Gold 8's (RM 12,000,000)	2,858,400
Hungarian Land Reform Mortgage 5½'s, 1979	12,000,000

They had at the time of deposit a market value well in excess of $60,000,000. The indenture under which these securities were deposited for the "protection" of the American investors provided that they might be withdrawn and others substituted in their place. Certain requirements as to substituted securities were set out, but these requirements were of course thoroughly full of holes. And so when Mr. Kreuger needed the securities deposited, as, for instance, he needed the German bonds, he merely withdrew them and substituted others. Here's what he substituted:

Ecuador Mortgage Bank 7's, 1949	$922,529
Ecuador 8's, 1953	1,879,289
Yugoslavia 6¼'s, 1958	22,000,000
Latvia 6's, 1964	6,000,000
Hungarian Cooperative Society 5½'s, 1979	23,848,753
Rumania 7½'s, 1971	2,944,000
German 5½'s, 1965	11,000
Rumania 4's, 1968	1,439,000

The last three items on this list have some market. The remainder are utterly without market value now.

The important thing to remember about this is that Kreuger, in making this substitution, acted wholly within the terms of the indenture, even though some of the substituted bonds were in default, and others were affected by the moratorium. The American bankers who, in another transaction already described, didn't know that $50,000,000 of good German bonds had been taken from the International Match Co. and had been replaced by three fake concessions, also collaborated with Kreuger in putting over on American investors American certificates secured by the defective indenture referred to, managed to soft-pedal that defective feature and later permitted Kreuger, apparently without protest, to substitute practically worthless bonds in the pledged deposit.

It is these bankers and the directors associated with them in the handling of Kreuger's affairs in this country who now seek to take charge of the job of salvaging the wreck, just as Mr. Insull, in a friendly receivership, dominates the rescue of the utility which foundered under him.

Who bought the American certificates which Lee, Higginson & Co. sold? On the directorate of the International Match Co. are two directors of the Chase National Bank, one of them chairman of the executive committee of that bank. It would be interesting to know how many depositors of the Chase National bought Kreuger & Toll American certificates on the recommendation of the Chase Bank.

To sum the matter up: We have in this unsavory mess one more beautiful example of our crowning American financial vices—holding-company abuses, directors who do not direct, worthless securities bought by trusting investors on the faith of so-called "big" bankers, "friendly receiverships" which result when the crash comes, and the secrecy which cloaks big business and behind which all these costly practices are carried on. These things constitute one of the major issues in the country now—I think the major issue. Would it not be interesting to know what some of our candidates for President have in mind about such things?

JOHN T. FLYNN.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it is only an illustration—it is not a thing that stands out alone; it is only one of thousands, one of the big ones, it is true; but it is an illustration of what is going on all over the civilized world. It is an illustration of the deceit and the trickery and the debauchery with which men of great wealth are trying to accumulate millions more of great wealth and to get it through the contribution of the pennies of the poor of every land under the sun.

Insull failed, like Kreuger, and a great deal of sympathy went out for Insull; so much so, Mr. President, that he has been pensioned, by some of the companies which he ruined, for $18,000 a year during his natural lifetime.

I have no objection to Mr. Insull's living in luxury; but, Mr. President, when I think of the millions of men whose hard-earned cash he took away from them, who followed his advice and invested their all in some of his companies which he built out of hot air and water, I must confess that I do not have very much sympathy for him, and I do not believe anybody ought to have, inasmuch as $18,000 a year ought to keep the wolf from his door during the rest of his days. But it will not keep the wolf from the doors of millions of men and women who have toiled 6 and 7 days a week, 52 weeks a year, ever since they have been big enough to work, and have put their savings in his companies and lost them all.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. How are we to distinguish this contribution of $18,000 for a lifetime in view of the fact that his services have merely been to impoverish millions of people? Is it not in reality a reward for the rascality that has been carried on by the gentleman? It is rather a guaranty to one of these rascals that if he can not get by with his crookedness he will not be the loser, but there will be some balm in Gilead left yet to keep him in mild luxury.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I wish I were able to contradict the Senator. He has drawn a picture which I think is true and one which it is not very pleasant to look at. It does make me believe that there is "a hereafter"——

Mr. LONG. I hope so.

Mr. NORRIS. Because I do not know how any of these fellows who have crucified so many millions of people who are toiling and suffering are ever going to get their due and just punishment unless there shall be "a hereafter."

Mr. President, referring to holding companies, applying now strictly and directly to electric-light companies, I want to call attention to one, and it was one of the Insull companies. Mr. Insull's companies extended over a large part of the United States. He lived in Illinois, but he undertook to control at least a part of the Senate of the United States at one time by a very liberal contribution of about $125,000 to a senatorial candidate. He contributed it to the chairman of the Public Service Commission of Illinois, who had control of the rates of his company, and who was a candidate for the Senate. We all remember that story. Mr. Insull did not get away with that job. He was up in Maine and controlled a good share of Maine.

Suppose, Mr. President, you lived in Lewiston, Me., which is one of the beautiful, prosperous cities of that great State. You, of course, would have electricity in your house, and the thought might occur to you, "Who owns this electricity; who controls it; who is running the electric-power company that supplies me with electricity in my home?" Well, it would be difficult for you, Mr. President, to find out; it would be almost necessary for you to employ an expert; but if you did employ an expert to run it down for you his report would show a very peculiar condition of things in that Maine city.

When the figures I have before me were compiled—that is, while Mr. Insull was still on his throne a year or so ago—Lewiston was supplied with electricity by the Lewiston-Auburn Electric Light Co. Remember that was the local company, but that local company did not have a thing to say and had nothing to do except what it was told to do by somebody else. The Lewiston-Auburn Electric Light Co.

is owned by the Androscoggin Electric Co., and the Androscoggin Electric Co. is owned by the Androscoggin Corporation; the Androscoggin Corporation is owned by the Central Maine Power Co.; the Central Maine Power Co. is owned by the New England Public Service Co.; the New England Public Service Co. is owned by the National Electric Power Co.; the National Electric Power Co. is owned by the Middle West Utilities Co., and that was Insull. On top of the pyramid sat the Middle West Utilities Co.—Mr. Insull's company—and other of these subsidiary corporations reached down and dealt in electric light for Lewiston, Me. That is only a sample; that is only one illustration. There are hundreds of other instances of one company owning many others. There are dozens and dozens of other subsidiary companies which are owned by each one of the companies I have named. It is no use to list them; every one of those companies owns many other companies; those other companies own some more companies; then some more companies own still other companies; and at the top of the pyramid sat the king—Insull. It was his mighty hand that controlled every one of them. Without his consent there was not a single one of them that could buy a new generating machine; and if they did so, they had to pay a commission to some other holding company. They all levied on the poor fellow who pays an electric-light bill every month.

It was the same outfit that set aside $400,000 to control the Senate a few years ago, to control it for the purpose of accomplishing three things. That was at the time when there was pending before the Senate the resolution under which the commission is still investigating the Power Trust. When that resolution was pending here $400,000 were set aside; an army of men were sent to Washington to handle us. Ex-United States Senators were employed as attorneys. I see the two Senators from Wisconsin honoring me with their presence. It was an ex-Senator from the great State of Wisconsin who got $10,000 for appearing before a committee—at least that is all I ever heard of his doing—for this great organization. That was part of the $400,000.

What did they propose to do with the Senate? They proposed to do three things: One was to defeat the resolution to investigate them, another was to defeat the bill then pending known as the Muscle Shoals bill, and the third was to defeat the bill then pending which was known as the Boulder Dam Canyon bill. The $400,000 was not more than a drop in the bucket.

There was a Republican National Convention held at Kansas City four years ago. The same ex-Senator from Wisconsin who had been paid to appear before men with whom he had been associated prior to the time he received that enormous fee, the same Senator who represented the Power Trust before the Senate, was selected by Herbert Hoover to go down and handle the delegates from the South and line them up to control the Republican National Convention. He was very successful. Nobody knows whether he was paid in money or whether he got anything at that time; but, if he was not paid in money, one of the first official acts of Mr. Hoover when he became President of the United States and sat on the throne in the White House was to appoint that same Power Trust lawyer to a position on the bench for life, where he sits to-day to render judgment pro and con in cases that may come before him. Appointing to public office is one of the ways of paying political debts. That is one of the ways by which the Power Trust worms its way into every avenue of government, by which it does its work, makes Presidents, makes Senators, buys communities, sells men on the auction block. Yet we have difficulty in the Senate in securing enough money appropriated to continue the investigation that has been carried on by the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. President, referring further to holding companies, I have a copy here of a letter from a member of the Department of Public Service of the State of New York, which gives an illustration of the delay and expense and points out the difficulty consumers have in rectifying any mistakes and overcharges made by various utility companies.

A hearing took place before the New York commission in a case to which I now refer, and in the opinion rendered by the chairman it is stated:

The Long Island Capital Corporation was organized under the stock corporation law of the State of New York and was incorporated on or about January 24, 1924. At the time of incorporation its authorized capital stock was 10,000 shares without par value.

On April 26, 1929—

That was only a month or two after the company was organized—the Long Island Lighting Co. had outstanding 3,000,000 shares of common capital stock.

It was proposed to acquire the capital stock of the Long Island Lighting Co. by issuing the capital stock of the Long Island Capital Corporation, share for share.

That was what they asked of the New York commission. One corporation was asking permission of that commission to buy another one. I have here the opinion of Mr. Maltbie, the chairman of that commission. It is an interesting opinion. I have read a little of it, and I wish to read a little more, to show what happens in these cases. Near the conclusion of his opinion Mr. Maltbie says:

It should be borne in mind that this testimony was given at the height of the boom period and just before the explosion in the fall of 1929 revealed the grossly inflated and unsound character of the security market.

We know that these greatly exaggerated claims of the financial superiority of holding companies were myths. Experience has shown that holding companies, which are the result of the pyramiding of security issues resulting from the acquisition of securities at high prices, are not elements of strength but of weakness, and that when crises come and stringency develops in the money market holding companies can not obtain funds. The underlying operating companies must then depend upon their own resources to raise the capital that is needed, and they can do it on much more favorable terms than the holding companies. Indeed, at present, companies that hold only securities and own no operating companies find it practically impossible to obtain funds, and the market value of their securities has descended to depths of which no investor dreamed when he was enticed by rosy prospectuses and promises of great earnings to pass by the securities of operating utilities and invest in the securities of holding companies. Experience has shown that in times of stress, when assistance is most needed, holding companies are unable to give it, and in good times, when funds can be secured at low rates, the operating companies do not need external assistance.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in full at this point the opinion of Doctor Maltbie in that case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK,
DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SERVICE, STATE DIVISION.

IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF LONG ISLAND CAPITAL CORPORATION (A NEW YORK STATE BUSINESS CORPORATION) FOR AUTHORITY TO ACQUIRE NOT LESS THAN 1,600,000 SHARES OR ALL, 3,000,000 SHARES OF THE OUTSTANDING COMMON CAPITAL STOCK OF LONG ISLAND LIGHTING CO., ALL OF WHICH SHARES ARE WITHOUT PAR VALUE. CASE NO. 5612

Appearances: Ellis L. Phillips, Esq., appearing for the Long Island Capital Corporation, petitioner. Henry R. Frost, Esq., secretary and attorney for the Long Island Capital Corporation. William C. Langley, Esq., for the petitioner, and John J. Hubbard, consulting accountant, for the petitioner. R. F. Van Doorn, treasurer of the petitioner.

Chairman, Maltbie. This petition, dated April 26, 1929, was received by the commission April 27, 1929, and hearings were held the following summer. No action by this commission was taken thereafter, but the matter received considerable attention by the legislative commission on revision of the public service commission law in 1929 and 1930. Although conditions have changed very markedly since the application was filed, no further testimony has been presented.

The Long Island Capital Corporation was organized under the stock corporation law of the State of New York and was incorporated on or about January 24, 1929. At the time of incorporation its authorized capital stock was 10,000 shares without par value.

Upon April 26, 1929, the Long Island Lighting Co. had outstanding 3,000,000 shares of common capital stock.

It was proposed to acquire the capital stock of the Long Island Lighting Co. by issuing the capital stock of the Long Island Capital Corporation share for share.

The reasons set forth in favor of the acquisition were stated in the petition as follows: Messrs. Phillips, Olmstead, and Childs were said to control the Long Island Lighting Co. through ownership of the common stock, such control having continued from the inception of that company. These individuals desired to make use of the petitioner for the purpose of consolidating their interests and to utilize the petitioner as a vehicle for financing or furthering the interests of the Long Island Lighting Co.

The hearing upon the application was held by Chairman Prendergast upon May 29, 1929. The only persons appearing were for the petitioner. The proceedings covered 13 pages. The only exhibits submitted were affidavits relating to publication of notice of the hearing. Two witnesses were called, Mr. E. L. Phillips and Mr. W. C. Langley. The former was president of the Long Island Capital Corporation. Mr. Langley's relation to the Long Island Capital Corporation or to the Long Island Lighting Co. was not stated.

Mr. Phillips's brief testimony was to the effect that he and his associates were in position to turn over upwards of 1,600,000 shares of the Long Island Lighting Co. His testimony added little to the reasons or justification for the proposal, but he stated that it would probably be necessary to increase considerably the common stock of the Long Island Lighting Co. to "bring up a better balance between the bonds and the preferred stock" of that company. He explained that at that time there were about $85,000,000 in prior securities to the common stock, and he estimated that the company "ought to have something like $15,000,000 during the next two years put in through the common stock to * * * improve the balance sheet." The formation of the Long Island Capital Corporation would, in his opinion, provide a means for carrying this out and continuing the control of the three persons over the company and its policies. He also stated that the company would be willing to exchange the stock of the new corporation for the stock of the Long Island Lighting Co., share for share, in case any of the other holders of the stock desired to do so. He estimated that the Long Island Lighting Co. would need $100,000,000 of additional capitalization during the next eight years to meet its needs. Mr. Phillips also referred to rate reductions that had been made and others that were anticipated, but nothing was said to show how the proposal, if approved, would work to this end.

Mr. Langley's testimony was entirely confined to an expression of opinion as to what securities the Long Island Capital Corporation would be able to sell, these being, in his opinion, debentures, preferred stock, class A stock, or other securities having a priority over its common stock.

Apparently the petitioner appreciated that the record of this hearing furnished no basis for approving the application and attempted to strengthen the record by further testimony. Under date of June 26 another hearing was requested. Such hearing was held upon July 2, 1929. The record covered 24 pages. The only witnesses called were Messrs. Phillips and Langley, and the only persons whose appearances are noted were representatives of the petitioners.

Regarding the alleged superiority of the holding company—the Long Island Capital Corporation—in obtaining funds, Mr. Phillips testified as follows (S. M. p. 24–5):

"Q. Do you know of your own knowledge whether or not the investing public to-day are buying largely securities in holding companies?—A. They are. By holding companies I mean companies which hold a majority or a substantial control of shares of a utility operating company or companies.

"Q. Do you know whether the public have progressively increased their investments in holding-company securities during the last few years?—A. Yes; and in increasing volume during the last two years especially.

"Q. Do you know whether the class of securities sold of holding companies, such as you have described, are bonds, debentures, or preferred stock?—A. They are all of those classes.

"Q. Do you think it will strengthen the position of the Long Island Lighting Co. if a holding company could purchase its common stock and give it financial assistance through the medium of the sale of holding-company securities?—A. I think that it would strengthen the financial position of the Long Island Lighting Co. and would very materially assist it in making definite plans to take care of its actual growth requirements. It would be of great benefit to the public served by the company because of the greater assurance of ability to provide good service and better rates for our consumers."

Mr. Phillips further testified as follows (p. 26):

"Q. Can you give an estimate of the price that the petitioner would pay for the common stock of the Long Island Lighting Co. if sold at the present time?—A. This question presents a very important phase of the situation. The Long Island Lighting Co. common stock is selling at about $70 a share."

At the time this testimony was given the Long Island Lighting Co. had outstanding 3,000,000 shares of common stock, which was entered on the books of the company at $3,000,000, or $1 per share. If Mr. Phillips's testimony is correct, this stock then had a market value of seventy times its stated value, or $210,000,000. In 1928 the company declared dividends on the common stock of $1,275,000, or 42.5 per cent of the stated book value. In the first half of 1929 the company declared dividends of $900,000, or 30 per cent of the stated book value. Neither of these figures would justify a market value of seventy times the stated value. It would seem that the record must be wrong, but it has not been corrected.

Mr. Langley, when called to the stand at the second hearing, testified as follows (the italics being mine) (S. M., pp. 33–36):

"A. It is my opinion, based on association with the Long Island Lighting Co. both in financial matters and as a director covering a period of many years, that the Long Island Lighting Co. has grown to such proportions, the extent of its operations and its ramifications now and potentially have become so large, that it is desirable to create a holding company as an adjunct to the Long Island Lighting Co. to take over and assist in its financial operations. The growth of Long Island, in which I have lived personally for over 20 years in the territory served by this company, is so great and the magnitude of its future so difficult to estimate that I believe that the Long Island Lighting Co. should be supplemented by a holding company in order to assist it in its financing. This holding company could preserve, hold, and balance the proper financial structure of the operating company. The result, in my opinion, would be that Long Island Lighting Co. would at all times be placed in a position where its financial needs could be instantly taken care of and the holding company would have such high credit that it would very advantageously sell debentures or preferred stocks or preference stock of various characters, thus creating a flexibility of financial structure which would not otherwise exist. Consequently, through the sale of different securities, as above stated, in the market at different times money could be procured at the least possible cost.

"Q. Is your conclusion as to the desirability to the Long Island Lighting Co. of permitting the acquisition of its common stock by a holding company emphasized by the present market conditions?—A. Yes. I would say further that it is emphasized by the fact that almost every other big public-utility situation has found the necessity of the creation of such company and practice has demonstrated their economic desirability in the public interest.

"Q. If the holding company plan as you have outlined it were permitted, would the holders of bonds and stocks of such company have a good security with a stable market?—A. In my opinion they would.

"Q. Would the market value of the holding-company securities as a whole be more stable than Long Island Lighting Co. common stock if the money were raised entirely from the sale of such common stock?—A. In my opinion that would be so.

"Q. In your opinion, would the public served by the Long Island Lighting Co. be benefited by reason of the fact that the Long Island Lighting Co. would, at all times, be able to raise the necessary money at reasonable rates to serve the public with necessary facilities in the territory of the Long Island Lighting Co.?—A. In my opinion, the public served by the Long Island Lighting Co. would be benefited both in the improvement of service and rates if a company were formed of a character under discussion in this petition, because this company would be a more flexible and elastic medium of finance, having, as it would have, many different characters of securities it could issue, and because it would stand ready at all times to act as the financial adjunct of the Long Island Lighting Co. This company could, through the varied character of its issues, be in a position at all times to take advantage of varying market conditions, thus procuring money at the cheapest possible cost and on the best terms.

"Q. Do you concur with Mr. Phillips in the statement that the common stock of the Long Island Lighting Co. could be sold to the holding company at a better price than it could be sold to stockholders of the Long Island Lighting Co. or to the public?—A. Yes; because there would be no underwriting commissions to pay and because, unless the common stock of the Long Island Lighting Co. were sold at a very attractive price, the present stockholders might not subscribe and the rights to subscribe would be worth very little, so that there would be no great incentive for other people to take their place through the purchase of rights.

"Q. You mean by a very attractive price, Mr. Langley, a price considerably lower than the market for the common stock at the time the rights are issued?—A. Exactly.

It should be borne in mind that this testimony was given at the height of the boom period and just before the explosion in the fall of 1929 revealed the grossly inflated and unsound character of the security market. We now know that these greatly exaggerated claims of the financial superiority of holding companies were myths. Experience has shown that holding companies, which are the result of pyramiding of security issues resulting from the acquisition of securities at high prices, are not elements of strength but of weakness, and that when crises come and stringency develops in the money market, holding companies can not obtain funds. The underlying operating companies must then depend upon their own resources to raise the capital that is needed, and they can do it on much more favorable terms than the holding companies. Indeed, at present, companies that hold only securities and own no operating properties find it practically impossible to obtain funds, and the market value of their securities has descended to depths of which no investor dreamed when he was enticed by rosy prospectuses and promises of great earnings to pass by the securities of operating utilities and invest in the securities of holding companies. Experience has shown that in times of stress, when assistance is most needed, holding companies are unable to give it; and in good times, when funds can be secured at low rates, the operating companies do not need external assistance.

The record in this case does not show that the addition of the Long Island Capital Corporation to the corporate structure of the Long Island Lighting System of companies would be in the public interest. It would be an element of weakness, and many other systems would be better off without top-heavy holding companies.

If additional reason for denial of the application were needed, I might point out that the commission has very limited powers over holding companies and that the Long Island Capital Corporation would be subject to far less supervision (almost none) than the Long Island Lighting Co.

An order is submitted herewith denying the application.

MILO R. MALTBIE, Chairman.

Mr. NORRIS. Doctor Maltbie shows very clearly that what I have been saying is true, that these holding companies have no excuse for their existence. In most of the cases the only reason for their existence is to deceive the people who pay the money, and to make profits for those who sit at the top of the holding companies, and who sell stocks, made mostly of water in many cases, to the investing public, and thus deceive them as well as the customers who pay the money.

Mr. President, I desire to read just a little from one of the well-recognized authorities on this subject. I am reading now from Main Street and Wall Street, by William Z. Ripley, at page 89:

Most disconcerting is it when this latest financial development invades the field of public utilities, already sufficiently cluttered up with holding companies and trusts. The older and conservative companies are above criticism. But one takes exception to the offerings of the Southern Gas & Power Corporation, with an authorized note issue of $2,000,000, preferred stock $5,000,000, and Class A 250,000 shares, leaving the exclusive voting power, except in case of default in cumulative dividends, in 100,000 shares of "common stock without par value." It is these last which are not offered to the public at all. This organization controls operating companies in 37 communities, scattered over eight different States. Was there ever a clearer case in an essential public industry of what has been well defined by an expert as "one of the besetting sins of modern corporations * * * the custom of trading on a thin equity, control resting in the hands of common-stock holders, while the funds are supplied by the sale of preferred stocks and bonds"? Had this author written in 1925 he would have added "and even of a large number of common shares which have been stripped of voting power." Then he would have hit several nails squarely on the head with one rap of the hammer.

That is the end of the quotation from Mr. Ripley's book.

When we come to the proposition of regulating the holding company, which is at present the outstanding factor in the electric-power industry, we have no experience to serve as a guide. These companies have not yet been subject to any regulation, State or Federal, and the question arises whether their operations are of such a character that they can be said to be "affected with the public interest," and whether their activities as managers of operating companies in different States, and their issuance of and trading in securities, constitute interstate commerce. The answer which is frequently made, that these also are matters of no consequence, that the public as users of power deal only with the operating company, and that since the rates and services of the operating company are regulated the consumer, as such, is not interested in or affected by what the holding company may do, is by no means convincing. If it were to be held that the charges which a holding company may impose upon a subsidiary operating company, and which may add materially to its capital investment or its operating costs, are solely the concern of the contracting parties; that the control which the holding company, through stock ownership, may impose upon the policies and management of the operating company is subject to no public supervision or restraint; that holding companies may acquire the stocks of operating companies and may pledge such stocks as collateral for security issues of their own, and may repeat and pyramid the process, regardless of the effect upon the credit of the operating company and without being answerable therefor to any public authority; it is apparent that an important and controlling element in the electric-power industry would have escaped public regulation and that investors in their securities would be left to the mercy of speculators with no protection save such as might be afforded by "blue sky" laws.

I have been reading, Mr. President, from an address delivered at Yale University March 20, 1929, by O. C. Merrill, formerly executive secretary of the Federal Power Commission. No one will say for a moment that Mr. Merrill has ever been moved by any of the ideas that are sometimes erroneously, I think, put upon shoulders such as mine. Certainly nobody ever thought that he was anything but a conservative; but a man of ability, I think everybody will admit; a man now, I understand, working for some of the large power corporations. He tells us in this article just what the dangers are. He was for many years, as I say, executive secretary of the Federal Power Commission. He knows about these things, as a matter of fact, and he was a close student; and while he did not agree with me on many of my ideas of government, I came in close contact with him often, and I found him not only able but, I think, perfectly honest and sincere in his views. He did not hesitate to condemn this one thing that brings about a great deal of our difficulty and our trouble, and to do so in explicit terms, as I have just read.

EMERGENCY UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I desire to have a conference report acted upon, but it will be necessary to have the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] here. He made a special request to be notified; so, if the Senator will yield for that purpose, I will suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield for that purpose?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Dale	Kendrick	Sheppard
Austin	Davis	Keyes	Shipstead
Bailey	Dickinson	King	Smoot
Barbour	Dill	La Follette	Steiwer
Bingham	Fletcher	Lewis	Stephens
Black	Frazier	Long	Thomas, Idaho
Blaine	George	McGill	Townsend
Borah	Glass	McKellar	Tydings
Brookhart	Goldsborough	McNary	Vandenberg
Bulkley	Gore	Metcalf	Wagner
Bulow	Hale	Moses	Walcott
Byrnes	Hatfield	Norris	Watson
Capper	Hebert	Reed	White
Cohen	Howell	Robinson, Ark.
Connally	Jones	Robinson, Ind.
Couzens	Kean	Schall

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-one Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the Houses of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11732) to amend section 2 of an act approved February 25, 1929 (45 Stat. 1303), to complete the acquisition of land adjacent to Bolling Field, D. C., and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to Senate amendment No. 1 to the bill (H. R. 9642) to authorize supplemental appropriations for emergency highway construction, with a view to increasing employment, with an amendment thereto, upon which it insists; that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2 to the said bill; requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments; and that Mr. COLLIER, Mr. RAINEY, Mr. DOUGHTON, Mr. HAWLEY, and Mr. TREADWAY were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 37) authorizing a correction in the enrollment of House bill 11897, the War Department appropriation bill, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

CORRECTION IN ENROLLMENT

Mr. REED. I ask that the Chair may lay before the Senate House Concurrent Resolution 37.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 37 of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized and directed in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 11897) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, to insert, on page 9, line 15, of the bill, the sum of $5,928,389 in lieu of the matter directed to be inserted by the concurrence of the House in Senate amendment No. 14.

Mr. REED. This is a clerical error made in the course of the proceedings of the House yesterday. The concurrent resolution exactly carries out the agreement of the conferees in striking out some language which was made unnecessary because of the passage of the economy bill.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mr. VANDENBERG (for Mr. WATERMAN), from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that to-day, July 13, 1932, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 3400. An act to amend an act of Congress approved June 18, 1898, entitled "An act to regulate plumbing and gas fitting in the District of Columbia"; and

S. 4741. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Wellsburg, W. Va.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW

Mr. McNARY. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its work to-day it take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. CONNALLY. Can the Senator give us any information as to the probable date of final adjournment?

Mr. McNARY. I entertain a very strong hope that it will not be later than Friday afternoon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Oregon? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EMERGENCY UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the message of the House of Representatives on the relief bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield for the purpose of having the message laid before the Senate?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives agreeing to Senate amendment No. 1 to the bill (H. R. 9642) to authorize supplemental appropriations for emergency highway construction, with a view to increasing employment, with an amendment thereto, upon which it insisted; disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate No. 2 to the said bill, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it is my intention to make a motion to agree to the conference asked by the House. I understand the Senator from Connecticut wishes to offer an amendment to the House amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is correct, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I understand that the amendment is in order, so I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I offer the amendment, which I have prepared and sent to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Connecticut proposes to insert at the proper place the following:

That immediately after the passage of this act men of good character who are physically and otherwise qualified for the duties of a soldier, sailor, or marine, and who have had prior service in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, shall be permitted to enlist in the Regular Army, the Navy, or the Marine Corps of the United States until the maximum enlisted strength authorized by law has been attained.

SEC. 2. No enlisted man in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps shall be permitted during his term of enlistment to engage in such labor or be employed upon any project in such manner as to displace or prevent the employment of equally competent civilian labor.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of War may permit the discharge without purchase to any enlisted man who submits satisfactory evidence that upon discharge he is assured of immediate employment at a gainful occupation in civilian life.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I do not wish to discuss the amendment. Considering the stage at which the bill has arrived, I see no reason why the amendment should not be permitted to go to conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. REED. I have an amendment which I think every one would accept. A similar amendment was put in all the appropriation bills. It is the amendment requiring the use of American materials where possible. I would have offered it last night to the text of the bill, but there was no opportunity to do so. If I had then offered it, it would not have been in this substitute of the House. It is a short amendment, and, if the Senator will yield, I will ask that it be read.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the amendment be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Pennsylvania proposes to amend the House amendment as follows:

After section 304, insert a new section as follows:

"SEC. —. Unless the interest of the United States will not permit contractors, subcontractors, or other agents, paid from funds made available by any title in this act, shall purchase and supply, and shall certify to the head of the department or other Government establishment concerned that they have so purchased and supplied, for use in, on, or about the work or services for which such funds are made available, articles and materials grown, produced or manufactured in the United States, although such articles or materials may cost more, if such excess of cost be not unreasonable."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, this amendment occurs in all of our appropriation bills, and I think it ought to go into this bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, is the amendment sufficiently broad to prohibit the use of goods which have come into the United States, on which duty has been paid, and which may enter into the channels of trade and commerce and may be purchased in connection with some contract?

Mr. REED. No, Mr. President; except where American materials can be purchased on equal terms or at a very slight increase. It has not been construed, as it appears in the appropriation bills, to forbid conclusively the use of imported goods if there is any disposition on the part of the American producers to gouge the Government.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question, and give a concrete illustration, to determine the significance and implications of the amendment.

Suppose some glass to have been imported from Belgium, or from any other country, into the United States, and to have been purchased by the Senator from Pennsylvania, if he is a merchant. Let us suppose he sells it to some retailer, and the retailer sells it to some person who is engaged in making one of these improvements. Would the contractor be prohibited from purchasing that glass?

Mr. REED. On equal terms, the American-made goods would have the preference.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I am afraid we are getting into a complicated situation here, and I believe that we are making an error. We can not amend the House amendment and then disagree to it very well, and that is what is proposed. In order to get this bill to conference, it is necessary to move to disagree to the House amendment.

Mr. REED. We can amend it before disagreeing, can we not?

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas kindly explain just what did happen in the House?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. We have been trying, as the Senator knows, to find out.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The House passed, first, a House bill, then took up the Senate bill, which passed last night, which was itself a House bill technically, struck out all after the enacting clause and inserted the House bill.

Mr. WATSON. That is to say, what we call the road bill which the House sent to the Senate?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; the road bill was already here. That is the one we amended.

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. We took that up and amended it by inserting the provisions of the relief bill, with which the Senator from Indiana and other Senators are familiar. That bill passed last night. The House had already arranged to consider a House bill on the subject of relief, and, under a special rule, proceeded to pass the House bill, then took up the Senate bill which was passed last night, struck out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill, and inserted the House bill. The motion I am about to make is to disagree to the House amendment to the Senate amendment, and to agree to the conference asked by the House. I am wondering whether that motion would be in order after the Senate agrees to amendments to the House amendment which it proposes to disagree to after having amended it. I inquire of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the rule, if amendments are made, the Senate would have to insist upon its amendments and ask for a conference with the House, and appoint conferees. The Senate would have to insist upon its amendment to the amendment of the House.

Mr. WATSON. Do I understand that precludes the possibility of amendment, then?

Mr. REED. No; if we amend, as the Chair has just ruled, then we say that we insist upon our amendment, and ask a conference with the House, and when they agree, the conference is in existence.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What will be in conference?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate amendment, the House amendment to the Senate amendment, and the Senate amendment to the House amendment would all three be in conference.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well. With that view of the matter, I shall proceed.

Of course, under the rule of the Senate, amendments may be proposed here to an indefinite number. That is one of the difficulties of the parliamentary situation. The matter could have been disposed of in a much quicker way, but I see nothing else to do but to proceed with this motion. The rules of the Senate give priority to a motion to amend a House amendment, so that I want the Senate to understand that the proceeding by which these amendments are being considered is not by unanimous consent, it is by right, under the rule of the Senate.

Mr. REED. The Senator is exactly right, I think.

Now, just one word more, Mr. President. I have submitted this amendment to the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], and I understand that it meets with his approval. I now offer the amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I want to take the floor in my own right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield the floor?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If the Senator from Texas wishes to discuss the amendment, I will yield the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, as far as the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania is concerned, I would not ordinarily have any objection to it; but I have no confidence in the good faith or the fairness with which the administration would administer it. The Senator from Pennsylvania was instrumental the other day in amending the Post Office and Treasury Departments appropriation bill, and forthwith the Post Office Department violated every bit of the spirit of that amendment. I am wondering whether the Senator from Pennsylvania has any information as to why the Post Office Department, in the case of the Ludlow Manufacturing Co., of Boston, reversed its former action and bought jute produced in India as against cotton produced in the United States.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I had no personal knowledge of that matter until after the decision was made. I understand that my office did have something to do with it; that it had at least some correspondence on it. Whether they went beyond that I have not asked. I can, in a moment or two, find out. But from what I have heard of the action of the department, I am inclined to think that it scarcely was in compliance with the intent of Congress. If I had any share in the result, I should not be particularly proud, as I now understand the facts.

Mr. CONNALLY. Whatever activity the Senator's office had was in behalf of cotton, was it?

Mr. REED. No; it was in behalf of jute, I am told.

Mr. CONNALLY. I hope the Senator will withdraw his influence with the department and let the department act unhampered.

Mr. REED. I have not had a chance to study the matter as much as I am going to look into it, but I agree with the feeling of the Senator that articles of American growth, as well as American manufacture, ought to be given preference, other things being equal.

Mr. CONNALLY. I want to say to the Senator that I am undertaking to challenge the right of the Post Office Department to thus defy the will of the Congress, and I have taken it up with the Comptroller General. I shall gladly enlist the aid of the Senator from Pennsylvania, since he shows so much interest in the matter, by offering another amendment, which probably will involve other articles, probably not produced in my State, but in the United States, and possibly some in the Senator's State.

Mr. REED. In the principle involved I am in full agreement with the Senator. We want to put Americans to work, and there is no better way of doing that than by providing that we shall use American materials in the spending of the money appropriated by the Congress.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania feel that he is quite consistent when, at the time we had the act before us in such a shape that it would be necessary for the Government to give preference in purchases to articles of domestic raw materials and manufacture, he amended by inserting the word " or " in place of " and " and then induced the Post Office Department to violate the spirit of the act?

Mr. REED. I have told the Senator the exact facts, that I had no personal knowledge that the question was pending.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator's office did.

Mr. REED. My office did, and I am going to stand by what the office did, and I am going to take whatever blame there may be for the action taken.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I would like to say to the Senator that the executive assistant of the Postmaster General advised me that the construction placed upon the language of the post office bill was the construction of the Senator from Pennsylvania. Subsequently I spoke to the Senator from Pennsylvania about it, and he informed me that his secretary must have taken the matter up. I would like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania, in view of his statement now, whether he will advise the Postmaster General of what he has stated here, that he does not exactly approve the construction, because the Postmaster General decided in favor of giving a contract for twine made of jute, produced, not in the United States, but out of the United States, because of his belief that the construction placed upon it by the department was the construction of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED. My information on this subject has come almost exclusively from the Senator from South Carolina. I do not like the result, but I want to investigate the facts before the committee acts definitely.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I have a letter from the Postmaster General covering the very matter that has been referred to. I wrote him a letter after the Senator made his statement on the floor of the Senate the other day, and asked the Postmaster General to give me a statement in regard to it. It is several pages long. I do not think I should take the time of the Senate to read it. Senators who are interested may read the letter. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD. The Postmaster General defends his action upon the construction which he gives to the language that was put in the bill as it finally passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., July 13, 1932.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The receipt is acknowledged of your letter of July 12, asking for the department's comment on the statement made on July 9 by Senator CONNALLY, as reported on page 15384 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date, relating to a contract which the department has awarded to the Ludlow Sales Corporation, of Boston, Mass., for jute twine.

In the form in which it passed the House of Representatives, the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1933 included the following provision:

"SEC. 6. In the expenditure of appropriations in this act or appropriations hereafter made, the Secretary of the Treasury in the case of the Treasury Department, and the Postmaster General in the case of the Post Office Department, shall, unless in his discretion the interest of the Government will not permit, purchase, or contract for, within the limits of the United States, only articles of the growth, production, or manufacture of the United States, notwithstanding that such articles of the growth, production, or manufacture of the United States may cost more, if such excess of cost be not unreasonable."

Although this bill passed the House of Representatives on March 5, 1932, it was not reported to the Senate until June 21. Meantime, on April 6, the department advertised its requirements for twine for the first six months of the fiscal year 1933, specifying that either cotton or jute would be acceptable and that in making an award of contract the department would take into consideration the cost of transportation and yardage per pound of the twine, as reported by the Bureau of Standards on tests of the bid samples submitted. Bids were opened on May 5. The low bidder was the Ludlow Sales Corporation, offering jute twine. The second low bidder was the Granite Falls Manufacturing Co., of Hickory, N. C., offering cotton twine. The two bids were as follows:

Bidder:	Price per million yards, freight included
Ludlow Sales Corporation	$115.84
Granite Falls Manufacturing Co	117.45

Having before it the provision pending in the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill dealing with the question of preference to domestic products, the department considered it advisable to postpone an award pending final action on the bill by Congress. The Granite Falls Co., in submitting its bid, had stipulated that its offer was subject to acceptance within two days. Since the decision had been reached that no award could properly be made prior to final action by Congress upon the appropriation bill, this bidder was afforded the opportunity to modify this stipulation, and its bid was permitted to stand until withdrawn. It was not withdrawn prior to the award of the contract.

In view of the pending legislation, the department had seen fit to require of each bidder a certificate regarding the origin of the twine offered. Both the Granite Falls Co. and the Ludlow Co. submitted certificates, phrased in the language of the appropriation bill as it passed the House, to the effect that the twine offered was "of the growth, production, or manufacture of the United States." At the time of the bid opening the question was thus before the department whether jute twine manufactured in the United States fell within the language of the House bill, and the department reached the conclusion that since the product offered by the Ludlow Co. was of the manufacture of the United States the product offered by the Granite Falls Co. would be entitled to no preference over it in the event the language carried in the House bill was agreed to by the Senate.

To be perfectly fair with all concerned, the attention of the Granite Falls Co. was called to this conclusion, and the company was advised that unless the language of the House bill were changed so as to make it clear and unmistakable that Congress intended that goods manufactured in the United States from imported raw materials were not entitled to the preference contemplated by section 6 of the bill the department would find it necessary to make the award to the Ludlow Co., and the suggestion was offered that the simplest way to clarify the language so as to leave no doubt that Congress intended cotton twine to be given a preference over jute twine manufactured in this country would be to substitute the word "and" for the word "or" where it occurs in the expression "articles of the growth, production, or manufacture of the United States." This suggestion was made also to numerous Senators and Members of Congress making inquiry of the department with relation to the pending award.

I have been informed that while the bill was pending before the Senate Committee on Appropriations representations were made accordingly to the committee by Senators MORRISON and BYRNES, and that the committee was persuaded by these Senators to change the word "or" to read "and" in accordance with the department's suggestion. However this may be, the bill when it was reported to the Senate on June 21 contained this change, and the department has had no doubt that the change was made for no other purpose than to require a preference to be given cotton twine as against jute twine, notwithstanding the fact that jute twine may be of the manufacture of the United States.

When the bill was under discussion by the Senate, the committee amendment was objected to by Senator REED, apparently without any particular reference to the question whether cotton twine was to be given preference over jute twine manufactured in this country, but for the obvious reason that under the phrasing involved in the committee amendment the question of preference would be raised in connection with a wide variety of articles manufactured in the United States from raw materials wholly or partly produced in foreign countries. Following a protracted discussion, the committee amendment was rejected and the language was left as it had stood in the House bill, requiring, with certain exceptions, that the Postmaster General contract for goods of the growth, production, or manufacture of the United States, and providing no preference whatever for goods entirely of domestic origin when in competition with goods of domestic manufacture from raw materials produced abroad.

It is true that the following additional sentence was added to the language of the House bill: "In giving effect to this section, special consideration shall be given to the domestic article where the raw material of which it is made is grown in the United States and the article itself is manufactured in the United States." This sentence, however, must be construed in conjunction with the sentence which precedes it in the law as finally passed, and, while there may be room for a difference of opinion concerning its exact significance, I believe that it means no more than that where an article entirely produced in this country is in competition with an article entirely produced abroad, the department shall give more particular consideration to the question of preference than in a case where an article manufactured in the United States from raw materials produced abroad is in competition with an imported article. After careful study of this language, and a full consideration of the discussion which occurred in the Senate on the subject, the department made the award to the Ludlow Sales Corporation.

I believe that you will agree that in this transaction the department showed every possible consideration to the Granite Falls Manufacturing Co. Not only did it permit that company to modify its proposal so that the company's interests might not be prejudiced by the delay in the enactment of the appropriation bill, but it made its position with reference to the construction to be placed upon the language of the bill perfectly clear to this bidder and to all interested Senators in ample time to permit an unequivocal expression of the desire and intention of Congress on the question whether a preference should be accorded an article manufactured in the United States from domestic raw materials when in competition with an article fabricated in this country from imported materials. In the absence of a plain and unambiguous provision of law on this question, it seems to me to be obvious that the department should not be expected to take action which would deprive the citizens of one section of our country of employment for the purpose of providing employment in another section of the country, particularly when to do so would add to the expenses of the Government which are borne by the taxpayers at large.

Yours very truly,

WALTER F. BROWN.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it is perfectly apparent that the course that is being taken here is involving the primary question and that great confusion is going to result. I believe that these amendments, not having been offered when the Senate was considering the bill yesterday and last night, should not be tacked on now and thus add to the confusion and the delay which inevitably would result. I believe that we ought to vote down further amendments. I believe that we ought to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut was agreed to and then vote down that amendment, send the bill to conference, get an agreement in conference, if possible, and get the bill to the President. It is perfectly apparent that if Senators insist, an indefinite number of amendments may be offered. Nothing is being accomplished by taking them to conference except to confuse the conferees and delay final action.

Mr. GORE. And make a Christmas tree out of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; or a shamble or jungle.

I am going to ask that the pending amendment be voted down. I am going to ask that the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut was agreed to be reconsidered, and I am also going to request that further amendments be not presented. I realize that it is a pretty bold request to make, but at the same time I shall press for that action in order that the bill may go to conference.

The bill has been before the Senate three times, at one time for more than a week. Ample opportunity was afforded for the presentation of any amendment that Senators might desire to consider. I feel that we ought not to put ourselves in the attitude, every time the bill comes before us, of trying to write a new bill. That is what occurs somewhere else, and it is what seemingly occurs here.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. REED. I sympathize fully with the Senator from Arkansas, because if we do put on these amendments here, then we will have to disagree afresh and ask a conference.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It will have to go back to the House.

Mr. REED. Yes; it will have to go back to the House to get them to agree to a conference, and before we have done we will have wasted a lot of time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The House might not agree to the conference.

Mr. REED. They might not. Furthermore, so far as the pending amendment is concerned, I am perfectly certain it will be within the jurisdiction of the conferees, if they think wise, to put it in the bill. It would not be beyond their power as conferees. Then, for two reasons, first, in order to clear up possible embarrassment at this juncture and, second, because I appreciate it is the orderly way to go about it, I am going to hand my amendment to the conferees when they are appointed and leave it to their good judgment. I shall withdraw it now and not offer it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania and I am going to ask the Senator from Connecticut to consent to a reconsideration of the vote by which his amendment was agreed to, and let it take the same course.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I do not believe it would be within the power of the conferees to put this matter in the bill as the Senator from Pennsylvania has stated he thinks would be the case in regard to his amendment. When I introduced the amendment the Senator from Arkansas said he had no objection to it being adopted and going to conference. Therefore I did not take any time to explain it, because I do not desire to take the time of the Senate unnecessarily. It was not my understanding that it would delay the matter at all.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It would make necessary the sending of the bill first to the House with a request for a conference on the part of the Senate and an agreement on the part of the House to the conference.

Mr. BINGHAM. The House has already requested a conference, as I understand it, and therefore it would not be necessary for the bill to go back to the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the amendment is adopted the bill will have to go back to the House.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I made that statement a moment ago and the Chair so ruled. In view of that fact, appreciating fully that the Senator from Connecticut may have the opportunity to test the sense of the Senate with his amendment in connection with other legislation, I am going to ask him again to consent to a reconsideration of the vote by which it was adopted and withdraw it, but if he can not do that I shall have to move a reconsideration.

Mr. BINGHAM. Of course the Senator will realize that I would like to get a vote on the amendment. The matter was brought to my attention to-day for the first time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. May I say to the Senator from Connecticut that I have had at least 50 amendments presented to me since last night with the request that I try to get them on this bill. I am sure the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and other Senators have had a similar experience, so that I think we must proceed to get the bill to conference. I hope the Senator from Connecticut will consent to that arrangement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection the vote whereby the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut was agreed to will be reconsidered and the question now is on his amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I shall submit, of course, to whatever decision the Senate makes. The matter was first brought to my attention this morning that here was a means whereby 200,000 veterans now unemployed might secure immediate employment and in a manner which would redound to the benefit of the national defense and of the United States. The amendment which I have proposed was taken from a bill introduced in the House of Representatives by Representative CURRY, of California, son of the former chairman of the Committee on Territories, who served——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Did the Senator say 200,000?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes; 200,000. I will explain how it occurred. The amendment provides that there may be enlisted——

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. GORE. I desire to inquire if the Senator has an estimate of the cost if 200,000 men should be enlisted?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes; and I shall come to that if the Senator will give me an opportunity.

The situation is this: On the statute books——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator turns away in apparent disgust.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have tried five times to explain the amendment and have been interrupted each time.

Mr. NORRIS. I had the floor and was trying to talk to the Senate, and I yielded for all of this discussion. I had not any idea it was going to take more than a moment, but 20 minutes have been devoted to it, so the Senator must not turn his back on me in disgust. If there is anybody who ought to be disgusted, I am the one; and yet I am cheerful and happy.

Mr. BINGHAM. I apologize to the Senator. I did not realize he had the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. I want an understanding. Of course, long ago I lost the floor. I do not believe the Senator wants to take me summarily off the floor, because I had not concluded my statement. I would like to have an understanding about how long the Senator is going to keep on, when we are going to quit, and whether we expect to do any other business after this matter is disposed of. I am not complaining, because I realize this is necessary. I am not making any complaint, but I want to know where I stand before we proceed further.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, there is already a unanimous-consent agreement to recess until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but when are we going to take the recess?

Mr. WATSON. When this bill is disposed of.

Mr. NORRIS. Then we are not to proceed further this evening?

Mr. WATSON. I did not think the Senator wanted to do so.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not.

Mr. WATSON. My understanding is there is a desire to have a brief executive session after the conference report shall have been disposed of.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. If the Senate had information enough to agree to the amendment once, has it not information enough to vote on it again right away without an extended explanation? Either it had information enough to agree to it before, or we have been doing business in a very unbusinesslike way.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, if I may begin again at the beginning, I shall try to make a brief explanation. There was brought to my attention only this morning—and that is the reason why the amendment was not offered before—a bill prepared by a Representative from California, Mr. CURRY, which would provide for the immediate employment of 200,000 able-bodied veterans. The way in which Mr. CURRY has worked it out—and I have adopted the language of his bill and introduced it as an amendment—I believe to be of great importance. There are on the statute books now provisions for a Regular Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of more than 200,000 enlisted strength in excess of that now in existence. In order to bring the Army up to the strength that is now provided for on the statute books, it would permit the enlistment of 155,000 privates for the Army, 55,000 enlisted men for the Navy, and 10,000 enlisted men for the Marine Corps, or a total of 220,000.

The amendment provides that only those who have formerly served in the Army or Navy or Marine Corps may apply for enlistment at this time. In other words, it provides for veterans. Under the bill itself, with its provision for construction projects, it will be many months before there can be a large number of men employed, and even then there can not be many men employed under its provisions. Here is a provision whereby, beginning to-morrow, or as soon as the bill is passed, there may be enlisted in the Army, for a period of one year, veterans of the World War who served with the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, to the number of about 200,000, who could well be enlisted and employed in the Army in regular training. It would add to the national defense. It would provide for 200,000 veterans their food, clothing, housing, drills, training, discipline, and $20 a month besides. It would cost about $100,000,000. It would provide immediate employment for the men.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, does the Senator mean $100,000,000 a year?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes; $100,000,000 a year; but it is intended that it should go on for only one year. It is intended to meet the present emergency. There are hundreds of thousands of veterans seeking employment. We have tried in this bill to furnish employment on various construction projects running into hundreds of millions of dollars. It will be some time before those projects can be started; but here is a provision which would take care of an enormous number of able-bodied veterans at once and give them food, clothing, shelter, and proper training, discipline, and a small amount of money per month.

I do not know of anything that we could do which would take care of the veterans better than this legislation which has been proposed, as I said, in the House by Mr. CURRY, and which I offer here as an amendment. Had it been shown to me before, I should have offered it before. I do not like to offer amendments at the last moment; as has been suggested, it is bad practice, and I would not do it had it not been that it was the first time it was called to my attention, or, so far as I know, to the attention of any Member of the Senate. I offer it in good faith as a means of providing immediate care for about 200,000 able-bodied veterans, and I hope no Senator will object to it. Let it go to conference. It seems to me to be a matter of vital importance which meets the situation in a way which nothing else, so far as I have heard of, could meet it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I do not intend to add anything to what I said a few moments ago. It is apparent that the acceptance of any amendment to the House amendment would compel the Senate to ask for a conference and require the House to grant one before further proceedings can be had on this bill. That would result in indefinite delay and might result in wrecking the bill. For that reason I am going to ask the Senate to vote down the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut to the amendment of the House.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, may we have the yeas and nays on the amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays are demanded. Is there a second?

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment to the House amendment was rejected.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House to Senate amendment numbered 1, that it insist upon its amendments 1 and 2, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I trust that the motion may be agreed to. We all understand that there must be relief legislation, and there is unanimity on the proposition. The House has passed the bill and the Senate has passed the bill, and now the opportunity is afforded for a conference and the presentation of a report that will consummate the entire relief situation, so far as it can be done by legislation.

I have never believed in reprisals as between the two Houses. I do not believe in making a statement that if the other House does not do that thing this House will not do this thing. I have regretted that conferees have not been appointed on the home loan bank bill, but that is a matter for the other House to determine and not this. There was some objection to the action of the House on the relief bill being presented in the Senate unless and until conferees should be appointed in the House on the home loan bank bill; but I was assured by the Speaker of the House, in the presence of a number of Senators, but a short time ago that within an hour he would entertain a request for unanimous consent to send the home loan bank bill to conference. That is all we can ask; with that I am quite content; and if objection is made, that is another proposition. It will then be necessary to proceed under the rules of the House to send the home loan bank bill to conference; but inasmuch as the Speaker has acceded to the request, nothing more can be asked on this side in that regard. Therefore, I trust that the motion of the Senator from Arkansas will be agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think it should be stated that the Speaker of the House announced that it had been his purpose to entertain a request for unanimous consent to send the bill to conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair appoints the following conferees——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, before the conferees are appointed I should like to be recognized for a statement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Late on Monday afternoon the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] introduced his amendment in the nature of a substitute, which was the relief bill which had been considered by the Banking and Currency Committee. On the following morning the Senate proceeded with the consideration of that bill, and therefore there was no time during the day for amendments made in the bill introduced by the Senator from New York to be printed. The Senate therefore was compelled to work with the copy which had been furnished following the introduction of the bill by the Senator from New York and was not in possession of any printed copy containing the amendments agreed to by the Committee on Banking and Currency.

I listened very attentively to the statement made by the Senator from New York and endeavored to make my copy conform to the changes which he suggested had been made. It is only fair to the Senator from New York to state that he was explaining the difference between the bill which he then offered and the one which had previously passed.

I make this preliminary statement, Mr. President, in order to draw to the attention of the Senate the fact that on page 9 of the bill introduced by the Senator from New York on July 11, beginning with line 3, there was this provision:

(b) The Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall submit monthly to the President and to the Senate and the House of Representatives (or the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, if those bodies are not in session) a report of its activities and expenditures under this section and under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, together with a statement showing the names of the borrowers to whom loans and advances were made, and the amount involved in each case.

I assumed, Mr. President, and upon consultation with a large number of Senators to-day I find that other Senators who were referring to this printed copy of the bill assumed that that was the language which was adopted by the Senate, whereas, as a matter of fact, in the committee on yesterday morning the words "and under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act" were stricken out. So the monthly report provided for in the bill as passed by the Senate relates only to the section mentioned in the relief bill.

I make that statement, Mr. President, because there are a number of Senators on the floor who had they been aware of the fact that that language had been stricken out would have at the proper time offered an amendment to reinsert it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The language will be in conference, because it is in the House bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I was about to draw the attention of the Senate to the fact that the House has adopted identically the same language as contained in the bill when it was introduced by the Senator from New York on Monday; and I express the hope, Mr. President, that the Senate conferees about to be appointed when they come to consider this section of the bill will take into consideration the fact that a great many Senators assumed that language identical with that in the House bill was in the bill when it passed the Senate and that they had, under all circumstances, a perfect right to assume that such was the case.

Mr. WAGNER. As stated by the Senator, in the explanation I made at the time I was setting forth the differences between the bill as it passed and the amendment I was introducing. However, I think I should have called attention to the fact that there was a difference between the proposed amendment of the night before and the amendment which I actually offered. That was a clear inadvertence, but the matter now will be before the conferees for consideration.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I do not want by my silence to seem to concur in the suggestion made by the able Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] that the Senate conferees should feel a considerable latitude in yielding on the question of publicity for bank loans heretofore made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The Senator's statement of the chronology and the fact is scrupulously accurate; but it may equally be said that if the bill had not been in the form that it was submitted to the Senate a motion would have been made to strike out the provision for publicity, and the conferees should have that in mind as well as the situation submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin. In my judgment, publicity in respect to this matter would be a violation of the entire fiduciary character of the whole transaction and would defeat all the useful purposes which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation serves.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair announces the appointment of the following conferees on the part of the Senate: The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

FANEUIL HALL ADDRESS OF THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a speech delivered by the Hon. Ogden L. Mills, Secretary of the Treasury, at Faneuil Hall, Boston, on the 11th of July.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

My time being limited, I propose to confine my remarks this evening to a discussion of some of the economic questions presented in the speech of acceptance of the candidate and in the platform of the Democratic Party. Later I hope to discuss Republican principles and policies. To-night we are just taking off some of the trimmings and tin foil to get at the facts.

The basis of the Democratic appeal is now clearly outlined. They propose to place the blame for the depression on the present administration; they promise, if returned to power, that, as the candidate exclaimed, "Happy days will come again." They lay claim to being the party of liberalism and progress.

Now, the depression began shortly after President Hoover had taken office. Even before that time, it was already under way in many countries. Resulting, as it did, from the combined effects of so many economic forces so deep-seated and so violent as to defy arrest anywhere and everywhere, it eventually swept the world.

While making all allowances for the temptation to a party out of power to make full use of such an argument, to charge any government anywhere with the responsibility for such a world disaster is sheer nonsense.

In so far as the past is concerned, the real question for the American people to decide is: Has the administration, in the face of this world-wide calamity, conducted the affairs of government with that judgment and skill which would mitigate the effects of the depression and lay a foundation for recovery? It can be demonstrated beyond question that it has. I challenge Governor Roosevelt, instead of indulging in vague and unsupported attacks, to state specifically what the present administration has failed to do or has done in this emergency that is open to fair criticism, and what steps he would have taken that have not been taken to meet the successive forces that have threatened to undermine and to destroy our economic structure and to bring complete disaster to our people.

What his party, if in power, would have done and would do, is unmistakably indicated by the record of the Democratic House of Representatives under the leadership of the Democratic candidate for the Vice Presidency.

Before discussing economic questions, may I devote a minute or two to the much-abused term "liberalism"? What justifies the application of the term "liberal" to either a candidate or a party? Certainly not mere breast-beating and loud claim to the title. There must be a moral quality in true liberalism, without which it becomes an empty name. There must be real convictions and a definite program, unless it is to melt away into mere words.

I can not detect evidence of true liberalism in either the Democratic candidate or in the Democratic Party. Appeal to discontent and a program designed to catch votes can not be confused with a bold leadership that stakes its all in a battle for the triumph of deep-seated principles. In the face of the shocking system of government existing in New York City, which the great Democratic paper, the New York Times, describes as one which "thrives at the expense of justice to the poor and fair dealing to the millions that can not boast the acquaintance of a district leader"—and, remember, I am not talking about mere individual delinquencies and failures, but of a system—Governor Roosevelt's failure for three years to use the power of his great office to clean up his own party, and his failure to assert his moral leadership, bar him definitely—honest, amiable, and attractive gentleman that he is—from spiritual kinship with such liberal statesmen as Woodrow Wilson or Theodore Roosevelt or that independent and rugged Democrat, Grover Cleveland.

All parties claim to be liberal and progressive, and, in so far as their aspirations are concerned, honestly are, for the right-thinking men and women that compose them desire to see a correction of existing evils and a steady improvement in opportunities to all men for advancement. It is not too much to say that all Americans, Democrats and Republicans alike, share a common ideal in their conception of what American life holds in the way of promise.

The difference, then, is not one of purpose, but of method. The sharp line of demarcation is that under the stress and pressure of existing conditions the Democrats seem willing to try anything, whereas the Republicans are firm in their belief that a violation of well-established, sound, economic principles will not only defeat the purpose of the remedial measures proposed, but will, in fact, result in even greater disaster.

The consistent, comprehensive program carried out by the administration has been lacking in neither boldness nor originality, but it presents a complete contrast to the program of legislation passed by a Democratic House of Representatives under the leadership of Speaker GARNER, candidate for the Vice Presidency.

Measures actually passed by the Democratic House of Representatives provide for: The printing and issuance of fiat currency; the immediate payment of the bonus; an appropriation of over a billion dollars for post offices, rivers and harbors, roads, etc., these two items alone aggregating over $3,000,000,000; the guaranty of bank deposits; instructions to the Secretary of the Treasury and Federal Reserve Board to manipulate commodity prices; the unbalancing of a Budget balanced by great effort; and putting the Government into the general commercial banking business on a huge scale.

All were doubtless well-meaning remedial efforts. Yet they would bring ruin and disaster, running counter, as they do, to sound economic and financial principles, and being destructive, as they are, of the confidence so badly needed throughout the country.

Governor Roosevelt takes exception to this very Republican insistence on adherence to sound economic principles. He said sarcastically in his speech of acceptance: "Our Republican leaders tell us economic laws—sacred, inviolable, unchangeable—that these laws cause panics which no one could prevent. But while they prate of economic laws men and women are starving. We must lay hold of the fact that economic laws are not made by nature. They are made by human beings."

If by the words, "made by human beings," the governor means to express the belief that economic laws are the result of a conscious, deliberate purpose, he is entirely mistaken. They are, however, based in large measure on human nature, of which, if I may quote Burke, "reason is but a part, and by no means a preponderant one." From which it follows that we can not run counter to them without running counter to human nature itself.

Why do we resist the printing of fiat currency? Not simply because it offers no solution, or because a limited amount would necessarily be harmful, but because all experience demonstrates that once the printing presses are started, human nature being what it is, there is no stopping them short of disaster.

Why did we fight for many long months to establish the principle of a balanced Budget? Not because denial of that principle means necessarily the immediate impairment, but, human nature being what it is, the ultimate destruction of the public credit.

Here, then, is the first great line of cleavage between the Democratic and Republican Parties. The Democratic House of Representatives, speaking with greater authority for the Democratic Party than any party convention can, has demonstrated its willingness to disregard economic law and sound financial principles. The Democratic candidate scoffs at them. By what compass or chart, I wonder, do they propose to direct the economic life of the Nation in these perilous times?

Taking up now the few definite suggestions to be found in this long speech, the governor points out that credits "issued in the form of bonds and mortgages, Government bonds, bonds of all kinds" are all interrelated. He then asks, "Why has Washington failed to understand that all of these groups * * * must be considered together; that each and every one of them is dependent on every other; each and every one of them affecting the whole financial fabric?" "Statesmanship and vision," he says, "require relief to all at the same time."

Does the governor think he is making an original discovery? Where has he been these many months? Doesn't he know that at the President's suggestion the Congress has provided additional capital for the Federal land banks, and made provision through the Reconstruction Corporation for additional credit to joint stock land banks, intermediate credit banks, and livestock loan companies, all in the interest of strengthening agricultural credit? Doesn't he know that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been created with $2,000,000,000 of available funds to underpin the whole credit structure of the Nation by providing necessary credit for banks, for insurance companies, for mortgage companies, for building and loan associations, and for the railroads, whose securities are held by the billion by the great fiduciary institutions of the country, to whom are intrusted the savings of the Nation? Doesn't he know that the President has recommended the creation of home loan discount banks to take care of the credit needs of home builders and home owners?

Of all the credit groups that he mentions, the only ones that haven't been provided for by the Federal Government are the States and municipalities. Are we to understand from his criticism that he would make the credit of the United States Government available to 16,000 municipalities? If so, I say to him that if he ever gets the opportunity to carry out that purpose he will undermine the credit of the United States Government itself.

Governor Roosevelt states that Republican tariff legislation has erected an impregnable barbed-wire entanglement around our borders, and that he accepts the admirable tariff statement in the platform, adding that "it would protect American business and American labor." The Democratic platform promises "a competitive tariff for revenue," which, if we add the Governor's words, would read: "A competitive tariff for revenue to protect American business and American labor." If anyone can tell me what sort of a tariff this means, I shall heartily welcome an explanation.

During the Democratic convention they decried ad infinitum iniquities of the Smoot-Hawley tariff, and the Democratic keynoter, Senator BARKLEY, fairly spread himself on this subject. But not once was there mention of the tariff of 1932, which imposed specific rates equivalent to anywhere from 16 to 61 per cent ad valorem duties on crude petroleum, fuel and gas oil, gasoline, paraffin, coal, lumber, and copper. A tariff which, by the way, the distinguished keynoter from Kentucky worked and voted for, as did the permanent chairman, Senator WALSH. When Governor Roosevelt goes to Texas, Kansas, and Oklahoma and condemns the protective tariff on oil; when he goes to Kentucky and condemns the tariff on coal; when he goes to Arizona, Utah, and Montana and condemns the 61 per cent tariff on copper; when he goes to Oregon and Washington and condemns the protective tariff on lumber, I will believe in the sincerity of his criticisms of barbed-wire entanglements.

I don't know any subject in American political life that is responsible for more buncombe than the tariff controversy. Let this be said in favor of the Republican Party: It has stood steadfastly and still stands by the protective principle, and can without violation of policy apply this principle to natural resources; whereas our Democratic brethren, of whom Senator BARKLEY is a typical example, attack the principle of protection, but inevitably logroll and vote for the protection of every article produced in their States. This may be the reason why they are so strongly opposed to placing in an independent board the authority to make adjustments in the light of ascertained facts without congressional interference. They don't want scientific tariff-making. They want logrolling.

Governor Roosevelt, in spite of past experiences, would abandon our well-established policy of treating all nations alike under the most-favored nation clause and enter into a series of bargaining tariffs according to the European practice. He would invite representatives of foreign nations to sit around a table as friends and discuss these problems, we on one side of the table, and the rest of the world, hungry for the American market, on the other. The American people will want to know whether he proposes to consult foreigners as to what the rates of an American tariff law are to be. If so, we take definite issue with him, for the Republican Party holds that the rates in our tariff laws are a purely domestic question to be determined by the Congress of the United States without consultation with foreign governments.

In any event, is this the time to make our reduced purchasing power fully available to foreign manufacturers, rather than to preserve it in the interest of our own unemployed?

In so far as the farmer is concerned, the Governor makes the original discovery that the prosperity of this country is dependent upon a prosperous agricultural population. I had supposed that this was a self-evident, universally recognized economic fact. Other than his suggestion that interest rates on farm mortgages should be reduced, without saying how it is to be done, I find nothing in his program which does not constitute a mere indorsement in principle of what has and is now being done, and nothing to indicate how he would proceed to carry out these principles.

Both Governor Roosevelt and the Democratic platform pledge themselves to drastic economy and an immediate program to abolish useless offices and to consolidate bureaus and subdivisions of government. If the American people have any sense of humor left, they must have had a laugh out of this. What does the record show? Under Governor Roosevelt, the already swollen expenditures of the State of New York increased from 1929 to 1931 by more than one-third. The Democrats of the House voted 194 to 10 for Speaker GARNER's pork-barrel measure with its 60 closely printed pages of specifically named post offices. They whittled an economy bill from $150,000,000 to a bare $30,000,000. They then proceeded to pass two measures that would have involved an expenditure of over $3,000,000,000. They declined to give the President the necessary authority to abolish useless bureaus and consolidate others. In the face of this record, what is their economy promise worth?

The Democratic platform and the Governor declare themselves in favor "of a sound currency to be preserved at all hazards." Yet the Democrats in the House of Representatives within the last two months voted 152 to 50 to start the printing presses going and to issue fiat currency, and voted 172 to 3 to instruct the Federal reserve system and the Secretary of the Treasury to manipulate commodity prices.

The Democratic platform and the Democratic candidate pledge themselves to the maintenance of the national credit by a Federal Budget annually balanced. Yet the Democratic House of Representatives has already voted to unbalance it by over $3,000,000,000 this fiscal year, and within the last four days the House has passed a bill providing for $322,000,000 of expenditures with no revenue to cover them.

Such promises must be made on the assumption that the American people either have no memory or no humor.

Finally, we come to relief, as to which we would have thought the Democratic candidate had definite ideas and definite remedies. But we find that, aside from the fact that he would plant trees where his running mate would plant post offices, all Governor Roosevelt has to say is that he favors the use of certain types of public works and the issuance of bonds. But he is not very sure, for the works are, "in so far as possible (whatever that may mean) to be self-sustaining if they are to be financed by the issuing of bonds," and no economic end is served "if we merely build without building for a necessary purpose."

The Governor favors shortening the working day and the working week, thus indirectly—though, of course, without giving him any credit—indorsing the lead taken by the President in urging furloughs rather than pay cuts in the Federal service.

It is apparent that in so far as relief is concerned the Governor has no program at all. And yet when he spoke there were three definite programs before the Congress, any one of which he might have accepted as his own. Here is one of the great problems of the day—a problem running deep into our very structure of Government and involving not only immediate difficulties, but having far-reaching effect on the future policies of our country; a problem in which it might be supposed a true liberal would have been more intensely interested than any other. And yet in this, the most important speech which he will make, for it is one in which he outlined his creed, with all of the space which he found for the criticism, and abuse of his opponents, he found none for a program of unemployment and destitution relief.

To the casual listener, the program and speech were appealing, but when we subject them to the acid test of careful analysis, except for that part of the program which is indistinguishable from ours, they dissolve into vague aspirations, commonplace generalities, and a few promises that had already been broken by his party in Congress even before they were made.

I do not happen to be one of those who believe that Government, whoever may control it, is the possessor of a magic wand, the mere waving of which will bring back normal times. But it is undeniable that under the present critical conditions the part played by Government is more vital than ever, and that the wise management of public affairs, not only in the meeting of emergencies but in the protection of fundamental principles of government and of those conditions essential to recovery, is of supreme importance to the Nation. What I mean is exemplified by the actions taken by the President to meet from time to time new problems arising out of the various phases of the depression, such as the cushioning of the earlier stages of the depression by securing an agreement between industry and labor for the maintenance of wages and by the stimulation of construction programs; the nation-wide organization to relieve the distress that was brought into being; the suspension of intergovernmental debts for one year with a view to preventing the economic collapse of Central Europe; the creation of the National Credit Corporation; the bringing into being of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; the mobilizing of the resources of the Federal reserve system so as to make them more effective; and above all, the maintenance of the national credit in an impregnable position through sound public financial policy; and his unyielding resistance to those measures prompted by expediency that would have undermined American traditions and principles of government. These are but illustrations, yet they serve to emphasize the overwhelming necessity of assuring wise and experienced leadership during a period when we may be faced with events that are literally unforeseeable.

In my opinion, no man living has the qualifications for the task equal to the qualifications of President Hoover. Himself a veteran in Government service, he is the leader of a seasoned organization, which for three years has been waging on many fronts the battle against depression. Say what you will about us, we are an experienced force, and while under the irresistible pressure of circumstances we have had to give ground, we have preserved intact the essential integrity of the economic fabric of the country and maintained the principles upon which the American form of government rests. Is this the time, at the very peak of the struggle, to order the veterans to the rear and to put raw recruits in charge? I think not.

APPOINTMENT OF MR. GARDNER COWLES TO RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION BOARD

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Chicago Tribune of July 12, 1932, entitled "A Sound Appointment," referring to the appointment of Mr. Gardner Cowles, of Des Moines, Iowa, to the Board of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A SOUND APPOINTMENT

The appointment of Mr. Gardner Cowles, of Des Moines, to the board of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation met with prompt confirmation from the Senate, as it should have. As a banker, Mr. Cowles has had wide experience in financial affairs, particularly as they touch the farmers of the Corn Belt. Many men might undertake to speak for the farmer, but few are as well equipped as Mr. Cowles is to state the farmers' claims for relief in language which will be intelligible to men whose training has been largely financial.

Mr. Cowles's principal qualification for the post, however, is his long experience as a newspaper publisher. He knows conditions in the Central States as no man whose viewpoint is merely that of a banker can know them. He knows people as well as balance sheets and the humble people among his subscribers as well as the wealthier clients of the banks. When people are clamoring for relief the instinct of the banker is to say "No," and the instinct of the publisher, aware as he is of the difficulties under which his people are laboring, is to say "yes." Coming to his high office with training in both fields, Mr. Cowles may be counted upon to say, "Let's see what can be done for this bank and its depositors without too great a sacrifice of the principles of sound finance."

That is the attitude which led to the creation of the Reconstruction Corporation and which should determine its policies. Mr. Cowles's appointment is an assurance that the resources of the corporation will be lent where they will do the most good without placing an undue risk upon the taxpayers.

DUMPING OF FOREIGN OIL AND GASOLINE

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit a Senate resolution and ask for its present consideration. I am sure it will take no time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 274), as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission be directed to complete at the earliest practicable date its final report in relation to the dumping or alleged dumping of foreign oil and gasoline, particularly Russian oil in the city of Detroit, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. GORE. In connection with the resolution I ask to have printed in the RECORD a statement prepared by the Independent Petroleum Association of America as to the situation in Detroit.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

EFFECTS OF IMPORTED GASOLINE ON DETROIT MARKET

Detroit is the perfect illustration of the way in which imported petroleum products prepare the way for an effective oil monopoly, break independent wholesalers, herd independent retailers into the camp of the major oil companies, lower wage scales, divert trade from community retail stores to downtown city centers, promote bankruptcies, multiply the lists of tax delinquents, load banks with frozen assets in the form of notes of distressed oil dealers and merchants, and pave the way for the ultimate complete domination of the trade in an essential commodity with the eventual price increases to the consumer.

The effect of this disaster is not limited to the city of Detroit. It affects the whole State. It involves lines of industry utterly unrelated to the oil business. It reaches out and touches States on the Pacific coast and on the Gulf of Mexico. Through its effect on the independent petroleum production of the Nation, it retards our economic recovery. It even threatens to intensify the current depression by decreasing the general purchasing power when increased consumption and an outlet for our manufactured products is vitally necessary.

How far this will spread no one can tell. What is happening to-day in Detroit can and may happen anywhere.

Whether the major oil companies are or are not behind this situation is not of primary importance. That they profit by it is self-evident. As rapidly as independent distributors are driven to the wall through the hopeless competition with the cheap imported gasoline, the major companies sign them up on long-term "100 per cent contracts," by which they are bound to handle none but the products of the major companies.

Laws are ineffective in meeting the situation, evidently. Detroit city authorities, county prosecutors, the Michigan State government, the State utilities commission, the Federal district attorney, the Federal Trade Commission have all been invoked in vain. The city endeavored to prevent the construction of a 3,000,000-gallon gasoline-storage tank on the Detroit River just west of the Grand Boulevard. It failed. Just why it failed is an interesting story—if one-tenth of the prevalent stories are true.

Michigan has a law that exactly covers the existing situation. It imposes heavy penalties on those guilty of unfair price discrimination in the traffic in petroleum products. It has been effective, nominally, since August 14, 1913. The United States Government has the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act. Both have long been on the statute books. Each is intended to meet situations such as those prevailing in Detroit. The Federal Trade Commission has broad powers. It has been requested to withdraw approval of the so-called National Code of Practices and to refuse approval of any new code which does not contain a clause declaring unfair the "100 per cent contracts" by which major oil companies gather in the independent retailers as fast as competition with foreign oil importers ruins them. No action has been taken under any of these measures. Repeated investigations have been made. Files of evidence have been gathered. Meanwhile the situation grows steadily more acute while the great oil-monopoly group add to their number of scalps taken.

Last year a Detroit dealer made a contract with Steaua Romana, a Rumanian concern, and began importing gasoline from Rumania, The original source of this gasoline is in dispute. It is commonly believed in Detroit that the gasoline is of Soviet origin. Whether this be true or not, color is loaned to the rumor by the earlier contract made directly with the Amtorg, under which the first shipment of gasoline was started to Detroit but which was held up by the Canadian authorities and denied access to the Detroit port. That cargo was sold to a New York firm and did not enter the market at Detroit. The contract with Steaua Romana followed. Under it shiploads of gasoline have been received by this dealer, arriving at the port of Baltimore in the winter for rail shipment to Detroit, and coming through the Lakes and the Detroit River by barges in the warm weather. The latest cargo, consisting of 3,800,000 gallons, is scheduled to reach Detroit the latter part of June.

The price of this gasoline, Soviet or Rumanian, was far below the American cost of production. On one cargo, including delivery at the port of Baltimore, it amounted to only 1.96 cents per gallon. At the usual freight rate of 1.90, the cost of this gasoline laid down at Detroit would be 3.86 cents. With the addition of the State tax of 3 cents, the gross cost of this gasoline per gallon to this importer-distributor was 6.86 cents. He inaugurated a new low price at the stations he controlled, approximately 4 cents per gallon below what is considered the normal price structure for Detroit. This imported gasoline was put on sale at 7 gallons for 95 cents, or about 12.05 cents per gallon, giving him a gross profit of 5.19 cents.

It was impossible for those handling American gasoline to compete with this imported gasoline except at a loss. The independent group were paying the market price of 5.75 cents per gallon, with 3.82 cents freight from Oklahoma fields. This, with the 3 cents State tax, made their actual costs 12.57 cents per gallon, or just ½ cent more than the selling price established for the foreign product, ignoring such details as rental, local taxation, labor costs, allowances for waste, evaporation, etc. It was possible for them to obtain some gasoline at 1 cent lower than the Oklahoma price, but neither the quantities obtainable nor the uncertainty of continuous delivery made this dependable as a basis for competitive marketing.

The imported gasoline quickly took possession of the Detroit trade. Assuming that the situation was temporary and that conditions would adjust themselves normally as soon as this shipment had been sold, other dealers cut prices and sold at a loss in the endeavor to hold their trade. The number of stations controlled by the importer-distributor of the foreign gasoline increased and his sales mounted until they constituted approximately 20 per cent of the total sales in the Detroit area.

The major oil companies, themselves importers of foreign oil, were not slow to recognize the ready-made opportunity created by this situation. The independent retailers were unable to obtain supplies at any price comparable to that enjoyed by the new controlling force in the Detroit gasoline trade. They quickly lost whatever financial reserves they possessed in the vain attempt at competition. There was practically no general market at all in the Detroit area for domestic gasoline, while the effect of this competition was felt for many miles outside the city, customers coming from remote sections to fill their tanks and their reserve cans with the foreign product while their home gasoline stations stood idle.

There had been over a score of independent Michigan refiners when the competition with this foreign gas began. These steadily closed up or were taken over by the major companies as their outlets to the retail market vanished. Out of 22 independent wholesalers, only 2 survived. Sixty per cent of Detroit's gasoline stations were owned by their managers. With the disappearance of the wholesalers these were left without sources of supply except at prices above the retail selling price established by the foreign gasoline.

The representatives of the major companies began to collect the spoils of the war. Agents visited the independent stations and offered a long-term contract by which the station would handle exclusively the products of the major company, which proposed to meet the competition established by the foreign oil by shutting in this low-price section by a zone within which it would sell at a low cost to the station representatives, assuming the loss itself in order to meet the competition which was supposed to be purely temporary, while outside this low-price zone, which was to include the city of Detroit, higher-price zones were to be established, in which all the stations were to sell at a uniformly higher price. The sales price of gasoline to the stations outside Detroit was to be higher in order to reimburse the major companies for the losses sustained in meeting the foreign-oil prices in the city.

This zoning proposal was not novel. It has been essayed, unsuccessfully, several times. The State law made its operation difficult if not hazardous. Act 125, 1913, contains these two significant sections:

"An act to prevent unfair commercial discrimination between different localities for the purpose of ruining the business of a competitor:

"The people of the State of Michigan enact:

"No. 16683—Unfair discrimination; acts deemed, unlawfulness. (Sec. 1.)

"Any person, firm, or company, association or corporation, foreign or domestic, doing business in the State, and engaged in the production, manufacture, or distribution of any petroleum products, that shall intentionally, for the purpose of destroying the business of a competitor in any locality, discriminate between different sections, communities, or cities of this State, by selling such commodity at a lower rate in one (1) section, community or city, than is charged for said commodity by said party in another section, community, or city, after making due allowance for the difference, if any, in the grade or quality and in the actual cost of transportation from the point of production, if a raw product, or from the point of manufacture, if a manufactured product, shall be deemed guilty of unfair discrimination, which is hereby prohibited and declared unlawful.

"No. 16684—Penalty—Section 2. Any person, firm, company, association, or corporation violating any of the provisions of the preceding section, and any officer, agent, or receiver of any firm, company, association, or corporation, or any member of the same, or any individual found guilty of a violation thereof, shall be fined not less than five thousand ($5,000) dollars or be imprisoned in the county jail not to exceed one year or suffer both penalties."

The new gasoline situation in Detroit promised better success in the attempt to create the proposed zones. Since the only apparent alternative was to close down as soon as their cash reserves were exhausted in the price-cutting war, independent-station owners began to sign up on the "100 per cent contracts" offered by the major companies and the new scales of prices were declared in effect. Zone A, including the central part of the city of Detroit, had, as its set price, when the scheme was put in operation, eight gallons of gasoline for $1. Zone B, surrounding Zone A, had a price of 1 cent per gallon higher. Zone C had an advance of a cent and a half over Zone B. Zone D was a cent above Zone C, while the sections outside Zone D were to pay from a half cent to a cent more than in Zone D.

Neither these terms nor the "100 per cent contract" were accepted willingly by the independent stations' owners. They foresaw the consequences. As soon as the new zones and the stairway of prices were announced, protests went up. Auto users made complaints. They complained to station managers, to business associations, to State or county prosecutors, to the Federal authorities. They complained to and through the newspapers. Their complaints were futile. The State law seemed clear enough, but the word "intentionally," while essential to make the statute good law, was also a stumbling block. The ostensible "intent" of the zoning program was not to destroy a competitor but to enable the general gasoline distributors to meet the destructive competition of the cheap foreign gas by establishing higher prices for the outer sections, the excess rates charged in these districts providing the funds to meet the "less-than cost" sales in the Detroit area.

Associations of the retailers took up their difficulties with the major companies. In Oakland County, for illustration, many affidavits were presented from retailers showing the effect of the higher zone prices on their trade. The following quotations from these affidavits show the situation which developed:

Stephen P. Collier, Woodward Avenue and Square Lake Road, lost 90 per cent of his trade; 50 per cent of his regular customers drove out of his station without buying when they learned of the higher price, while the other 50 per cent bought only from 1 to 3 gallons in order to get them to the nearby lower-priced zone.

M. F. Lokinski, 806 Saginaw Street, Pontiac, lost 70 per cent of his trade; 450 customers driving out without buying, while 75 bought only 1 to 3 gallons.

G. H. Wilderson, 849 Baldwin Avenue, Pontiac, lost 85 per cent of his trade.

Jacob Ernst, 830 South Woodward, Pontiac, lost 60 per cent.

Loda G. Lewis, Elizabeth Lake Road, Pontiac, lost 75 per cent.

The Cousins Auto Service, Keego Harbor, lost 65 per cent.

William G. Eisenrath, Commerce, lost 78 per cent.

These decreases occurred at the very time that past records of these stations showed a normal seasonal increase of 35 per cent in gasoline sales.

These petitions were sent to the major oil companies by the committee appointed by the Oakland County dealers urging their consideration of the plight of the dealers.

In other sections petitions were drawn up or resolutions were adopted by the gasoline dealers pointing out the same loss of business. The major companies, however, held to their program of advanced prices now made possible by the practical destruction of the independent gasoline business in Michigan.

In spite of their contracts, many of the gasoline-station managers cut their posted selling price in order to hold some portion of their trade. They paid the higher price demanded by the major company which had taken over their station and met the loss out of their own receipts. In order to do this, many of the station owners have discontinued paying rent to the owners of the ground on which the station stands. Countless others have abandoned tax paying. Practically all have dismissed station employees and have greatly reduced the wages of those still at work.

The effect of this reduced consuming power of workers connected with gasoline stations was made the subject of a special study by the Buyers' Research Association, a nonprofit corporation of Detroit. In view of the fact that there are between 2,500 and 3,000 filling stations in Zones B and C, the importance of this reduced purchasing power of gas-station workers is self-evident. The research association in its nonconfidential bulletin for May, 1932, printed the results of its survey of wages paid gasoline-station attendants in Detroit where the foreign gasoline competition has resulted in the cutting both of prices and wages. This survey shows eight major companies paying wages from $110 to $140 per month. Only one major company, the Gulf Refining Co., is listed as paying less. That company pays from $75 to $100 per month. The company handling the imported foreign gasoline is listed as paying from $60 to $75 per month. Out of this they pay laundry costs of $4.20 to $5.25 per month, according to this bulletin's figures.

This bulletin of the Buyers' Research Association calls attention to the "vicious circle" established by lessened buying power with its demoralization of our economic structure and its part in creating illogical depressions. On page 5 it develops the point in a strong editorial expression, embodied in the news article itself, saying:

"ROBBING PETER TO PAY PAUL

"Mr. Purchaser, you lose as much as you gain when you buy goods or services made or dispensed by employees receiving low wages. Suppose you are a rental landlord. On the basis of paying one-quarter of gross income for rent, a Sunny Service Station attendant can afford to pay only $15 to $18.75 per month rent and a Gulf attendant can pay only $18.75 to $25, while other station attendants can afford to pay from $27.50 to $35 per month. To which employee would you rather rent? From which employee can you obtain sufficient payment to get a fair return on your investment, whether it be in houses, apartments, professional services, or merchandise on the store shelves? Think it over and spend your gasoline dollar accordingly.

"Until such time as the Sunny Service Oil and the Gulf Refining Cos. give evidence that their employees are receiving at least the average wage paid by other oil companies in the Detroit area, the Buyers' Research Association does not consider the money spent for 'Zip' and 'Gulf' gasolines to be well directed."

This survey covers the city of Detroit. Conditions outside the city became even worse. There the station operators, bound by contracts to the major oil companies, were forced to pay a higher price for the gasoline they dispensed. The Detroit-zone retail price was a cent below the wholesale price at Pontiac, 20 miles away. In order to hold even a fraction of their trade, they were compelled to cut their selling price to at least the figure set at the next zone nearest Detroit. The remaining margin was so small that they either dismissed their employees, relying on the services of members of their families, or else cut the wages to the bare bone.

The retail merchants in the communities outside Detroit's shopping center naturally suffered from this lessened buying power of the gasoline-station employees in their neighborhood. Even more important, however, was the loss of sales to the hosts of customers who drove through to Detroit, bought the cheap gasoline there at the price established by the foreign product, and then did the family shopping at the lower Detroit prices. Those prices alone would not have attracted this trade from the communities 15 to 30 miles away; but when coupled with the possible saving of 4½ cents a gallon on a tankful of gasoline (with extra tins carried in the car), they constituted a trade attraction which was irresistible to many. The local retail store in many sections has suffered in consequence.

The banks, too, have felt the disastrous effect of the general situation developing out of the demoralization which followed on the invasion of the foreign gasoline. Many of the independent gasoline wholesalers had their capital tied up in accounts receivable. They relied on bank loans for operating funds. This was good practice when business conditions were normal. They ceased to be normal when the Rumanian or Soviet gasoline, whichever it was, began upsetting business. Then the independent wholesalers began to close up. Numbers of them became bankrupt. Their notes, often in large sums, were still at the bank, uncollectible. Of those still operating with the gasoline part of their business eliminated, there are quite a few who are forced to let their notes stand, uncurtailed, with past-due interest accumulating. The banks "hold the bag." Their only alternative would be foreclosure, which would mean putting the banks into the general petroleum business without the slightest prospect of getting out again or realizing any important part of the loans represented by the notes they hold.

Protests made by the independent gasoline dealers to the Detroit city government resulted in a public hearing being held on the legality of the zoning system and the monopoly developing out of it. At that time the corporation counsel held that the question should properly be considered by the State utilities commission. The sole result of this hearing was an official letter sent to some of the major oil companies by the city council asking for information, to which a polite but unsatisfying reply was made by the companies addressed. The council did not grant the petition for an antizoning ordinance. The natural result of this inactivity was a series of rumors explanatory of that refusal and hardly complimentary to either the council or to the major companies.

The next step of the distressed dealers was a petition addressed to the State utilities commission citing by names the various major oil companies involved and asserting:

"We believe that one of the most vicious forms of strangling competition ever devised or inaugurated in the history of American business has been forced upon us by the major oil companies."

The petition includes this very suggestive section:

"The menace is double-edged. It affects all independent retail business men, for if this stranglehold can be fastened on independent oil men, it can likewise be fastened on any other retail business line—drugs, groceries, hardware, or whatnot. It affects all consumers, for if a small body can be made to pay a higher price, it permits collusion to meet competition (unfair as the competition may be) and it permits isolation of a small group of ultimate buyers so that they can be soaked any price the big business men, operating nationally, care to dictate."

This petition was signed by 80 dealers and forwarded to the State utilities commission, April 12, 1932. No relief from that source had materialized when this article was written.

The same facts were set forth by these dealers in a petition to the Federal Trade Commission which they presented through Senator COUZENS of Michigan. The commission, which had previously made a study of Michigan conditions during a previous attempt to establish "zoning" sent an investigator to Detroit who made a survey of the situation.

There are many other interesting angles to the Detroit situation. The question as to the interest of the major oil companies in the firm whose selling of imported gasoline at prices below American production figures arises in every discussion. Whether these companies are or are not interested in this importation, they are benefiting by it, are eliminating independent dealers, and are closing Michigan to the independent petroleum producers. Another curious feature lies in the fact that reports of the importer-distributor of this cheap foreign gasoline show that immense quantities of the foreign gasoline never reaches the Detroit market. In one month alone 203 cars (normal capacity from 8,000 to 10,000 gallons or more each) were reconsigned and were not delivered to the Detroit plant. The records of the gas division of the Secretary of State's office at Lansing also show the sources of much of the gasoline distributed by this importer-distributor. According to these records, the major oil companies are supplying large quantities of gasoline to the very concern which is, on the surface, giving them such disastrous competition that they have been forced to establish the zoning system, with its ruin of independent competitors and its tightening of the oil monopoly's grasp of Michigan's gasoline business.

The essential point, however, is clear. Gasoline shipped from Rumania, whose cost delivered at the port of Baltimore is only 1.96 cents per gallon, can drive the independent American product out of the market long enough to enable a few major companies (some of whom are also importers of foreign oil or gasoline) to obtain control of practically all the retail outlets. Then follow decreases in wages paid labor, diversion of retail trade from outlying communities to some city center, loss of purchasing power, drop in rental values and in rental receipts alike, loss to the State in taxable sources and also in actual taxes paid, with an eventual steady increase in the price paid by the gasoline consumer.

What is happening to-day in Michigan may happen next month in any State in the Union so long as cheap foreign petroleum or its products are admitted to this country either on payment of a small excise tax or even under a tariff which does not at least equalize the differential in production costs between the American product and the foreign goods.

Mr. JONES. Just a moment, Mr. President. I desire to make an inquiry regarding the resolution of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. If the Senator from Washington wishes to propound a question, I yield to him.

Mr. JONES. As I understand, the resolution will require considerable investigation by the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. GORE. The commission have had the matter under consideration for about a year, and I assume must be approaching some sort of a final report. The resolution simply directs them to complete the final report at as early a date as practicable.

Mr. JONES. Does the Senator understand that the investigation, or whatever it is, is being carried on under the appropriation the commission now has?

Mr. GORE. That is my understanding; yes, sir.

Mr. JONES. Then, it would not require a new appropriation?

Mr. GORE. No; I assume that they have practically finished the work, and the resolution relates to a very acute situation in Detroit.

Mr. JONES. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have no objection to the resolution proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma, but the Senate from time to time has dumped upon the Federal Trade Commission requests for investigations and for reports without making an appropriation to enable the work thus devolved upon the commission to be done. I am asking, because the able Senator from Oklahoma would not overlook the fact, if he has investigated, to ascertain whether the Federal Trade Commission has the money with which to make this report. Let us not fall into the same pit into which we fell a few months ago by calling for reports and data when there was no money with which to do the work. I ask the Senator that question.

Mr. GORE. This particular investigation has been under way by the Federal Trade Commission for something like a year. The resolution directs them to conclude that investigation and to submit their report at as early a date as practicable. I am sure it will not require any additional appropriation. It relates, as I have said, to a very acute situation in Detroit.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, while I have the floor I wish to introduce a Senate joint resolution and ask that it may be read and lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, and out of order, the joint resolution will be received, read, printed, and lie on the table.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 203) to extend the operation of Public Resolution No. 35, Seventy-second Congress, was read twice by its title and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. Was consent given to the Senator from Oklahoma for immediate consideration of his resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not yet.

Mr. GORE. I ask that it lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well. The request for unanimous consent is withdrawn, and the resolution will be printed and lie on the table.

ANNUAL LEAVE OF GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE EMPLOYEES

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a letter from the Public Printer with reference to Senate Joint Resolution 200, now on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., July 13, 1932.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In response to your telephone request of yesterday, I am submitting the following statement regarding leave of absence with pay in the United States Government Printing Office.

Authority for leave of absence with pay in the Government Printing Office is as follows:

"Leaves of absence: The employees of the Government Printing Office, whether employed by the piece or otherwise, shall be allowed leaves of absence with pay to the extent of not exceeding 30 days in any one fiscal year under such regulations and at such times as the Public Printer may designate at the rate of pay received by them during the time in which said leave was earned; but such leaves of absence shall not be allowed to accumulate from year to year. Such employees as are engaged on piece work shall receive the same rate of pay for the said 30 days' leave as will be paid to day hands. It shall be lawful to allow pay for pro rata leave to those serving fractional parts of a year; also to allow pay for pro rata leave of absence to employees of the Government Printing Office in any fiscal year, notwithstanding the fact that 30 days' leave of absence, with pay, may have been granted to such employees in that fiscal year on account of service rendered in a previous fiscal year. The Public Printer is authorized to pay to the legal representative of any employees who may die, and may have any accrued leave of absence due them as such employees, said claims to be paid out of any appropriations for leaves of absence. (44 U. S. C., sec. 45.)"

Employees in the Government Printing Office are not allowed leave of absence with pay during the fiscal year in which appointed. They earn leave during that year and it is granted to them in the succeeding year. On July 1 of each year all employees have to their credit a definite amount of leave earned up to that time. This so-called "earned" leave has always been treated as a definite asset which by law is payable to the employee on his separation from the service or to his estate on his death. In this regard the leave to which employees of the Government Printing Office have been entitled by law is entirely different from the leave allowed employees in the departmental service where leave with pay is not regarded as an "earned" right but is privilege granted in the discretion of head of the department and is coincident with the year of employment but not allowable in cash to the employee or his estate.

Section 103 of the legislative act for 1933 suspends for the fiscal year 1933 all rights to grant leave of absence with pay.

In reply to my inquiry, the Comptroller General of the United States advised me, in effect, that in the absence of any provision in the legislative act for 1933 limiting the suspension to only the annual leave which would be earned or accrued in fiscal year 1933, there was no alternative but to hold that the suspension must apply to rights to annual leave accrued or earned and unused prior to July 1, 1932.

It is my opinion that employees of the Government Printing Office are legally entitled to reimbursement for the leave of absence earned in 1932 under authority of the specific law above quoted, and which can not be granted to them under section 103 (supra). The exact amount of this earned leave has not as yet been computed because of the varying rates at which it was earned in 1932, but is estimated at approximately $995,000. To provide this money by appropriation would require an estimate.

The fund impounded and returned to the Treasury by authority of the furlough requirements in section 101 of Public Act No. 212, Seventy-second Congress, is estimated to be about the amount required to pay employees the leave earned in 1932.

In order to handle this matter expeditiously and without an appropriation, and in a manner I believe feasible and workable, I submit for your consideration the attached amendment to Senate Joint Resolution No. 200.

Should the moneys returned to the Treasury under section 110 be insufficient for the purposes of this amendment, future consideration could be given to an appropriation to cover any deficiency.

Respectfully,

GEORGE H. CARTER, Public Printer.

Hon. HENRIK SHIPSTEAD,
Chairman Senate Committee on Printing,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. GORE. I understood that the Senate resolution which I introduced was adopted by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; unanimous consent was not granted, as the Chair understood.

Mr. GORE. I did not so understand. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] did not object. Neither did the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, to relieve the situation, I shall object, and ask that the resolution go over under the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well. The Chair understood the Senator from Maryland to have objected.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion proposed by the Senator from Oregon, namely, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting the nomination of M. Pearl McCall, of the District of Columbia to be judge of the juvenile court of the District of Columbia, to succeed Kathryn Sellers, whose term expired March 2, 1931, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. REED. Mr. President, from the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably a number of purely routine nominations and ask unanimous consent for their present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? Without objection, the nominations are confirmed.

Mr. HEBERT and Mr. DALE, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported back favorably sundry nominations, which were placed on the Executive Calendar.

TREATIES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The calendar is in order.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read Executive A (71st Cong., 3d sess.), protocols concerning adherence of the United States to the Court of International Justice, transmitted by the President of the United States on December 10, 1930.

Mr. McNARY. Let the protocols go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The protocols will be passed over.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Charles J. Moos to be postmaster at St. Paul, Minn.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, it will take considerable time, perhaps, to discuss this nomination. I have no personal or political objections to the nominee; but matters material to the nomination have come to my attention while serving on the select committee respecting post-office leases which will require a considerable time to present. I, therefore, ask that the nomination be passed over.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I have very great respect for the views of the Senator from Wisconsin, and I think he ought to have a chance to present them.

This nomination has been on the calendar since June 13. We are drifting toward the end of the session. I should like to know if an arrangement can be made by which some time can be set aside for the consideration and disposal of this matter.

If there is any legitimate reason why this nomination should be rejected, we ought to know it and reject it. If there is no legitimate reason for rejecting it, the nomination ought to be confirmed. We ought to dispose of this business.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Wisconsin, if he will agree to it, be given time to-morrow afternoon to present his views on this nomination. Will the Senator agree to take it up to-morrow at 3 o'clock?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I am not in control of the program of the Senate. The leaders on either side know what that program is. I am not asking for any privilege to present my views, excepting at some regularly appointed time for an executive session. I assume that to-morrow we shall be engaged in debate on the merger bill, and I assume that will be a long and protracted discussion. I should not like to be thrown into a debate upon a nomination during the consideration of that bill.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Oregon if he has any idea when we will have another executive session.

Mr. McNARY. I can promise the Senator from Minnesota that there will be at least one more executive session.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Can the Senator give us any idea as to what day that may be?

Mr. McNARY. If there is a possibility of adjournment Friday, I will have the next executive session late to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Then, I give notice that at the next executive session I shall move that this matter come before the Senate and be disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The nomination will be passed over.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Doyle M. England to be postmaster at New Tazewell, Tenn.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The nomination will be passed over.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Walter C. Price to be postmaster at Huntington, W. Va.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

CUSTOMS SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Fred A. Bradley to be collector of customs, customs collection district No. 9, headquarters at Buffalo, N. Y.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] is not present this afternoon. He has objections to the confirmation of this nomination. I am quite sure that he desires it to go over until to-morrow at least.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask that it be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The nomination will be passed over.

POSTMASTERS

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, have all the postmasters in this list been confirmed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No. They are being taken up one by one.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask that, with the exception of the Hebbronville, Tex., postmaster—Mr. John D. Fatheree—the entire list of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I desire to state that at my request the Senator from Tennessee has excepted from the list the nomination of John D. Fatheree to be postmaster at Hebbronville, Tex., which I desire to have held up for the present.

Mr. McKELLAR. With the exception of that one, which is excepted at the request of the Senator from Texas, I ask that the other postmasters' nominations on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the other nominations of postmasters will be confirmed en bloc.

IN THE NAVY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the nominations of sundry officers of the Navy.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I ask that the nominations in the Navy be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE MARINE CORPS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the nominations of sundry officers in the Marine Corps.

Mr. KEAN. I ask that the nominations in the Marine Corps be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, does that conclude the calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That concludes the calendar.

Mr. McNARY. In view of the situation, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of all of the confirmations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Senate resumed legislative session.

COAL MINING IN ALASKA—MOTION FOR RECONSIDERATION

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, House bill 12281, to encourage the mining of coal adjacent to the Alaska Railroad, in the Territory of Alaska, was passed by the Senate, but has since been recalled from the House, and now lies on the table. I ask unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the votes whereby the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think the Senator ought to give some reason for his request.

Mr. HOWELL. The reason for it is this:

The Senate added an amendment to the bill. The bill was sent to the House. It seems that the possibilities of getting the bill through the House with the Senate amendment are not favorable, and it is important that the bill should be passed as passed by the House.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well. I make no objection to the request.

Mr. HOWELL. I now ask unanimous consent for reconsideration of the vote whereby the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. If this matter should be taken up, would it displace the motion now pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; because the Senator from Nebraska has asked unanimous consent.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I do not want to interfere with what the Senator from Nebraska is trying to do, but I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the amendment which we put on the bill limited the price of the coal. For some reason or other the House does not seem to want to limit the price which the railroad will have to pay to these coal-mining companies. I think the matter ought to be threshed out a little more carefully in legislative session, in order that we may understand it more fully.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Connecticut to object?

Mr. BINGHAM. If the Senator from Nebraska is asking to pass the bill at the present time, without the amendment, I shall be obliged to object. I did not fully understand his request.

Mr. HOWELL. I trust the Senator will withhold his objection. The matter has been very carefully gone into. The committee to which the bill was referred have considered the matter, and they have deemed it wise to pass the bill without this amendment. Under the circumstances, it ought to be done, because it is costing the Government now a considerable sum of money to pump one of these mines, to keep it operating; and it will continue to pump the mine all summer unless some provision of this kind is made.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will not the Senator let it come up at the next legislative session?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

RECESS

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate carry out the previous order and take a recess at this time until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously entered, took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, July 14, 1932, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JULY 13, 1932

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Rev. Carl C. Rasmussen, D. D., pastor of the Luther Place Memorial Church, offered the following prayer:

O Lord, we are mindful that again returning day has called us back to the ways of duty and service. Ere we go forward we wait reverently under the shadow of the Almighty, for Thou art here in our midst. We can not see Thy face with these mortal eyes, but in our hearts there is the sense of a divine presence, vibrant and transforming. We pause that we may feel Thy cleansing power. We wait that we may see Thy revealing light. Illumine our way this day, O God, and so direct us that everything that enters into our life, individual and corporate, may be consonant with Thy holy will. Thy purposes for Thy children are ever gracious and beneficent. The statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart. More to be desired are they than gold. And in keeping of them there is great reward. As the servants of God's tender purposes for all mankind, make us each day to be workers together with Thee for the reclaiming of Thy land of promise. And may Thy kingdom come and Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 12280. An act to create Federal home-loan banks, to provide for the supervision thereof, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to said bill, requests a conference with the House thereon, and appoints Mr. NORBECK, Mr. WATSON, and Mr. FLETCHER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

"LET UNCLE SAM DO IT"

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the national Democratic platform.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the country, and especially for many of my constituents, I am having printed herewith, as a part of my remarks, two letters that I have written to influential and responsible citizens within my district, concerning the proposal in the recent Democratic platform to submit to the States an amendment to the Federal Constitution, seeking to repeal the existing eighteenth amendment.

For further information, I am printing herewith a copy of the pledge which is referred to in said correspondence. This pledge is required by all the Democratic candidates for Congress in South Carolina.

PLEDGE OF DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATES IN SOUTH CAROLINA, FOR UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OR UNITED STATES SENATE

As candidate for the office of Representative in Congress in the Democratic primary election, to be held on the last Tuesday in August, 1932, I hereby pledge myself to abide by the results of such primary and support the nominees of the party, State and National, and I declare that I am a Democrat and that I am not, nor will I become, the candidate of any faction, either privately or publicly suggested, other than the regular Democratic nomination. I will support the political principles and policies of the Democratic Party during the term of office for which I may be elected, and work in accord with my Democratic associates in Congress on all party questions.

This, the 30th day of May, 1932.

J. J. McSWAIN.

Filed the ——— day of ————, 1932.

———— ————,

Treasurer State Democratic Executive Committee.

All pledges must be filed on or before 12 o'clock m. on the day preceding the day fixed by the State executive committee for the first campaign meeting.

JULY 13, 1932.

MY DEAR ——— ———: In order that you may better understand my reasons for the answers I shall make to the questions in your letter of July 9, let me state some preliminary and personal facts.

I have been living in South Carolina for more than 57 years and shall finish my earthly career as a citizen of that State. Four generations of my forefathers lie buried in her soil, and I, too, shall join them there—it may be soon or late. Till I was 17 years old we had barrooms in South Carolina, many of them, and I hope and pray that we may never have barrooms in our State again. From 1892 until about 1900 we had the State dispensary, with branch dispensaries in all parts of the State, except Marlborough County. I sincerely trust that we may never have anything like the State dispensaries. Next we had county option as to county dispensaries, the matter being left to the law of the people by counties. These were finally abolished, and we had the quart a month law, providing that any citizen might order, through interstate commerce not exceeding 1 quart a month for personal use. Then finally came bone-dry state-wide prohibition, under the Carey-Cothran law, which, with various amendments, is still the statutory law of South Carolina. Under the Webb-Kenyon Act of Congress, each State is permitted to restrict or forbid the importation, by interstate commerce, of intoxicating liquors. This act of Congress has been sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States as constitutional and is now the law upon that subject.

However, each State can be just as dry as her own legislature, and her own governor, and her own sheriffs, and all her law-enforcement officers, together with citizens as witnesses and jurors, see fit to make that State. Why is the South Carolina statute not being enforced generally in our State courts? Simply because everyone says, and naturally so, "Let Uncle Sam do it." Herein is the strength of local responsibility under local self-government, so dear to the Anglo-Saxon heart. When there is no chance to pass the buck to some other agency, the citizen must directly assume and discharge his responsibility.

Now, as to the questions. Granting that every South Carolina Senator and Member of Congress is bound by his pledge, of which I inclose a copy, you ask, "Who is the proper interpreter of these principles and policies? Is it the Democratic National Convention? If so, is the voice of that convention infallible in 1928, when it was dry, or 1932, when it was wet? Is the national convention to override the South Carolina convention, which I believe took no position on the question of repeal?" Of course, it is always the latest Democratic convention that declares the policies and principles binding on South Carolina Members of Congress under our pledge. The latest utterance by any representative body, whether fraternal, political, or ecclesiastical, is the one that binds all adherents. Certainly the South Carolina Congressmen were bound by the National Democratic Convention of 1928, which declared for law enforcement, and for that reason, among other good and sufficient reasons, I voted against submitting to the States during the past winter the proposal known as the Beck-Linthicum Act. Under my view the Democratic Party was still dry, and certainly the policy of South Carolina, as expressed by her statutory law, was dry. The failure of the State Democratic convention to express a sentiment in reversal of these views properly confirmed our view.

Of course, no convention, political or otherwise, is infallible. Nothing human is infallible. But in this practical world, especially in a Republic controlled by political parties, there must be political authority vested somewhere. Hence the reasons why Senator Tillman insisted that our South Carolina Democrats in Congress be specifically bound to recognize the authority of the party in convention assembled. Of course, all South Carolina Congressmen were bound under their pledge by the National Democratic Convention of 1928 until the convention of 1932.

Again you ask, "Is it possible for the drys of South Carolina to elect a Democrat who will in the National Congress represent their views on the dry question, or will they have to turn to a Republican to obtain representation?" Of course, any Democrat would be bound by his pledge, and I must assume that any Democrat would respect and observe his pledge. Now, as to turning to a Republican, I must express the sincere hope that you do not seriously consider that alternative. For over 100 years the white people of South Carolina have been nearly 100 per cent Democratic. It is both a fixed tradition and a firm conviction. Furthermore, I do not believe that any responsible citizen of South Carolina would be willing to change from the Democratic Party to the Republican Party and run for Congress as a Republican and as a dry. Of course, I may be mistaken; but if I am mistaken, he would surely find that he had made a mistake.

In the first place, the national Republican Party is not dry and never was squarely and sincerely dry. Mellon and Mills, who are the patron saints of the Republican Party, are as wet as the Atlantic Ocean. I know Mills well, having served with him in the House for several years, and his office was almost directly across the hall from my office. I am ten thousand times drier than Ogden Mills, and yet to-day he is the spokesman and mentor for the Republican Party. I never use intoxicants in any form. Furthermore, I do not use tobacco, coffee, tea, or coca cola. This temperance on my part is solely and simply for my health's sake. I am conserving every ounce of my strength and energy the better to serve my family and my fellow men.

In the next place, the Republican platform is a mere straddle on the liquor question. Anyone here acquainted with the whole situation regards it as utterly insincere and almost ludicrous. It tries to look both ways but goes nowhere. Many Republican Members of Congress confess it to be a monstrous joke. I stake my reputation for fair judgment of men upon this prediction: In the next Congress the percentage of Republicans who vote for the submission of a repeal amendment will be just as high as among the Democrats. About one year from now, if we both are alive, we will check on this prediction.

You will be interested to note the inclosed clipping from the morning paper, in which a very prominent Republican, formerly chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee of the House, asserts that President Hoover would approve at this time a beer bill of 2.75 per cent..

Here I might well end this letter; but being sincerely devoted to true temperance and to genuine law observance and enforcement, I venture to add one consideration which, to my mind, appears vital, and I beg your most earnest consideration of same.

Undoubtedly, irrespective of which party wins the November election, the repeal question will be submitted during the next Congress to the States. That will require only two-thirds of both Houses, and as both parties are practically committed, and as a Democratic victory is almost certain, submission by Congress seems still more certain. But this act of submission by Congress is a mere formality. Undoubtedly the contest is immediately transferred to the States. Each State can be just as dry as its own citizens by a majority action at elections and in the jury box see fit to make it.

If legislators shall be elected who will not repeal the existing prohibition statutes; and if governors, sheriffs, solicitors, and magistrates are elected upon pledges to enforce the existing prohibition laws, and if citizens will prosecute violations and will testify against violators, and if jurors will convict on evidence, then there will be genuine prohibition in South Carolina.

Again the battle of ratification must be fought in the States, and nowhere else. Thirteen States will have a complete veto power upon repeal. Even if 35 of the largest and strongest States should ratify, it would be insufficient. There must be at least 36 States to ratify a repeal amendment. Whether or not South Carolina will ratify or refuse to ratify such repeal amendment will depend upon who are members of the State legislature or delegates to the convention called for that purpose, as the one method or the other may be chosen. It is manifest, therefore, that the place for intense activity on the part of all who oppose the repeal of the eighteenth amendment must be in the States themselves.

I believe with all my being in the principles of the Declaration of Independence, and especially as it was incorporated, in substance, in that provision of the Federal Constitution authorizing amendments to same. In America the people are sovereign. The people can raise up and put down. They can add other amendments to the Constitution or they can strike out existing amendments to the Constitution. George Washington, in his Farewell Address, pointed to the power of amendment as the best guaranty of free government. Thomas Jefferson thought that one generation should never seek to bind another generation. The only escape from the binding force of law enacted by a past generation is the right and power of repeal by the living generation. It is therefore perfectly manifest that the issue is squarely up to our own people.

To illustrate what I mean by doing our duty as citizens I heard of one South Carolina citizen who charges that the prohibition laws ought to be repealed for the mere reason that they can not be enforced. It is reported that he said a bootlegger left a crate of whisky at his home during his absence and in about a week the bootlegger returned and, failing to sell the liquor to the citizen, gave him a bottle and carried the balance away.

What was the plain duty of that citizen who now complains that such laws, even the laws of South Carolina, can not be enforced? It was not only a Federal law that was flouted, it was the solemn statutory law of the sovereign State of South Carolina. Surely it was the duty of that citizen to give information upon which a warrant should be issued, and to furnish his testimony at the trial of the violator. Undoubtedly this citizen would prosecute vigorously a mere trespasser on private property, or a petty thief, or a burglar. No bootleggar has ever left any liquor at my house or your house. But the world knows that if it should happen we would not ignore the incident. Laws can not enforce themselves. Human beings must invoke the processes of the law. Our best citizens must consent to testify to what they know, and to serve on juries.

In conclusion, it is manifest that we are dealing with a practical problem, involving the conduct of human beings, and especially of public officers. The sense of civic duty must be aroused in order to enforce all our State laws. All experience shows that citizens will respect, observe, and enforce their own State laws better than a Federal law. For some strange reason people erroneously but actually regard a Federal law as somewhat alien. Any lawyer of long and varied experience will confirm this statement. Since we must deal with men as they are, and not as we would have them to be, it is sound sense to put our chief reliance for making South Carolina dry in fact upon South Carolina statutes, upon South Carolina officers, upon South Carolina jurors, and upon South Carolina citizens as witnesses.

It was formerly the case in South Carolina, before "Let Uncle Sam do it" became the rule, that we enforced our own laws. Bootleggers and blind tigers were then at a minimum. Drinking was slight, compared with what goes on now. If each State will keep her own yard clean then there will be more efficient enforcement of law over the Nation as a whole. Then the bootlegger and the racketeer will be driven to cover, will be cornered, and will be finally destroyed. These Southern States did that very thing formerly, and they can and must do it again. Local self-government, local responsibility, local accountability of public officials, local pride in decent government, and local shame for crime, these are the best weapons with which to fight the lawless traffic in liquor.

I am not writing as a candidate for office in order to curry favor or to evade any issue, but I am taking seriously my responsibility as a citizen at this critical time. I once swore out a warrant involving the death penalty. The path of duty for a good citizen is not always smooth.

I have gone beyond the scope of your questions because I know your own deep concern for true temperance and for genuine observance and enforcement of laws. As a citizen who has lived all his life in South Carolina, as a lawyer in that State for 33 years, as a total abstainer, as one who has observed these matters in all parts of our own Nation, in Canada, and in several European countries, I am now trying most earnestly to draw sincere conclusions in the matter.

I realize that this letter will probably exist long after I am gone. In a certain sense it is therefore a solemn testament. I sincerely believe my conclusions are sound. By them I will and must stand. Time will prove them to be either right or wrong. But my close observations for more than 40 years now indicate to me that I am right. I await the final verdict of events.

With great respect, I am, yours most sincerely,

J. J. MCSWAIN.

JULY 14, 1932.

MY DEAR ————: I have your letter of July 11 and hasten to answer in the same frankness and candor that prompted you to write.

I can understand how you feel about those eight words which open the Democratic platform. You certainly are fair, and manifest the true American spirit when you state that you and the other drys of our section do not oppose a resubmission of the prohibition question to the people of the Nation. Naturally you object to having the issue prejudged against you in advance by your own party platform.

I am sure you must have heard over the radio or read in the paper of the fight which Senator CORDELL HULL, of Tennessee, made in the convention against the use of those eight words committing the party, as a matter of party policy, to the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. He argued to the convention, just as you have done in your letter, that the fair thing would be to bind the party to submit the question of repeal without any recommendation for or against, and thus allow the people to pass judgment independently of any previous party commitment. Senator HULL wisely foresaw the feelings now in your heart, and, as I listened to his speech over the radio, I could foretell that this very situation would arise. But what are Senator CORDELL HULL and I going to do about it, since the convention has overwhelmingly voted down his motion to strike out those eight words?

Certainly we are not going to quit the party and refuse to support its platform and candidates because we could not have our way. The Democratic Party, with all its faults, present, past, and future, is still far superior to the Republican Party, with all the privileged-seeking and favor-getting groups in control of that party, with all the administrative crookedness and official corruption in high and low places, with all the waste and extravagance of the last 12 years. Millions and millions of our good American citizens are quitting the Republican Party to-day, to seek social justice and economic fair play for our distressed country through returning the Democratic Party to power.

Senator BORAH sulks in his Republican tent because his party has gone wet; and he knows that it is just as wet as the Democratic Party, and is worse, because the Republican Party was not honest enough to confess fairly and squarely its true attitude.

Senator NORRIS, a vigorous and courageous dry, has openly quit the Republican Party. Many Republican Congressmen freely state in private conversation that the Republican platform, on the whisky question, is worse than a monstrous joke. It is a huge fake. Obviously the Republican Party is not trying to carry water on both shoulders, but is trying to carry water on one shoulder and whisky on the other shoulder. What does Senator HIRAM JOHNSON, from Hoover's own State, think and say about Hoover?

You express regret that I feel bound to follow our national Democratic platform. You and I are about the same age, and I know that you must remember when Senator Tillman and Senator McLaurin had a fist fight in the United States Senate Chamber. It grew out of a charge that Senator McLaurin had deserted the Democratic Party. Following that unpleasant affair and to prevent its repetition the South Carolina Democratic Party at its next State convention adopted a rule requiring all Democratic candidates for Congress, and that includes Senators, to sign a pledge to support the party principles and policies and to cooperate with their Democratic colleagues in furtherance of same. I have known of that rule for about 32 years and have myself signed it seven times. I inclose you a copy of the pledge which I signed on May 30, 1932. I know you would not have me violate my pledge. It is doubtless different in most other States, but the South Carolina Congressmen are certainly bound by an express written pledge. I intend to continue in the Democratic Party as long as I live. It was dear to our fathers and forefathers, because it voices the aspirations of the otherwise voiceless millions for economic and social justice. With all her faults and failings, past, present, and future (because I know our party will make mistakes in the future), I still love the Democratic Party and shall ever do so. Therefore I must and will stand by my pledge and my party.

If any South Carolina Democrat is thinking of quitting his party on this repeal issue, where would he go and what sort of political fellowship would he find in any other party? To fellowship with South Carolina Republicans would be unthinkable. Our people should stay with the noble and liberal party of Jefferson, Calhoun, Jackson, Cleveland, Hampton, Tillman, and Wilson. Note that five out of these seven stars were South Carolina sons. We claim Wilson because he came in early childhood to South Carolina, and she remained his home until he was about grown. Our people should stick to this party and go to its ward meetings, to its county conventions, to its State conventions, the national conventions, and thus help to guide its destiny.

Since I was not a delegate to either the State convention or the national convention, I am foreclosed from protesting against the action of my representatives in these conventions. Once in convention assembled, the majority must rule. In no other way can representative bodies, whether business, fraternal, political, or ecclesiastical ever expect to function. Without organization and its binding authority on members, we could never get anywhere. It is the same thing in a meeting of the stockholders of a business corporation. It is the same thing in the board of trustees of an educational or charitable organization.

I confess that at times my church authorities have done things that I did not approve, but I continue to stick to the church. The late and now sainted Dr. James H. Carlisle, of Wofford College, once protested most vigorously against some things said and done by certain church agents in relation to congressional action about 40 years ago. But Doctor Carlisle stuck to his church.

Under free government we must have political parties in order to function. Two major, dominant parties are best. More than two powerful parties lead to the confusion and chaos now witnessed in most European countries. As between the Democratic Party and the Republican Party, I do not see how South Carolinians can hesitate to follow both tradition and conviction and stand by the party that sustained the State through the awful years of reconstruction, the party which stands for the greatest good to the greatest number.

We are now on the eve of a great Democratic victory. Since you and so many of my fellow Democrats elected me to Congress 12 years ago, I have belonged to the hopeless minority.

Only since December, 1931, have we had a small Democratic majority in the House. But the Republican Senate and White House, and every department of Government, and every post office and minor Federal office in the land are under the absolute control of the Republican Party. Many times during these 12 years we, as American citizens, have hung our heads in shame at Republican corruption, even down to selling post office appointments as a butcher sells meat. The Democratic Party will clean out this mess. We will lower the tariff, and restore world trade, and then restore the price of cotton. Our cotton mills will again run at capacity and pay good wages. A safe and sound banking system will be built about the framework of the Federal reserve system, that monumental achievement of the Democratic Party. Under the new law both banks and depositors will be protected. Furthermore, the purchasing power of the dollar will be restored to the average of what it was when most of the bonds, mortgages, and other debts now hanging over the Nation, the States, the municipalities, corporations, and individuals were given. Then the value of the dollar will be stabilized, and these periodic cycles of depression, panic, misery, starvation, and suicide will disappear.

Every great economist in the world knows that this can be done. It has not been done because the selfish interests in control of the Republican Party would not permit it to be done. There have been no bank failures in Canada, England, or France, and few anywhere else. But there have been nearly 10,000 bank failures in America in 12 years.

Many other vital problems of human welfare will be solved by the Democratic administration, led by Roosevelt and GARNER. Then there will be honesty, square dealing, and justice in the departments and bureaus in Washington. Then the small taxpayers will receive fair consideration, and the big taxpayers will no longer receive all the refund of billions of taxes.

My close study and work here for nearly 12 years fit me to help lead in this great program of reconstruction. I sincerely hope that despite the differences between us, pointed out in your letter, that you will stand by me in the coming primary election. Since you know that I will stand by my written pledge, so you also know that I will stand by the great unorganized masses of producers and consumers, whom our Democratic Party seeks to serve. My private life of 57 years, lived entirely in Laurens and Greenville Counties is some proof that I will continue to keep the faith. My record of achievement here, even under Republican administration, and with a Republican majority in both Houses of Congress, is not unworthy. By close attention, and courageous effort, I have blocked many raids upon the Treasury. The Democratic platform pledges us to cut the expenses of the Federal Government by 25 per cent, and I assure you that we will keep that pledge also. Even during this present Congress, we Democrats have forced reductions in expenses over last year of more than $627,000,000. Our party is the only hope of the average man. We will open the door of opportunity to every boy and girl in the land. Under Democratic control the future is bright.

But woe to the people if the Republican Party should be retained in power.

I have written at length, and very frankly, because I know that naturally you are deeply interested in these matters, and that probably you will show this letter to many of our mutual friends. Of course you, and they, know that I am a total abstainer of the strictest sort. I do not use even the stimulants of tobacco, coffee, and tea. I conserve every particle of my strength in order to serve my family and fellow men.

This letter will probably be preserved by you, and will probably survive me. Therefore it is something of a solemn testament. Perhaps long after we both are gone, this letter may be read and discussed by your children, and mine, and by this fact I am attesting my sincerity in every statement I have made.

With very kind personal regards to you and yours, I am,

Yours sincerely,

J. J. McSWAIN.

HOUSE RESOLUTION 285

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up the resolution, House Resolution 285, a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 12946, a bill to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by providing for and expediting a public-works program, and any points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 40 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, the bill shall be considered as having been read for amendment. No amendments shall be in order to said bill, except amendments offered by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, and said amendments shall be in order, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding. Amendments offered by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means may be offered to any section of the bill at the conclusion of the general debate, but said amendments shall not be subject to amendment. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, this is a rule providing for the consideration of the new relief bill.

I understand the Senate has passed a similar bill, but there is a motion pending in the Senate to reconsider the same. For this reason we are calling up the House bill, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12946, a bill to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by providing for and expediting a public-works program.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12946, with Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE].

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call to the attention of the House one section of this bill especially.

Subsection C of section 201, on page 9, of the emergency relief and construction act of 1932 is the section fraught with a great deal of danger both to American agriculture and to American industry. This subsection provides that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed to make loans for the purpose of financing sales of such surpluses of agricultural products as can not be financed in the normal course of commerce.

As everyone knows, all textile mills in the United States, or the great majority of them, are having a difficult time during this present depression or panic. And this provision, if enacted into law, means that the United States Government, through one of its agencies, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, will finance the foreign textile plants in their purchase of cotton. It means that credit will be extended to the textile plants in foreign countries for the purpose of these plants operating in competition with American textile plants. The amount that can be advanced under this subsection by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is unlimited. Nor will the enactment of this subsection into law in any way help agriculture. It will not help agriculture to have any considerable amount of cotton or of wheat placed upon a foreign market upon easy credit terms by the United States Government.

My information is, and I think it is correct, that the Federal Farm Board sought to have, and did have, placed in the other relief bill a provision of $40,000,000 for the purpose of financing sales of cotton and wheat to foreign countries. And that the illustration was used that China, if it could obtain credit, would buy a great amount of cotton. For the last 12 months or more China has bought as much cotton, if not more, than it did in any similar period of time; but when that provision was inserted in the former bill China stopped buying American cotton, in order to wait upon the credit which the United States Government would extend them. I can not sit idly by and permit this bill to pass without my protests and without my denunciation of a provision which not only affects the three hundred and odd cotton textile plants in my district but the entire industry in America, and which not only affects the welfare of the cotton planters of my district but likewise affects very seriously all the cotton growers of the Southern States.

Under the rule that is brought in for the passage of this bill, it is impossible for me to offer an amendment, striking out this provision.

May I not in conclusion call to the attention of the House that the increased taxes necessary to balance the Budget has added a heavy burden, both to agriculture and other textile industries; and that under no circumstances should foreign textile plants receive benefits from the Federal Government when our domestic plants are denied those benefits. All commodities should be distributed through the normal channels of trade, and a preference should be given in the distribution of these commodities to the American manufacturers, which has not been done under this provision of the bill.

Therefore, knowing the detriment to American agriculture and to American industry and to American labor under this provision, I can not, Mr. Chairman, vote for this bill on its final passage.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the Hoover relief bill is before the House. I repeat, the Hoover bill is under consideration. Such a surrender on the part of the legislative branch of the Government has seldom been witnessed, but due to the power of veto we find ourselves in the position where we must take what the President says or there will be no relief measure enacted at this session. The responsibility rests with the President. If this measure fails to meet the needs of the stricken Nation then he alone must answer to the people.

When confronted with conditions such as exist to-day is it not reasonable that we advance relief in measures such as we would not think of providing in normal times? The foundation upon which the country rests is in need of repair. We sought to extend relief in a measure where it would be beneficial and hasten a return to prosperity, but we are told by the President he will not accept our suggestions and it will be necessary for us to eliminate certain provisions of the bill or it will not receive his signature.

Mr. Chairman, I never thought I would ever live to see the day when hungry people were demanding food throughout my country. That day is here and try as the people have they find that they have been unable to meet the situation. Drive after drive in my city has enabled thousands of families to receive assistance. The announcement comes now there is no more money available. One hundred thousand people out of employment in St. Louis is the answer to the question as to why such conditions exist.

I am going to support this bill because it is all we can get. I am assured that regardless of the prohibition in our State constitution or in the charter of the city of St. Louis, my city can receive recognition and borrow money provided the governor will show that an emergency exists. Of course I can not speak for the governor, but if it becomes necessary there will at least be a way to secure help.

There are certain provisions in this bill to which I seriously object. It is always the way, when some special bill is before the Congress, to take advantage of the situation by inserting some unpopular provision which could not be agreed to in a separate bill. I refer to the paragraph which enables the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make advances for the purpose of financing sales of surpluses of agricultural products in foreign countries. I can see now the Stabilization Corporation of the Federal Farm Board reaching out for money under this paragraph. We had hoped we had put an end to their activities.

Mr. Chairman, I have repeatedly stated on this floor that what the people of this country want is work, not charity. The bill provides for loans to private corporations, States, municipalities, and so forth, for the purpose of aiding in financing self-liquidating projects. When it comes to the Government embarking upon a building program so as to give work to the unemployed, we find a proviso that no such work shall be undertaken until the Secretary of the Treasury says the money can be secured. The exact language follows:

No part of the sum appropriated—

Speaking of the public works—

shall be expended unless the Secretary of the Treasury certifies to the President that the amount necessary for such expenditure is available or can be obtained without interference with current financing operations of the Government.

That language, in my opinion, precludes the possibility of securing a public-works program. The President does not want a public-works program to place the unemployed to work, but he will accept the bill because of the proviso quoted, as he will have full control and can delay the inauguration of such a program as long as he desires.

Speaking of self-liquidating projects for which money can be advanced to private corporations, I would like to compare the private project with the projects in my city—Federal projects. We are now paying over $75,000 a year for rent of buildings for Government agencies in St. Louis. Construct a 10-story Federal building there and the rent bill disappears. In other words, the Government saves $75,000 a year when it has its own building to house its workshops. No provision in this bill provides the proper building for St. Louis. We have money in the Treasury to build a 6-story building, and the Treasury Department wants a little over a million more to make it 10 stories, but the section in the Garner bill, section 302, which would have made this possible, is missing from this measure. It would not have required a dollar for over three years, but would have enabled the Treasury to go ahead and start the work. Eleven other such items were in section 302 of the Garner bill. The President promises to make the recommendation for the change in December. If it is sound and he can recommend it in December, why not do it now. The reason is the President has stated he will not permit any recommendations to come to Congress for public buildings at this session.

Mr. Chairman, the country needs a relief bill. This is the best we can get. We must bow to the will of the President. So that some good may result, no matter how small, I am going to support the bill, although I know it is inadequate.

You all read in the papers day before yesterday what occurred in St. Louis at the door of the mayor's office. If something is not done, the same reports will be carried from the four corners of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I hope I am wrong; I hope this bill will be sufficient, but I can not bring myself to the point where I can say it is enough. As I said before, we are forced to take it; we have no other recourse. [Applause.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five minutes. The bill now before the House is a complete agreement on the part of the Democratic and Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee. It is a complete agreement as the bill stands, but an amendment will be offered to which the Republican members object.

Title I of this bill is exactly the same as in the bill contained in the conference report and sent to the President and vetoed by him. Title III is the same with this exception: The $120,000,000 for roads of public character and the $16,000,000 for roads and trails in the forests are absolute appropriations and are to be expended in an orderly course. The remaining money provided for in Title III, however, is subject to the limitation which you will find on pages 28 and 29 of the bill, which I read:

No part of the sum appropriated by this section, except the amount for expenditure under paragraph (1) or (2) of subsection (a), shall be expended unless the Secretary of the Treasury certifies to the President that the amount necessary for such expenditure is available or can be obtained without interference with current financing operations of the Government.

That is, the remainder of the money provided in Title III can not be expended unless the Secretary of the Treasury finds the condition of the finances of the country warrants that expenditure.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. Why was not that same condition attached to the appropriation for highways?

Mr. HAWLEY. There is another body to which this will go, which absolutely insists that the money for the highways be appropriated and available.

Mr. MAPES. The House has voted upon that proposition and a very considerable number voted against it—is not that true?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; but not a majority.

Mr. GARBER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. GARBER. To what projects does this refer?

Mr. HAWLEY. Projects in Title III, and the remarks I have just made refer to the provisions in Title III.

After the veto message was received by the House the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], the majority leader, Mr. TREADWAY, and myself had a conference with the President. We went through all the provisions of the bill, printed as H. R. 12946, and they have the approval of the President.

The provisions in Title II enable the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to various public organizations which are engaged in a business that is self-liquidating in character, and which employ labor. In order to enable them to do this the amount of money the corporation can use has been increased six and three-fifths times the capital stock of $500,000,000. That would increase it to $3,300,000,000. The present law provides for $1,500,000,000, to be sold as debentures or other evidences of indebtedness.

We add $1,800,000,000 to that in order to enable the Government, through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, to assist the States, municipalities, or other organizations of a public character created under Federal, State, or municipal law to engage in public works of a self-liquidating character, which employ labor.

These are the provisions of the bill stated in a few words. I do not think it is necessary to now discuss the matter in extenso.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, the remarks I am about to make are based on the bill in the form in which it is on the Speaker's table and not as it may be after the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] offers the amendment which was agreed to by the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee a few moments ago. I am absolutely and definitely opposed to that amendment, but we will discuss that when we come to it.

The bill before us to-day, when approved by the other branch, is as sure to secure Presidential favor as the bill we had before us last week was sure of a veto from the President. Two men are largely responsible for this result. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], instead of showing pique at the defeat of the bill of which he was the author, assumed a statesmanlike and constructive attitude yesterday in coming forward and saying that we want a bill that will absolutely conform with the wishes of the President and of the administration, in order to secure needed relief. [Applause.] I congratulate the gentleman from Illinois on that position. The other gentleman responsible for the bill before us to-day is the President of the United States. He was willing to meet the representatives of the Ways and Means Committee, also send his representative, the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, to us, and help us to iron out all differences so that we could present an absolutely unanimous report and bill for the House to act upon here this morning. [Applause.] So these two men, in my judgment, are responsible for the bill before us to-day, the gentleman from Illinois and the President of the United States.

It is to be hoped that the other branch will approve this measure as quickly as we will here to-day. Speed it on, get it passed by both branches unanimously, if we can, and it will be law before night. This is the attitude we are taking by pushing this bill now to speedy enactment and having it placed on the statute books.

The expected happened when the so-called Wagner-Garner bill was vetoed. Nobody was deceived about the fact that that bill invited a veto, and deservedly so. Some felt that it would not be vetoed because, as was stated by one of the leaders in the other branch—

> The differences are so minute that there is no occasion for a veto, and the President should approve the bill.

This was incorrect. The differences were not minute. The President never offered any suggestion that he would approve loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to individual borrowers. The language quoted in the President's address of December 4 is the basis for this statement. Let me read it to you:

> The Reconstruction Finance Corporation should be in a position to facilitate exports by American agencies; make advances to agricultural credit agencies where necessary to protect and aid the agricultural industry; to make temporary advances, upon proper securities, to established industries, railways, and financial institutions which can not otherwise secure credit, and where such advances will protect the credit structure and stimulate employment.

There is no reference whatever to a loan to an individual, and there is exactly where we differ from the statement made by the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] when he said the differences were minute. They were vital. The President in his veto message stated there were six definite reasons why he could not approve the original Wagner-Garner bill. I commend these six reasons to the careful attention of the Congress and of the people of the country. They are absolutely convincing as to the merits of the veto which he transmitted to this House.

We now face this situation. We are absolutely assured by the President himself and by representatives of the President that he approves the present bill. I therefore ask that we adopt it as submitted and send it on its way to quick enactment into law. [Applause.]

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding this bill does not provide the relief for which I had hoped, in view of the great distress prevailing throughout the country I shall support it.

For nearly two years I have been calling existing conditions to your attention and to the attention of the country. We passed the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill in the hope that the officers of that corporation would bring about relief and aid the banks and the Nation. Instead of helping, as we had expected, it has delayed and delayed. True, it has made some loans, but, as I have previously stated, it has delayed making them, and when they did make them they were so small that instead of helping some of the smaller banks they have destroyed them. In my city alone 32 banks have been closed within the last two weeks. Ten million dollars would have saved these institutions, but they refused to lend them the money; but when the ex-chairman, General Dawes, of that corporation, asked for relief for his own Chicago bank within a few days after he resigned there was $80,000,000 forthcoming for him. I think such action is unjustifiable and unwarranted and must be subjected to severe criticism.

Now, what hope have we and what may we expect in the future from these Reconstruction Finance Corporation officials? But I hope that in the future they will act more judiciously and more speedily and really carry out the wishes of the Congress by not discriminating, this due to the fact that we will insert a provision in this bill that will compel these officials to make full reports on all future loans—to whom and under what conditions they are made.

Mr. Chairman, eliminating the provision making possible the opportunity for an individual to secure a loan is, I think, outrageous. Why should a corporation be permitted to obtain a loan and an individual who is not incorporated, but who may have as large a business, be deprived of the same privilege?

The bill that the President vetoed, I am satisfied, could have made possible loans to municipalities and subdivisions thereof not only for self-liquidating projects but for any projects that would have created employment, thereby giving opportunity to at least some of the thousands upon thousands now unemployed. Also it would have made it possible for some of the subdivisions and other bodies like the county and the sanitary-district trustees to have obtained aid and relief. Not only would the city of Chicago but other municipalities as well have been aided. I am certain that the sanitary-district trustees would have been entitled to a loan under the provisions of that bill to enable it to proceed with the construction of the sewage-disposal plants ordered by the United States Supreme Court; and I am just a little fearful that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may try to construe the language of this pending bill so as to enable it to deny the absolutely necessary relief required by the sanitary-district board, which also would have created employment for several thousands of our unemployed; but the President will have his way, and I shall greatly deplore it if under this bill the relief that I have been tirelessly seeking shall not be forthcoming.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON].

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, well may the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] assure the House that this bill, if it is passed by the House and concurred in by the Senate, will meet with Executive approval. Why not? Because every line of it has been written by or approved by the Executive.

The gentleman from Massachusetts compliments the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] on his statesmanship in agreeing to this bill. What else was there to do? Should he stand out stubbornly, as the President of the United States has done, and say if he can not have his own way there will be no relief measure passed at this session of Congress?

When we passed through the House the conference report which expressed the viewpoint of the Congress, with the approval of 35 Members on the minority side, as to the nature and extent of relief which should be granted under present conditions, that was not acceptable to the President of the United States. He would not consent. Now, we must pass what he will approve or we will have no relief whatever.

This bill reminds me of what an old colored soldier said to me this morning. He was one of the number that spent the night out here on the Capitol Grounds. He had slept on the concrete without any bedding. I remarked to this old colored man that he must have had rather a hard bed. He said, "Boss, it beats nothing." [Laughter.]

And that is what this bill does, it beats nothing, but it is the best we can get to meet the present emergency. We are not showing an obstinate, stubborn disposition, but are manifesting a disposition to do the best we can for the country. It will not be sufficient, but it will help to relieve distress and starvation, and if it is inadequate the responsibility for that inadequacy is at the White House and not with Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON].

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I am glad that we have at last virtually agreed upon this measure of relief. I hope it will be so administered as to give relief to business and relieve unemployment.

I am delighted that the bill includes the emergency highway bill that was passed by the House on the 27th of January last. It not only makes the authorization but the appropriation. There is $120,000,000 to be allotted among the various States that can be used to match the Federal aid available to the States.

But the thing I want to call attention to—and especially attention of the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. RAINEY, who will be one of the conferees on the measure—is that there should be an amendment on page 16, line 25, so as to extend the time that the expenditures may be had of this amount to January 1, 1934. It can not be expended by July 1, 1933. If you do not extend it, it will have to be done when we meet in December. I believe when called to the attention of the conferees they will amend it so as to extend it until January 1, 1934—about 18 months' time in which to spend the amount made available for highway construction. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, when there is a sharp division in the House the small progressive group can throw its strength on the side which we believe is in accord with the best interests of the country. It is apparent that both sides of the aisle are in favor of this bill as it is drawn. Therefore we can do no more than express our belief that the provisions of the bill are not sufficient or adequate to meet existing distressing conditions, though we sincerely and earnestly hope that we are mistaken in that belief. The fact remains that the economic condition of the country is such that heroic measures and relief of great magnitude are necessary in order, first, to effect any relief at all, and second, to stimulate industry and provide employment.

In order that there may be no misunderstanding as to the intent of Congress in certain provisions of the bill, I desire to specifically request the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] and the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] for an expression of clarification. I point out that on page 8 there is provision which is clear and unequivocal that all loans and contracts made in respect of projects of the character specified in paragraphs 1 to 5 of that subsection shall be subject to the conditions that no convict labor shall be directly employed on any such project. That is clear, Mr. Chairman, but when we turn to page 17, where we have the roads provision, that clear and unequivocal limitation is conspicuously missing. There is the provision that contractors shall pay to skilled and unskilled labor such minimum rates as shall be stated in the invitation for bids, and I pause now to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] if I am correct when I state that it is not the intent of Congress in passing a relief bill to permit the employment of convict labor on these roads herein authorized and appropriated for.

Mr. RAINEY. Section 307 of the bill covers what the gentleman is talking about, on page 37. If the gentleman will read that, he will find a complete answer to his question. That is a clear inhibition, and that is what the bill means.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That no convict labor may be used?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That provision is satisfactory, and I am glad to get the gentleman's construction that convict labor is not to be used or employed in any project under this bill. I am sure the gentleman from Oregon agrees with that construction.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In the limited time I have I can only repeat that sooner or later we will be confronted with the necessity of dealing courageously in order to bring about an economic readjustment in this country. All these measures of relief are simply palliative, necessary, of course, but even in their necessity we do not go far enough. I would like to see the original hundred million dollars for direct relief added to this bill and without limitations or condition of being a loan. That is the only way to effectively and immediately give partial relief to the distressed people of the country. I fear the loan feature will prevent many communities that are now in dire need from getting any relief, because of State constitutional inhibitions. I realize that the few progressives of the House are helpless in this instance and can only warn, and hope that I am mistaken when I say that we will sooner or later have to provide adequate relief and pass corrective legislation to permanently end existing inequities in our economic system and affirmatively bring about a new deal. [Applause.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I rise to call attention particularly of the Republican Members of the House and ask their support in getting a roll call on this bill. It has been rumored that we may not ask for a roll call. I rise to point out to the Republican Members that many of us who are wholeheartedly in favor of relief legislation were forced to vote against the Garner bill because we did not agree with the vast amount of pork that was carried in that bill for small and not-needed Federal post-office buildings, and we voted against the Wagner-Garner bill because of the provision for loans to individuals. This is the only time that we will have an opportunity to go on record in favor of relief legislation, and I propose to ask for the yeas and nays and hope that the Republican Members will stand up and be counted so that we can get the yeas and nays and afford an opportunity for a record roll call on the final passage of this unemployment and relief bill.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me it would be far better than this bill if the Congress had received a message from the Chief Executive requesting that he is now in favor of lowering the manufacturers' tariffs, and of the Congress staying here until we can work out a relief bill that will actually bring relief. You have passed appropriation bill after bill until you have piled up a deficit in the Treasury of two or three billion dollars, and you would now add to that deficit. I have voted against unnecessary appropriations because I believe what the American people need is tax reduction, not additional tax burdens. This bill will not carry relief to my needy constituents but will add to their tax burdens. It will authorize nearly two billion additional funds for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and I fear they will loan it mostly to the favored few. Perhaps others like General Dawes will obtain a few more $80,000,000 loans. A few of those select interests and groups may benefit, but what will my average taxpayer receive from it? I want relief that will reach to him, that will reach to the ones really in need.

These billions of debts must eventually be met by taxing of the American people. Although we have trimmed the Budget by some 20 per cent, we should trim it at least another 30 per cent, and also abolish departments, commissions, and bureaus not absolutely essential for the welfare of our Government. My colleagues, the cost of government—local, State, and National—must be substantially reduced before things return to even half normal. I would vote for relief of our people if we could get such proposal submitted and signed by the President. He vetoed the only measure that looked to real relief for our destitute and suffering. This substitute measure, I fear, is misnamed. It will not bring relief to our people, and I, for one, am willing to stay here until December 1 in order to pass a real relief bill that will benefit all the people of our country.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER].

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I merely want to voice my approval of this relief bill, which we are able to agree upon to-day. I think it will work a decided change for the better in our economic affairs, and, with other remedial measures, will help to bring to our distressed and depressed country a better day and a more promising future.

The work of this Congress is drawing to a close and much of its work has been constructive and helpful; but I am forced by the facts to confess that we have been particularly ineffective and inadequate in our attempt to reduce the cost of government. At every turn we have been met with the protests from interested groups whose selfish interests were being interfered with by our efforts to balance the Budget and wipe out a colossal deficit.

Added to these selfish protests were the efforts of Members of this House to further embarrass the Government and wreck its fiscal structure by gigantic raids on the Treasury which, instead of balancing the Budget, would have undermined what little confidence there remained in the financial stability of the country and caused a panic which would have outweighed all the benefits derived from these enormous appropriations of the people's money. We have levied a tax of a billion dollars on the people while we have not in proportion reduced the expenses of government. That is the severest indictment that can be rendered against this Congress, whose supreme duty was to balance the Budget properly by meeting most of the deficit with sweeping reductions in the cost of Government. This, as a Congress, we have failed and declined to do.

It was with regret that I withheld my vote of approval for the revenue act recently passed by Congress. I regret that it should have been considered necessary to force it through with one of the most arbitrary rules ever invoked in the House of Representatives. The colossal blunder of the Democratic majority which is in control of the House was that, when the responsible and able leaders of both parties had agreed upon a good bill, which temporarily would have raised the proper revenue to balance the Budget and wipe out the deficit, it reported the bill under a rule which subjected it to the attack of every group of interested taxpayers with the result that it was scuttled, leaving it a mere skeleton unworthy of the pride of its creators. That bill, in its original form as submitted to the House by the Ways and Means Committee, was just and fair, was not a burden to anyone, and was so written that the poor man would have had little or no tax whatever to pay. Food, clothing, medicines, farm implements, and farm products were excepted and made exempt from taxation.

As passed in the House the bill was so inadequate that the Senate had to rewrite it, and it came back filled with nuisance taxes which will be a real burden to the laboring man and the farmer, as well as the business man. These taxes are not only awkward and burdensome, but many of them will not produce the revenue expected. Take the foolish and aggravating 3-cent postage on first-class mail. It will, in my opinion, fail to produce as much revenue as the 2-cent stamp did. People will carry on correspondence on cards, and business men will use open letters instead of these new 3-cent stamps. They sealed their letters used in advertising and used a 2-cent stamp for the dignity and privacy and the personal touch which a sealed letter carries. Instead the business man will now send out his advertising in open letters either with a permit which can go for a cent, or at most use a 1½-cent postage stamp with the envelope open. Almost any sort of advertising can go out in this way and the Post Office Department will actually receive less money than if a 2-cent stamp had been permitted to carry it as first-class mail. The writer of letters will, of course, have to pay 50 per cent more in postage, which will be a real burden to the great mass of the people who write personal letters of a social or a business nature. We had a like experience with 2-cent postage on post cards. It was found that the cards were not used so frequently and the Government made less out of the 2-cent postage than it did with the former 1-cent rate, hence the 2-cent postage on post cards was changed back to the usual 1-cent postage for post cards.

Another unwise provision of this conference report is the awkward and inconvenient tax on checks. It is a further burden on business and, while we have been trying to discourage hoarding, this stamp tax on checks will undo any good work that has been done heretofore to prevent or at least to deter hoarding. Its tendency will be to encourage people to keep cash in their possession and not in the banks.

Added to these burdensome stamp taxes is the consumption tax on gasoline and electricity. The objection was made to the original House bill that it contained a sales tax, so designating the manufacturers' excise tax. This consumption tax is purely a sales tax and one that falls with severity upon the home owner and the man who uses an automobile in his business—and who does not? In addition to this tax on gasoline and electricity users this bill imposes a sales tax on automobiles, trucks, tires, and tubes, all motor accessories, radios, chewing gum, candy, matches, and other articles which are necessities in the life and business of every individual and community.

There is one good feature in this law, and that is the tax on imported oil and gasoline. This will be of great benefit to producers of oil in Kansas for which Kansas Senators and Representatives have been fighting so long. It should have been a higher tax, but it was the best that could be obtained and will be gladly received by the distressed Kansas oil men who have waited so long for a measure of justice at the hands of Congress.

Mr. HAWLEY. I yield now to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. EATON].

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time only for the purpose of making an inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois in regard to an amendment which was proposed in the Senate to prevent loans under this bill to institutions whose officers and employees include men who receive a salary of over $25,000 per year. Is it intended to put in such a limitation in the amendments which the committee proposes?

Mr. RAINEY. No; that is not in this bill, and it is not proposed to put it in, and it is not in the Senate bill.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Would the gentleman permit such an amendment?

Mr. RAINEY. No; I can not. I can permit only committee amendments. That is all the rule permits. The gentleman's proposition is not in this bill, nor is it in the Senate bill.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Well, perhaps here is one that is in the bill. In paragraph "c" of section 1, under Title I, it is provided that governors may make applications for funds upon certification that the same are needed not alone for State purposes but for the political subdivisions thereof whose funds are inadequate to meet its relief needs. In the next paragraph, "d," constitutional and other legal inhibitions are set aside, in so far as a State or Territory is concerned, by use of the following language:

(d) Nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize the corporation to deny an otherwise acceptable application under this section because of constitutional or other legal inhibitions or because the State or Territory has borrowed to the full extent of the law.

The next paragraph, "e," is in the following language:

(e) Any portion of the amount approved by the corporation for payment to the governor of a State or Territory shall, at his request, and with the approval of the corporation, be paid to any municipality or political subdivision of such State or Territory if (1) the governor makes as to such municipality or political subdivision a like certificate as provided in subsection "c" as to the State or Territory, and (2) such municipality or political subdivision enters into an agreement with the corporation for the repayment * * * as may be agreed upon between the corporation and such municipality or political subdivision.

I submitted the question to the Ways and Means Committee, if there should not be an amendment in paragraph (d) so that the construction therein provided for might be made also applicable to municipalities and political subdivisions of a State. I was informed by members of the committee that the language was sufficient, just as it was written, to cover every political subdivision of a State for which any governor would apply for funds. I am still in some doubt, but as I have directed your attention to the matter, I wish you would state in this RECORD if that conclusion should not be followed. In other words, if the language is not sufficient to permit a governor to make an application for funds for a municipality or political subdivision of a State which has borrowed to the full extent authorized by existing law, will you so state; and whether such condition exists on account of constitutional or other legal inhibitions? I have used the exact language of the sections as I find them, and in the absence of any answer to the contrary, I will understand that no amendment is necessary in paragraphs (d), (c), or (e) to accomplish this purpose.

Then in the Senate bill is another provision in regard to permitting the Federal reserve bank to make a new and special rule for rediscountable paper.

Mr. RAINEY. That provision concerning rediscountable paper is out of the Senate bill also. It is not in there. I mean at least it is not in the present bill. It is in the Senate bill.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman put that in here?

Mr. RAINEY. No, sir.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the committee permit that amendment?

Mr. RAINEY. No, sir. That would be loans to individuals.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Would the committee permit an amendment to limit the salaries of officers of organizations borrowing money to $50,000 a year?

Mr. RAINEY. No, sir.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman consider an amendment that will make any limit on salaries?

Mr. RAINEY. I can not put in any amendments under this rule except committee amendments. It is impossible for the committee to consider the gentleman's amendment. The committee met this morning. If the gentleman had submitted his amendment to the committee this morning, the committee would have considered it.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I submitted the proposed amendment to paragraph (d) to one of the members of the Ways and Means Committee at the meeting yesterday morning. I was personally present and stayed until the committee went into executive session. After the session was concluded I received the report stated a few moments ago. This morning I telephoned personally to the office of the committee and was told there was no meeting at which I could appear, so that I have done all that the gentleman has suggested.

I, therefore, take it that the construction of the Ways and Means Committee is that there is no necessity for any amendment to paragraph (d) so as to expressly include therein the words "municipalities and other political subdivisions," so as to permit their requests for funds to be given full consideration by the corporation and that the only requirement is that the governor of any State shall make the request, and if a governor does make a request for funds for any municipality or any political subdivision such as a municipal water board or a board of regents of a university, the corporation will be sufficiently justified in considering the request and acting upon the same without taking into their consideration whether such municipality or political subdivision has borrowed to the full extent authorized by law, or whether there are any existing constitutional or other legal inhibitions. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. LEAVITT].

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Chairman, some question has been raised as to the value of the items in this bill having to do with construction of highways, including the building of roads in national forests and national parks, the approaches to national parks upon the public domain, and across Indian reservations. To many of those representing the Western States that item offers the greatest promise of employment of any item in the bill. It is the one thing that strengthens the measure and makes it effective as far as the western part of the country is concerned.

Mr. Chairman, the testimony before the various committees has been to the effect that a greater percentage of the appropriations for the building of roads goes directly for labor than is the case with appropriations for any other form of public works. That is particularly true in the construction of roads and trails built in the mountains upon the national forests, the national parks, on the Indian reservations, and the public domain, where the character of country and the type of roads built make hand and team labor effective. But it is also true with regard to the roads on the entire Federal-aid system.

There is also the very valuable provision in this bill, found on page 19, reading as follows:

The Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior, respectively, are authorized to make rules and regulations for carrying out the foregoing provisions of this section with a view to providing a maximum employment of local labor consistent with reasonable economy of construction.

Those words are a further guaranty that local labor will benefit. The requirement on page 17, that all contracts shall contain provisions establishing minimum rates of wages to be predetermined by the State highway department, which contractors shall pay to skilled and unskilled labor, with such minimum rates stated in the bids and proposals for the work, is a still further protection to labor, as is the clause forbidding the use of convict labor.

There are other provisions of great value to my State in this bill, as well as to the entire country, and I am interested in them all. But I have chosen to use what time I have in discussing the value of these road items because the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] raised some question about them just a moment ago in this debate. The need of unemployment relief is universal, but the form of such relief most effective will vary with differences of conditions in the various sections.

The items for Army posts, river development, and numerous other proposals are required in some places, and they therefore have my support. Roads and trails, however, offer much-needed relief to Montana and similar States, and all of us should therefore favor them. I am sure we nearly all do.

A letter I have just received from the chairman of the Montana Highway Commission says that this bill, with its provisions which will make available funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the handling of State debentures, will enable about $3,400,000 in Federal-aid contracts to be entered into in Montana, putting 2,000 men to work, directly and indirectly; and that these other emergency road items will allow further contracts so that within from 60 to 90 days 5,000 men can be put to work in my State. To do that would take care of probably 25,000 people through the working season.

In addition to that there is a due proportion of the $3,000,000 here appropriated under authorization of the act of January 31, 1931, for national park approach roads and roads in the national parks. That act is one I introduced, and this appropriation under it will give added employment to some hundreds of men. There are also funds for roads on Indian reservations, for the development of the lands of the Indians and the employment of the Indians. That item is $1,000,000, and it will mean many thousands of dollars on the Montana reservations. Allocations under these two items are not made by the highway commission, and are therefore not included in the total estimated labor referred to by our highway chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I use my State only as an example of what good these road items will accomplish in many States. The emergency funds for roads and trails in the national forests will not only furnish work but will add to the safety and protection of these great reservoirs of national wealth. They are an enduring investment.

Let no one, Mr. Chairman, belittle the value of these road and trail items in this relief measure. They not only provide for labor on the Federal aid system in every nook and corner of the entire United States, but in their particular reference to national forests, national parks, and their approaches, Indian reservations, and the public domain they provide the element of balance to make this measure effective in the West as well as in the East and the South.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I just requested one moment in order to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] a question as to the agricultural provisions of this bill. I wish to point out that the Senate yesterday, in considering the Wagner relief bill, concerning the use of $40,000,000 for financing the exporting of agricultural products, of which products we have surpluses, eliminated cotton from such scheme of financing. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois what provision there is in this bill having reference to the exportation of agricultural products.

Mr. RAINEY. The provision in this bill would apply to cotton and to all agricultural products.

Mr. CELLER. In one bill the limitation as to kind of products and amount of money to be expended is left to the discretion of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. RAINEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. CELLER. I desire to insert at this point a wire which I have received from the president of the New York Produce Exchange concerning this important matter, which reads as follows:

NEW YORK, July 12, 1932.

Hon. EMANUEL CELLER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The New York Produce Exchange, comprising over 1,500 members, regularly engaged in purchase and sale of export commodities, primarily grain, cotton, by-products, provisions, and flour, urge you to vigorously protest against the employment of Reconstruction Finance Corporation funds in any manner, direct or indirect, for the purpose of selling foreigners our commodities of whatever description on credit. There is not the slightest necessity for accepting doubtful I O U's from foreigners who have been accustomed to pay cash for decades and can well afford to continue so doing. Course contemplated by Reconstruction Finance Corporation would demoralize export trade of our country, cripple our marketing machinery, and as usual our taxpayers would foot the bill. Other leading world commodity exporting countries, namely, Canada, Australia, Russia, and Argentina sell their export surpluses in world markets for cash and never deviate from it. Why should we?

SAMUEL KNIGHTON,
President New York Produce Exchange.

In this connection also I wish to include in the RECORD a very important letter sent to Senator R. F. WAGNER, of my State, by Mr. W. W. Cohen, of New York, a former Member of this House and a gentleman for whose wisdom I have the most profound respect. The letter is as follows:

JUNE 24, 1932.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I notice in the newspapers that there have been $40,000,000 allocated in your bill for financing the exporting of commodities.

I am terribly surprised that this was put into the bill, because if commodities are sold to good merchants in Europe they do not need credit; and if they are sold to merchants whose credit is not good, it merely means that the Government will not be paid for their merchandise, and these people will be able to injure and kill the reputable merchant who is now doing business in Europe, and upon whom the Government depends for part of its tax income.

Every pound of cotton and every bushel of grain that is needed by the foreign merchant is being supplied by this country in cotton and other countries in grain.

The reason we can not compete with them in grain is that, being on a gold basis and the other countries being on a bimetal basis, they automatically have an advantage over us on account of exchange, and our wheat is selling in Chicago within about 2 cents of what it is selling in Liverpool, and from which must either be added or deducted the cost of transportation, which is the normal difference of about 11 cents.

Regarding our cotton, the spinners of Europe are in the same condition as the spinners here, namely, "buying from hand to mouth," and this attempt to stimulate business is not going to make any new channels of business, but merely choke up the old channels, and will dislocate regular business, the same as the Farm Board activities have been doing for the past three years.

I sincerely hope that you can see your way clear at your conference meeting to in some way or other have this $40,000,000 taken out of your bill for foreign farm credits. This $40,000,000, used in New York for building purposes, would give much more employment and do much more good, and being used for this purpose would automatically give just that much greater buying power to our own country, which would certainly use up some of our wheat and cotton through the regular channels of business.

Hoping you are in position to change this part of your bill, I am,
Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM W. COHEN.

I herewith serve warning that there is dynamite in these provisions. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has given us no cause for alarm. I believe it has conducted itself with considerable efficiency. I know of nothing to the contrary. I do know, however, that the administration, in the ordinary course of events, has a strong influence over it. This is natural. Mr. Hoover is running for reelection. It looks at the present time as though the Democratic candidates would carry several of the western wheat States. The farmers are dissatisfied with the low condition of affairs and the ruinous prices of their crops. It would be possible under these provisions of the bill for the administration to force the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to spend a great sum of money just prior to election in purchasing vast quantities of wheat, and thereby advance its price. This would have the effect of making the farmers in those States happy and contented. It might have the result of winning those States for the Republican Party. This would be done at the cost of the taxpayers. It would be a shocking thing to do, yet it is possible. I do not believe the Republican managers would hesitate to take such a step, bold and dastardly as it is.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER].

Mr. SABATH. Will the talented and accommodating gentleman yield to me one minute to ask the chairman a question?

Mr. KELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois with pleasure.

Mr. SABATH. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question for the purpose of securing information. Under the mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States, the Sanitary Board of Cook County is obliged to proceed with certain sewage-disposal improvements that will require a great deal of labor. This act provides that self-supporting and financially solvent corporations or municipalities may borrow money. I want to know from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] whether he is of the opinion that, under this provision, the Sanitary Board of Cook County will be able to qualify for a loan. I believe it can, and should.

Mr. RAINEY. I am under the impression that if they have a self-liquidating project, they can borrow money. I think that is about the end of it.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, there are in the United States at the present time no less than 10,000,000 men who are unwillingly idle. It was within the power of this Congress and the President of the United States to have provided work for that number of men, if we had had the courage and the vision to do it.

Our adjournment without providing for that shows entirely our lack of vision and our lack of courage in this crisis. I say to you very frankly that if I vote for this bill I shall do it under protest, because it is a shameless surrender of the right of this House to provide the jobs that are absolutely required in this country if we are to meet this terrible emergency.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] has made a suggestion to you that I want further to call to your attention. The gentleman called attention to what occurred a few days ago in the very conservative city of St. Louis. In my judgment, in the next three months this body will be called back here and directed by the sentiment of this country, that will brook no delay, that will accept no alibi from Congress or the President, to provide the very jobs that we ought to provide at the present time.

We have done only five things here that gave promise, and none of the five has been carried through. The first was the emergency currency law, known as the Glass-Steagall bill, the original of which was hamstrung at the orders of the President, because instead of being left automatic in its operation it was turned over to the tender mercies of a Federal reserve system entirely out of sympathy with the idea of an automatic, certain, but properly limited expansion of the currency. It has not, therefore, been of any use, and is not being used, even though it was announced as the President's trump card for the restoration of prosperity.

The second one is the Goldsborough bill, which provided for the general policy of restoring the commodity-price level. This bill passed the House by an overwhelming vote, but the Senate appears to fear to announce a general policy along this line, even though it be clear that nothing less can hope to stem the financial flood sweeping us constantly toward the abyss of economic ruin. I am going to vote for the Senate substitute because it is better than nothing. The increase of money, however, will go into the banks—nearly a billion dollars of it—but it will there be largely hoarded and frozen from service to the people, because the banks are not loaning and can not loan money unless and until it is made absolutely certain that the Government is going to expand and keep on expanding currency until it becomes more profitable to invest money than it is to hoard money.

The third bill which gave promise was the Steagall bank guaranty bill which also passed this House. It recognized the all-important fact that the restoration of prosperity depends to a large extent upon the restoration of the national credit stream—the restoration of the use of bank checks, the people's money, back to the level of 1928 and 1929, when more than a trillion dollars of business was carried on within the United States in each of those years. It wisely provided for the security of the money of the depositors in our banks, the same as is now provided for the United States Government, the States, counties, municipalities, school treasurers, and other official trustees of moneys.

The fourth was the Patman-Owen bill for the payment of $2,200,000,000 to the holders of bonus certificates. Be it said to the credit of this House that that bill also passed this body. More than any other bill, this bill, if it had been enacted into law, would have provided the wide distribution of new money, which must be had before we can hope for a return of prosperity.

The fifth was the Garner bill that provided for a widespread public-works program that would have put more than a million men to work. However, as soon as that proposal to put men to work was put forward, the same shadow at once appeared that has cast its gloomy image over the activities of this body from the beginning of the session in December.

At the very moment that Congress met the same administration, under whose control had arisen and developed the most devastating panic and succeeding depression in all our history, appeared before the committees of this body and behind closed doors presented a program for the cure of those very conditions for the coming of which this administration was solely responsible. These Representatives of the administration warned us most ominously that unless the President's program were followed that still greater disaster would overwhelm us.

Instead of understanding and announcing the truth that an administration which permits the coming of such conditions is clearly incapable of curing those conditions and ourselves launching out on an independent course of the heroic proportions necessary to meet this gigantic cataclysm, we quite mistakenly agreed to follow the administration which had failed.

We have carried out the President's program in full, and with what results? The commodity-price level has sagged enormously; property values have reached the lowest point in our history; the sale of farms and homes for nonpayment of taxes in these seven months is greater than in all the years of our history combined. We are in the grasp of the deluge, grabbing only at straws.

The President of the United States, instead of awaiting the program to be worked out by the conference committee of the House and Senate on the Garner-Wagner bill, constantly interfered by advising what he would or would not accept. Even when the conferees had come to final agreement, he insisted that a committee should wait on him and receive their orders from "the man with the veto." This committee gave up most of the things for which the House and Senate had contended. Even this was not sufficient; the President would only have what he wanted without regard to what the legislative branch of the Government wanted, and as a result vetoed the bill upon which the conference committee had unanimously agreed. We have therefore finally done, with the passage of this bill, all the things which the President has asked us to do. He apparently believed that his prescriptions would remedy all our difficulties. Let us see what was the result. The President took charge of his very own depression, of his own unemployment, of his own starvation. He proposed his own remedies for his own diseases. He announced he would not stand for doles. By his own acts he has now denied work to men. He denied the right of the United States Government to prevent starvation. I ask, therefore, when a man is denied work and at the same time denied food, what is he to do? By his veto the President has accepted full responsibility for himself and his party, not only for the panic and depression which they at least permitted to come about, but he and his party have also accepted full responsibility for the failure to remedy those conditions. Every man in enforced idleness has been denied any remedy except those which the President has suggested, every one of which has ignominously failed. They told us we can not sell bonds to put men to work; that the United States was broke; that we had no credit left; that it would ruin the bond market. But this Congress at the behest of the President has granted to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation $4,000,000,000 of the people's credit to be used to save the financial institutions of this country.

If $4,000,000,000 had been voted last December or January to the putting of men to work what a different story there would be to tell. We would be climbing out of this slough of despond all along the line. I want to contrast these two plans. The latter, which I proposed upon my entrance into Congress, and for which I have stood from that day until this. Because I see clearly that only by putting men to work can they buy the farmer's produce. Only by restoring the commodity-price level can the farmers of this country hope to pay their debts. I have worked to bring about these two requirements by every means which would contribute to these ends, in cooperation with a majority of this House, but have been overshadowed by the threat of a veto of the administration, which, more than any other administration in history, proves how deeply a failure of government may affect the people of it.

This President's bill may be a little better than nothing, but it is so bad, it falls so far short of the requirements to meet this unprecedented condition, that every man here today will, before the next three months have passed, regret down deep in his heart that this body has failed completely and entirely to provide the work that we should have provided here before we agreed to adjournment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

All time has expired.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I have sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. RAINEY: On page 9, line 6, after the word "sec." insert the following: "and under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act."

Mr. RAINEY. May I ask the gentleman from Oregon if we can agree on the time?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rules there are only five minutes on the side allowed for debate on each amendment.

Mr. RAINEY. The rule is satisfactory.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman agree to 15 minutes on the side?

Mr. RAINEY. The rules limit debate to five minutes a side.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, may the amendment be again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, it will hardly be necessary for me to take five minutes to explain this amendment. It affects loans hereafter to be made.

The text of the bill requires an accounting, a statement only as to loans made under this act. The object of the amendment is to compel the filing of an account or statement of loans hereafter made under the original Reconstruction Finance Corporation act in order that the people of the United States who may possibly sustain losses at some time in the future on account of the operation of this act may know what becomes of their money.

The charge is being made throughout the country that $80,000,000 of this money has been loaned to the bank of a former member of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. As a matter of fact, my information is that the amount was only $10,000,000, although more than that could have been obtained by his bank if it needed it. Now, if this statement were made it would relieve this particular bank of the charge of having obtained on account of the influence of its president this large amount of money.

It is contended as to future loans, made to small banks throughout the country, that if through information filed here with the Clerk of the House of Representatives it becomes known that a small bank has borrowed $100,000, it might have the effect of making a run on that bank. I do not agree with this statement at all.

It will have the effect of showing that the bank is solvent and can borrow because banks are compelled to borrow on adequate security under this act, and under the old act. This amendment simply broadens the accounting requirements in order that the people may be fully advised as to what is being done with their money—the use that is made of it.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. If future loans are to be made public why should not the same requirement apply to loans that have already been made?

Mr. RAINEY. Maybe it should, but the amendment I am requested to present by the committee only covers loans made in the future.

Mr. PARSONS. Why should it not also cover loans that have been made?

Mr. RAINEY. All I can say to the gentleman is that the amendment does not cover them.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. I yield.

Mr. STEAGALL. The situation is that under the original law loans were not required to be published, and borrowers borrowed with this understanding. There might be—although I do not think there are—instances where applicants would not want it known and who might not have applied for loans had they known the facts had to be published.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TREADWAY. How much time is there on this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rules there are five minutes of debate on each side. The gentleman from Illinois has consumed five minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois is directly contrary to the agreements that have been entered into by both sides on this rule in connection with the passage and early approval of this bill.

It is contrary to the wishes of the Treasury Department that this amendment be adopted. It is perfectly fair to state that the amendment is being insisted upon by the Speaker of this House. We might just as well know exactly where we stand.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I would like to complete my statement.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I would like to ask the gentleman if the President will veto the bill if this amendment is included.

Mr. TREADWAY. I have nothing to say as to that feature of it; but I do say it would be absolutely destructive of the banking industry of this country to adopt this amendment. No bank is coming to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and ask for a loan when it knows its name and the amount borrowed will be broadcast over the country. It is an admission of weakness on the part of a bank to do that, and therefore you are absolutely tying up the proposition and spoiling the merits of the loans which banks may secure under the broadening of the base of this item.

I think it is a vicious amendment that ought to be voted down. It ought to be voted down not only on its merits, but likewise it ought to be voted down in view of the fact we are endeavoring here to-day to secure a bill absolutely in harmony with the wishes of the administration. This is in harmony with somebody who has been beaten in his efforts in the past and it will cause indefinite runs on banks.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Was it not understood that we were going to bring this bill out exactly as it had been agreed upon?

Mr. TREADWAY. That was the positive understanding; it was the absolute understanding of the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee; and it was the understanding at the White House conference in which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] participated yesterday. I venture to say that the offering of this amendment is not in conformity with the personal wishes of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SNELL. I had that understanding no later than this morning and this amendment ought to be beaten.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman's understanding was with the Speaker of the House, who is now trying to force this down our throats.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. PARSONS. Is it the duty of the Congress of the United States to legislate for all the people of the country, or for a few people, or, in this instance, for one man?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; but it is not our duty to legislate in accordance with the absolute dictation of the vice presidential candidate.

Mr. PARSONS. Nor for the presidential candidate either.

Mr. TREADWAY. The President of the United States is in authority. The other man wants to get there, but he will not get there through these methods. Those are the facts of the case, and this will come back home to the American people.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TREADWAY. If the gentleman will ask a sensible question, I will.

Mr. PARSONS. Is the President as much of an authority on this question as he has been on prosperity for the last two years?

Mr. TREADWAY. He is an authority and in authority, and he will exercise that authority. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back one minute.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes on the merits of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition for the one minute remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for one minute.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, this provision has not been in any bill that has passed either the House or the Senate up to the present moment. It simply means this, so far as the banks are concerned: Whenever a bank wants a loan to cover its assets and to protect its depositors, it will be heralded throughout the locality in 30 days or less thereafter that such a bank has found it necessary to obtain a loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in order to meet its obligations. You will destroy the safety and security of that bank if you permit that information to become immediately public.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt the committee divided and there were—ayes 125, noes 138.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. RAINEY and Mr. HAWLEY.

The committee again divided and the tellers reported that there were ayes, 158; noes, 152.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer another committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] rise?

Mr. MAPES. To submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. Title III of the bill appropriates $322,224,000 for the construction of roads and trails, and for the construction of certain buildings, and for other purposes. My information is that $136,000,000 of this total are appropriated unconditionally for the construction of roads and trails, and the balance of the appropriation, or $186,224,000, is subject——

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. MAPES. I am coming to that, if the Chair will permit.

The balance is subject to the condition or can not be expended unless the Secretary of the Treasury certifies to the President that the amount necessary for such expenditure is available or can be obtained without interference with current financing operations of the Government. I desire to ask the Chair whether, under the rule under which this legislation is being considered, it would be in order to offer an amendment to strike out the language on pages 27 and 28, as follows:

Except the amount for expenditure under paragraph (1) or (2) of subsection (a).

So that if the amendment should be adopted, the entire appropriation carried in Title III, the amount appropriated for roads and trails, as well as the rest, could not be expended unless the Secretary of the Treasury certifies to the President that the amount necessary for such expenditure is available or can be obtained without interference with current financing operations of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. No amendment, under the rule, can be offered except by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means. This is the express language of the rule under which we are operating.

Mr. MAPES. So the Chair holds that I could not, under the rule, offer such an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so holds.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer another committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. RAINEY: Page 9, line 8, after the word "amount," insert the following: "and rate of interest."

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is perfectly simple. It carries out the subject matter of the first amendment and is really a part of it, so that when the statement is filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives it will show not only the amount of the loans and the names of the borrowers, but the rate of interest the borrowers are required to pay. This is all there is to the amendment and is all the explanation I desire to make.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, there was no real difference of opinion in the committee in regard to this particular amendment. It adds the item of interest to the matters that may be published under the provision of the section as now amended, and may not itself be subject to much objection. However, I again want to call attention to the danger and the peril which is involved to all banking institutions, and particularly to the small banks, in the amendment that has just been adopted.

When it is published to the world that a bank has pledged all of its available, good assets, all of its first-class securities, to secure a loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to secure a loan, which loan will necessarily cover only a part of the deposits in the bank, you have started a run upon that bank the moment such information is given to the public.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BLACK. Did the publicity attending the loan to the Dawes bank have an ill effect on the bank?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will say to the gentleman that that bank obtained sufficient money and sufficient credit to cover every dollar of its deposits. That bank was unusually well situated.

Mr. BLACK. It received much publicity, and the publicity about that loan did not do any harm.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No ordinary bank can get a sufficient loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or from any clearing house or any association of banks to cover all of its deposits.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I am sorry, but I can not yield now.

I repeat that when the loan is made to a bank it will be only for a part of the deposits, and its best assets, its liquid securities, will all go to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and all of the depositors of the bank and all of its creditors will have notice that these securities have been hypothecated, and that so far as their claims are concerned they have been relegated to what sometimes is called "the cats and dogs" of securities, which accumulate in almost every financial institution in the course of years.

I want to warn the House that this matter is of such peril that we are endangering every financial institution that may be compelled to seek a loan.

Why is it that the banks up to this time have not availed themselves, as we expected, of the facilities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation? Simply because they did not want to disclose and let it be known, even through rumor, that they had been compelled to go to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for help. In the original act creating the Reconstruction Finance Corporation it is provided that the board every three months shall make a complete report of the aggregate loans to each of the classes of borrowers and the number of borrowers in each class, but there is no provision requiring the giving of the name of the bank, the amount of money that has been lent to a particular bank, and all the other incidental details in regard to it.

This is the first time that such a provision comes into this legislation by any legislative action. It did occur in the original Wagner amendment, which was before the Senate yesterday afternoon, but the Senator himself took it out of the proposal which he offered as an amendment to the home loan bank bill yesterday. It was not in the original conference report. It was not in the original Garner bill and it was not in the original Wagner bill. It was not in the bill introduced yesterday by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], which had the approval of all interested parties. We are embarking to-day, after a few minutes of discussion in the Committee on Ways and Means——

Mr. CROWE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No; I can not yield.

We are embarking to-day, after a brief discussion of 10 minutes on this floor——

Mr. CROWE. Every bank publishes a statement.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Every bank publishes a statement, yes; but it does not publish the fact that the bank has gone to this extraordinary institution, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, for the purpose of protecting its stability, its security, and its very existence.

Mr. Chairman, the requirement for monthly reports of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as to its operations under the pending bill does not have the objections I am urging to the extension of this requirement to the original purposes and operations of the corporation. The pending bill provides for loans in the aid of employment and not for the purpose of protecting and maintaining the general credit structure of the Nation, as does the original act. In its very nature, a loan designed to strengthen a purely financial institution should not be used to disclose the weakness or vulnerability of such an institution. If a banking institution is to be subjected to such a disclosure, the loan or assistance given it should be sufficient to cover its total liabilities, or at least every hazard of extraordinary withdrawals of its deposits. We must not use an agency created for relief and stabilization in a way to cause new disorder and catastrophe.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have two minutes remaining.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I raise the question of order that a Member, under the 5-minute rule of the House, can not have recognition on two different occasions on the same amendment. The gentleman has been recognized and yielded the floor and did not reserve his time.

The regular order was demanded.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am discussing the rules of the House, and I am discussing the regular order. It would have been the privilege of the gentleman from Illinois after one minute of discussion to have closed debate, and if the committee had voted the matter up that would have been sufficient. The gentleman can not now ask recognition a second time under the rules, because he has been recognized once.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that the point of the gentleman from Wisconsin is well taken.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that motion is not in order under the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order under the rule.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

Mr. DE PRIEST. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAINEY), there were 153 ayes and 136 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the committee rises automatically.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12946, and, pursuant to House Resolution 275, he reported the bill back to the House with two amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. HAWLEY. I demand a separate vote on the amendment to page 9, line 6, reading:

And under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 6, after the word "section," insert the following: "and under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 170, nays 169, answered "present" 2, not voting 90, as follows:

Until further notice:

Mr. Corning with Mr. Frear.
Mr. Mansfield with Mr. Nelson of Wisconsin.
Mr. Glover with Mr. Peavey.
Mr. Thomason with Mr. Taylor of Tennessee.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL], so I withdraw my vote of "aye" and answer "present."

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. TURPIN, is absent on account of illness. If here, he would vote "no."

Mr. CAMPBELL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. CHIPERFIELD. I therefore withdraw my vote of "aye" and answer "present."

The SPEAKER. On this vote the yeas are 169 and the nays 169. The Chair votes "aye," and the amendment is agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a recapitulation of the vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks for a recapitulation of the vote. That question is entirely within the discretion of the Chair. The Chair believes, however, in the interest of fairness and correctness the vote ought to be recapitulated. Therefore he will order a recapitulation of the vote.

The Clerk recapitulated the vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the other amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nay were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 296, nays 46, not voting 88, as follows:

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. CANFIELD, is unavoidably absent. I am authorized to state that if he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. MONTAGUE, is absent on official business. If present, he would vote "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. RAINEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Crockett, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 9642, an act to authorize supplemental appropriations for emergency highway construction, with a view to increasing employment.

The message also announced that the Senate recedes from its amendment No. 32 to the bill (H. R. 11897) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, and agrees to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 54, 60, 62, 80, and 87 to said bill.

The message also announced that, pursuant to the provision of House Concurrent Resolution No. 26, to establish a commission to be known as the United States Roanoke Colony Commission to report a plan and program for the celebration in 1934 of the three hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the birth of English-speaking civilization in America on Roanoke Island, N. C., the Vice President appointed Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas, Mr. MOSES, and Mr. HAWES members of said commission on the part of the Senate.

EMERGENCY HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks the attention of the House, and particularly the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY]. The Chair is advised on what he thinks is the best authority that the Senators who carry with them the leadership in the Senate say that the quickest way by which they can consider the relief bill just passed under their rules would be for the House to consider at the present time the original Almon House roads bill (H. R. 9642), which has come to the House with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment attaching thereto the relief bill which has just been passed, and ask for a conference. These gentlemen say in case the House does that, the Senate will agree to a conference and that the conferees will be able to consider the differences within 30 minutes.

Also, although the bill H. R. 9642 is a House bill coming from the Committee on Roads, the Chair would take the responsibility of appointing on the conference committee the original Members who were on the conference committee that brought about the relief bill we voted on a few days ago; in other words, the three ranking members of the Committee on Ways and Means on the Democratic side and the two ranking members of that committee on the Republican side. The Chair makes this statement in view of the fact that he assumes that most gentlemen would like to go home—at least the Chair would. [Applause.] The object is to facilitate the matter and bring the minds of the two Houses together.

The Chair is further advised, if this bill is sent over to the Senate, that under their rules it must go to the committee and must be reported from the committee to the Senate. Of course, that would require a day, so that they could not do anything before to-morrow. The Chair makes that statement for the benefit of the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I am sure the House wants to do that, to accelerate this proposition as much as possible. Unless the minority leader, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], has some objection to it, I think that should be done.

The SPEAKER. The way in which this can be done, it occurs to the Chair, is to ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 9642) to authorize supplemental appropriations for emergency highway construction, with a view to increasing employment, with the Senate amendments thereto, concur in Senate amendment No. 1 with an amendment substituting the provisions of the relief bill just passed, disagree to Senate amendment No. 2, and ask for a conference. That can be done in one unanimous-consent request.

Mr. RAINEY. I think that is the best way.

Mr. MAPES. Would not the proper motion be to agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment, substituting the House bill?

The SPEAKER. That would be the proper way.

Mr. RAINEY. I make that request, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SCHAFER. If the unanimous-consent request is granted, in view of the Speaker's statement that many of the Members desire to expedite the passage of the relief bill and go home, would that foreclose the opportunity to move to suspend the rules and modify the Volstead Act?

The SPEAKER. Oh, no. That subject is always in order for conversation.

Mr. SCHAFER. And further, if the unanimous consent be granted, will the Speaker of the House recognize me or some other Member to suspend the rules and immediately modify the Volstead Act?

The SPEAKER. Any time the gentleman can get unanimous consent on anything involving the liquor question, the Chair will recognize the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALMON. Could not the House agree to the Senate amendment? The bill that just came over is a House bill; and if we agree to the Senate amendment, that would end this controversy and debate, and the bill could be sent to the White House immediately.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has assurances from gentlemen who handled this legislation that they will not agree to these amendments by the Senate, and it would take unanimous consent for their consideration. The question is solely whether Members want to facilitate the passage of the bill by substituting the provisions of the House bill for the Senate amendment to the roads bill. If that is done, then it will all be in conference.

If this is messaged to the Senate within the next 10 minutes, within 30 minutes from this time the House and Senate conferees could be in conference, and the Chair has not the slightest doubt they could iron out their differences within one hour, and this bill could be passed to-day.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I am very anxious to facilitate the passage of this law. I think the suggestion that has been made by the majority leader [Mr. RAINEY] is all right; and as far as I am concerned, I shall not object, and I shall ask the Members on this side of the House to agree to that unanimous-consent request. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 9642) to authorize supplemental appropriations for emergency highway construction, with a view to increasing employment, with Senate amendment; concur in Senate amendment No. 1, with an amendment substituting the provisions of H. R. 12946; disagree to Senate amendment No. 2; and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SNELL. I think the gentleman should have asked that our bill be put on as an amendment.

The SPEAKER. That was included in the unanimous-consent request.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. COLLIER, RAINEY, DOUGHTON, HAWLEY, and TREADWAY.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech delivered by the Secretary of the Treasury at Faneuil Hall, in Boston, on Monday night.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take 5 or 10 minutes to recognize Members to extend their own remarks in the RECORD, since objection has been made for all Members to extend their remarks until the last CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is printed. The Chair thinks that should be the rule; but in case it can not be, the Chair will recognize just as many as he can for that purpose.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I make that request at this time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not think we should have that request propounded. I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. SABATH. What is the request?

Mr. PURNELL. My request was to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech delivered by the Secretary of the Treasury in Faneuil Hall, Boston, on Monday night.

Mr. SABATH. Reserving the right to object, on what subject was that?

Mr. PURNELL. On the state of the Union. It contains much enlightenment for the gentleman if he will read it.

Mr. SABATH. It was not on the question of prohibition, was it?

Mr. PURNELL. No.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana that if we start putting political speeches in the RECORD, that consent must be general, and one in the future should not bar this. The Chair thinks the gentleman should wait and make the same unanimous-consent request with reference to both parties having an opportunity to insert political speeches in the RECORD. That seems to be the fair thing.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the administration of Woodrow Wilson, whose spirit is now leading the hosts of the Democratic Party in the forthcoming campaign.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on a very interesting subject. Is there objection?

Mr. SABATH. Reserving the right to object, if I thought the gentleman from Wisconsin would put in the real, true conditions and achievements of former President Woodrow Wilson, I would not object; but I am fearful that the gentleman will put in something that is not fair or correct.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. Since the Democratic nominee has announced he is not leading the Democratic Party but the spirit of Woodrow Wilson is leading it, I think the gentleman from Illinois, as a good Democrat, as well as the people of the country, ought to have some facts regarding the administration of Woodrow Wilson.

Mr. SABATH. Oh, the people have plenty of facts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is it possible, under a grant of permission to extend remarks now being given to individual Members, to make two distinct extensions of a Member's own remarks?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must make separate requests under the present rule. Under the general rule that would be possible. But not under the present rule.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD until the last issue of the RECORD.

Mr. RAINEY. I object for the present. I will make the request later.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I thought the gentleman made that request a while ago.

Mr. RAINEY. I did; but somebody objected.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I objected.

The SPEAKER. Permit the Chair to ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LAUSANNE—ANOTHER LINK IN THE CHAIN OF EVENTS TO CANCEL WAR DEBTS DUE THE UNITED STATES

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD a speech I am to make to-morrow on war debts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, ever since the war the question has been agitated before the public as to whether the United States ought to cancel the allied debts. The earlier argument ran that the United States had done little more than loan money and that it should regard the money loaned as a subsidy; but when, as time went on, it was recognized that in the summer of 1918 the allied armies were on the verge of complete defeat and that the newly arrived American Army was the decisive military element that turned defeat into victory there was but little left of that argument. In 1922 the famous Balfour note proclaimed that Britain had made the loans in America in order to lend the money to her allies and offered to cancel the loans of her allies provided the United States would cancel the British loans. But it was found that the money which Britain had borrowed from the United States was used to purchase food for the English people and even to finance enterprises in which Britain was in competition with America and that the proposal was not as simple as it seemed to be. Later it was argued that cancellation of the debts would be to the commercial interest of the United States and that it would realize greater profits in trade than the debt payments amounted to, but this was not a very persuasive argument, as the United States already enjoyed a large and favorable balance of trade.

The debts were finally funded upon the basis of the debtor's capacity to pay, and it should be noted that this capacity was estimated without reference to reparation payments from Germany. The sums loaned before the armistice were virtually canceled and the debts as funded represented money loaned for reconstruction purposes. The interest rates are low and the annual payments are well within the capacity of the debtor to pay. I do not think that there is much doubt that the general opinion has come to prevail here that the debts ought not to be canceled and that to forgive them would be only to shift the burden to the shoulders of the American taxpayers, which would be an act of gross injustice.

This opinion that the debts ought not to be canceled has been translated into definite policy by the United States Government. To the argument that the allied governments ought not to pay anything to America unless they first received the money from Germany in reparations our Government has consistently maintained the position that there is no connection between German reparations and allied debts to the United States, and that the Allies are able and obligated to pay these sums without any reference to what they receive from Germany. As a matter of fact, the preliminary peace agreement which President Wilson made with Germany limited reparations to a much smaller sum than that which was imposed by the treaty of Versailles, which raises the question of the validity of the treaty. The American people are to be congratulated that their Government never became a party to that treaty and that it did not involve them, therefore, in the receipt of German reparations. With reference to the allied debts, our Government has taken the position that the debt agreements are a matter between the United States and each debtor nation separately, and that there is no reason whatever for considering the allied debts collectively as a single question.

The Hoover moratorium proposed a year ago last month was an ill-considered move to placate political and financial clamor from Europe, and was rendered wholly valueless when the Franco-American agreement of July 6, exempting the unconditional annuities of the Young plan from its operation, was made a part of it. It did infinite harm by raising false hopes in Europe that plans of debt reduction or cancellation are entertained here. It did not succeed, however, in sweeping the United States from its chosen position, because the Congress last December, in authorizing a one year's suspension of payments under it, expressly declared that there will be no reduction or cancellation of the allied debts.

Pursuant to this action by Congress, our State Department in December, 1931, made the position of the Government of the United States clear to Europe through a memorandum communicated by Secretary Stimson to Ambassador Claudel, the substance of which was as follows:

First. There is no connection between war debts and reparations.

Second. The European powers must take the initiative on reparations.

Third. A demand for a new debts moratorium could not obtain approval in Congress, and the Senate opposes a cancellation or reduction of the debts.

Fourth. The United States Government would look with displeasure on the formation of a united front by the debtor nations.

Fifth. The existing debt arrangements, having been concluded separately, can be eventually revised only by separate accords.

Until then the European governments had maintained the hope that the United States might be induced to cancel the debts, and this hope had been particularly strong under the yielding and shifting policy of the present administration, but the action of the Congress in December brought the conviction that this hope was groundless.

The almost simultaneous declaration by a Germany now dominated by the Hitler policies that Germany would pay no more "war tribute" spelled the end of the Young plan and of reparations. The reaction to these two events in the Allied foreign offices was immediate, and the decision was made then that when Germany ceased to pay reparations to the Allies, the Allies would cease to make payments to America. The agreements at Lausanne the other day were settlements made in pursuance of a decision made last January when Sir Horace Rumbold, British ambassador at Berlin, informed his Government that Germany had decided to pay no more reparations. The press dispatches at that time indicate this clearly. One from Berlin on January 9 stated:

> The German Government to-day repudiated the stupendous reparation payments exacted by the peace treaty of Versailles, the Dawes and the Young plans. Europe now looks to France to make the first move to repudiate Europe's war debts to America.

A dispatch from London, stated to reflect the view of Whitehall, said:

> Reparations are now definitely ended and the United States may as well expect to be told that Europe will not pay her war debts.

A foreign-office spokesman intimated that Europe's chancellories are now confronted by the delicate problem of how to inform the United States that cancellation of war debts is expected, and he added that that step was up to France. "This is the hour for a showdown," said another, "the world has been trying to smooth over the fact, but the final word must now be said."

There is every indication that Great Britain will take the first step toward reconsideration of war debts; the ground work for this has been pretty well prepared. Mr. Andrew W. Mellon was sent as an ambassador to London, not an unfriendly act to this end to say the least. Then the already expressed attitude of the administration leader in the Senate, who was a delegate to the London Naval Conference, DAVID A. REED, to the effect that he would favor a reconsideration of Great Britain's debt to the United States, and the propaganda of the Carnegie Foundation through its president, Nicholas Murray Butler, which is always working to the end that the British-American union may be a reality, should be given thoughtful consideration.

Leading writers in France are saying that the Hoover moratorium forced Europe to unite as they did in the gentlemen's agreement recently at Lausanne against the United States, and that it was Hoover's interference in European affairs without consultation that lifted from Germany's back the costs of the war "but not the guilt," and that it is with thanks to Hoover and his moratorium that Germany, although she lost the war, has won the peace. We now can begin to understand what Woodrow Wilson meant when he said at the close of the war, "peace without victory."

Since 1924, when the Dawes plan was adopted, and shortly after which Great Britain, and later France, reestablished their depreciated currencies on a gold basis, we have had the 5-year period from 1924 to 1929 when European bond issues to the extent of billions were disposed of to American purchasers and vast loans were made to Europe by American banks. These billions invested in Europe are now, of course, a hazard. Already greatly depreciated in value, their fate depends greatly upon the character of the relations which are maintained between the United States and Europe. The holders of the private loans, or some of them, no doubt, will be inclined to advocate the cancellation of the allied debts.

The events which happened last December, then, crystallized a new allied policy.

For the last six months, therefore, the governments of Europe have been engaged upon perfecting the alliances against the United States which they have just announced at Lausanne. Our ponderous and expensive diplomacy has been focusing its efforts upon a disarmament conference at Geneva in the vain hope that the heavily armed nations of Europe might be induced to throw away their arms upon an intimation from our Government that in that case the United States might consider a reduction of the Allied debts. During those six months our State Department has shown no indication that it was aware at all of the plans taking form in Europe, and certainly it has done nothing to check their development. It has not kept American opinion informed but has filled the press with optimistic predictions that under American leadership Geneva would lead to a general disarmament in the interests of world peace.

In Congress there is much distrust to-day of the purposes of the Executive. The intimate and cordial relations of Norman H. Davis and Hugh Gibson, of the American delegation at the Geneva conference, with the allied negotiators at Lausanne in the face of the revelations of the past few days is a fact difficult to explain. What did Neville Chamberlain, Chancellor of the Exchequer, mean when he told the House of Commons on July 11 that the delegates at Lausanne had not only consulted each other but also representatives of the American Government. One can not help but recall in this connection the midnight meeting in the town midway between Lausanne and Geneva of Hugh Gibson and Norman H. Davis with Herriott, of France, and the open meeting in Lausanne the following day when the news of the attempted clandestine meeting of the night before took place following a telephone call from Washington. One must also recall the statement of Secretary Stimson, which had its effect on the final determination at Lausanne, to the effect that German reparations should not be entirely canceled.

In view of this can we say truthfully that the United States was not present at Lausanne and that the position of the United States was not known at Lausanne by MacDonald, Laval and Herriott (his successor), and Grandi? One must also remember that MacDonald, Laval, and Grandi were here, and very little of the understanding arrived at while they were here has been disclosed to the American public, but we now know that war debts and reparations and gold movements were discussed. Until the people of this country know these things fully, how can we know what took place at Lausanne?

Have these settlements been made with the previous approval of our Executive? Under the Lausanne agreement with Germany, reparations, except for a small sum, are canceled, but under a gentleman's agreement among the Allies the treaty with Germany will not be ratified or go into effect until a satisfactory settlement has been reached between them and their own creditors. If such settlements are not obtained, a new situation will arise, and the interested governments will confer on what is to be done. The situation will then be as before the Hoover moratorium.

The press dispatches indicate that most cordial personal relations are being maintained between our delegates at Geneva and the European delegates there as well as those at Lausanne. It is difficult to discern what causes there are for American cordiality in the presence of a general treaty settlement in Europe which demands the cancellation of the allied debts to the United States and of a supplementary Franco-British agreement that neither Government will make new arrangements with the United States without first consulting the other. Under this Franco-British agreement the two Governments promise to consult each other on all important matters interesting them which are calculated to suggest the wisdom of European cooperation, and neither can handle alone any problem affecting the interests of both countries.

One wonders what American diplomats in Europe have been doing during the past six months. Presumably they have had nothing whatever to do with the far-reaching negotiations which the Europeans have been carrying on with each other and which concern our interests vitally; apparently they have been entirely ignorant of what has been transpiring. They have been so quiet and have had so little information to convey to their own Government that we are now confronted with a fait accompli in the treaty of Lausanne and the Franco-British alliance.

Excepting the second heading, there is not one of the five points of policy in the memorandum which Secretary Stimson handed to Ambassador Claudel last December which is not defined and flaunted in the Lausanne settlements. There is not one of them which has been maintained and protected by this administration.

I have called the attention of the public many times to the purposes of the financial clauses in the treaty of Versailles. After fixing the German reparations at an impossible sum the negotiators of the treaty provided that negotiable bonds for the entire amount signed by Germany should be divided among the allied states and that each allied state might dispose of its share of the bonds upon the investment markets. There is no doubt that the allied governments hoped to dispose of billions of dollars' worth of these bonds in the United States. This was the purpose of the Dawes plan and of the Young plan. They centered their diplomatic efforts upon this purpose for 10 years after the war. It was in the hope of accomplishing this that they brought themselves reluctantly to the point of funding their war debts to us.

If they could realize billions of dollars from the sale of German reparation bonds here, it would be an easy matter to pay the installments on their debts to us out of these sums. But the final determination of Germany to pay no more reparations ended the existence of the billions in German reparation bonds and of the hope, therefore, that billions of dollars might be realized from their sale in the United States. It is simultaneously with the ending of this hope that the decision is reached to pay no more upon their war debts to us.

The executive branch of our Government since the ending of the war ought to have been in the hands of nationalists and not of internationalists. The treaty of Versailles was largely drawn in its financial aspects by the international bankers of New York, who were wholly committed to the plan of disposing of the German reparation bonds here. President Hoover was closely identified with their activities in the making of that treaty. Norman H. Davis, who in recent weeks has been so active as an American representative at Geneva and Lausanne, was one of four Americans who are almost wholly responsible for the financial settlements of the Versailles treaty. With the exception of President Coolidge's four years as an elected President, our Government has been continuously in the hands of men who have been putty in the hands of Europe.

These aggressive and alarming treaty settlements just made in Europe need never to have taken place and, considering the means of persuasion in our own hands, they could have been prevented by a firm, just, and patriotic policy on the part of the Executive. So long as American diplomacy is in the hands of those who wield it to-day, there must be vigilance in Congress, for it is in this body alone that the power and inclination may be found to safeguard the interests of the American people.

COST OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein an article written by myself in the Nation's Business magazine.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has that privilege if they are his own remarks or his own writing under permission to extend his own remarks. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, the most important problem facing American lawmakers to-day is how to bring about a reduction in the cost of government. It is the basic need of the times. As long as excessive and unreasonable taxes burden our people industry will be atrophied because our business men will be continually hard pressed to scrape together to pay taxes funds that should be devoted to productive enterprise. Unemployment and starvation will continue because money raised for taxes employs no one except the personnel of a ridiculously overmanned government, including a large number of useless tax-eating paternalistic bureaus and commissions of whom, so far as their part in the necessary economy of government is concerned, it might be said:

> They toil not, neither do they spin; and yet Solomon in all his glory was not so arrayed.

As long as these outrageous tax impositions continue we may expect industrial paralysis. Not only will funds be drained from healthy circulation to pay taxes but an enormous blight will be placed on productive employment by self-seeking rich people, whose first instinct is to rush to the haven of tax-exempt securities for investment whenever danger signals threaten normal employment-producing enterprises. Unless taxes are reduced and the cost of government returns to the level where normal processes may be resumed there will be no improvement of present distressing conditions. Banks will tighten their reserves, the rolls of unemployed will continue to grow, and dark and sinister panic will brood over the Nation.

It is more than passing strange to me, Mr. Speaker, that our statesmen do not see more clearly the need of the times. Our first and foremost duty is to put the ax to the root of bureaucracy, to proceed with an unsparing hand to strike these paternalistic, tax-eating excrescences off of the structure of government.

In this fight to redeem America from economic thralldom the United States Chamber of Commerce is pointing the way with a devotion to patriotic ideals and a clearness of vision that must challenge the admiration of all thinking people.

Mr. Merle Thorpe, editor of the chamber's publication, Nation's Business, has been a pioneer in spreading the only economic gospel that will accomplish the salvation of the country. With unflagging zeal and resolute courage he has carried on a good fight, making innumerable addresses to business groups, pointing out the insidious dangers of bureaucracy and the imperative need of reducing the cost of government. With his trenchant pen he has presented these facts and arguments in the columns of the great magazine of which he is the editor, always with a directness and clarity that he who runs may read and understand. I have faith to believe that sometime America will pass through the psychosis from which it is suffering, and when that better day comes the United States Chamber of Commerce and Mr. Thorpe will deserve the praise of all for the vision and sane leadership they are displaying in these years of stress.

Recently Nation's Business did me the honor to invite me to return for a brief while to my old avocation as a writer to record for its columns some of my observations in regard to the paternalism and extravagance with which the Government of the United States is shot through from turret to foundation stone. The subject is so big, the paternalism is so universal, the extravagances are so general and widespread that it was possible to glimpse only a few of the high places in the scope of a single magazine article, but I hope that my brief offering may have been useful at least to a small extent in directing attention to some of the fundamental weaknesses of our Government. By unanimous consent of the House I submit for publication in the RECORD my article in Nation's Business, June, 1932, as follows:

WE CAN'T SAVE UNLESS YOU HELP

For more than 30 years I have been observing the day-to-day course of governmental affairs in Washington. For more than 27 of those years, I watched from the Press Gallery. For the last several years I have been playing my small part in those events—but still observing them with a reportorial eye, I hope—on the floor of the House of Representatives.

During those three decades I have seen the development of what is to me an alarming and threatening trend in this Government—a trend toward increasing centralization of power in Washington, toward bureaucracy and paternalism. This trend has developed so quietly that the people have hardly been aware of it despite its threat to our liberties, indeed to our very conception of government.

It is a trend that is of especial concern to business men, not only because it entails a waste of million of tax dollars but because it involves a ceaseless and ever-widening invasion of corporate and individual rights. An inevitable accompaniment of bureaucracy is a lust for inquisitorial powers and the result is already visible in the swarms of agents, inspectors and other functionaries who prowl our land worrying, bluffing, and exasperating individuals and corporations alike.

I recall the day in 1907 when Senator Joseph B. Foraker, in an outburst of indignation, made this statement:

"The little band of 167 special deputies, agents, and inspectors on the pay rolls of the Government ten years ago has been swelled to an army of more than 3,000!"

Were the old Senator alive to-day to see the continued expansion of that "little band" I'm afraid words would utterly fail him. To-day the inquisitorial army of 3,000 of which he complained has grown to more than 20,000—nearly seven times that number. And this does not include the Secret Service, whose number and personnel are never disclosed, and numerous other governmental employees whose functions are definitely inquisitorial but who are not officially classified as agents, inspectors, examiners, or investigators. I have not the slightest doubt that the army of those who might properly be included in the espionage class totals more than 30,000.

In the Department of Agriculture alone there are 3,112 inspectors and agents, and enough others whose work is investigational in character to bring the total to more than 5,000.

The Post Office Department has 534 inspectors; the Department of Justice has 2,376 agents, 13 inspectors, and 158 examiners or investigators.

The Internal Revenue service of the Treasury Department has 2,727 agents, while the Customs Service employs 198 agents, 2,758 inspectors, and 257 examiners or investigators.

The Department of Labor reports 3,001 inspectors, and the Department of Commerce 1,257 inspectors, agents, investigators, or examiners.

BUREAUCRACY HURTS BUSINESS

Through this multiplicity of agents and inspectors and self-promulgated regulations, these Washington bureaus are putting innumerable fetters upon business, fetters which are already beginning to bind and hurt. There are business men in this country who even now are beginning to wish that they had looked after the preservation of their freedom while they still had freedom, for already they see a soft-gloved dictatorship, with its army of inspectors and agents, closing in upon them.

Examples of the domineering and exacting attitude which this bureaucracy is taking toward business men and others are plentiful. I know of an Indiana company which wished to manufacture a perfectly wholesome and nutritious food product and to sell it at moderate prices. But it is not permitted to do so—at least it can not safely go ahead—until a Washington bureau authorizes it to. So far the permission has not been forthcoming. Such examples could be multiplied. They are natural results of bureaucracy and its attendant paternalism.

The fact that, so far, this bureaucracy has largely hidden behind the cloak of benevolence renders its growth no less dangerous, because history has repeatedly proved that bureaucracy is the entering wedge of tyranny. The bureaucratic dictatorship which is swiftly being set up, although benevolent now, must, unless checked, become more and more domineering as its powers increase and its position becomes entrenched. Unless we curb its growth, all of us will be getting, as some of us already are, orders from Washington as to how, when, and where to conduct ourselves and our business. Already we labor under a multiplicity of laws which this paternalistic bureaucracy has fastened upon us in its constant search for new fields to invade.

Already we have bureaus whose activities range all the way from training grocery clerks to running railroads. How these bureaus, once established, grow can be illustrated by tracing the history of almost any one of them. Let's take, say, the Department of Agriculture's Bureau of Markets, or, to use its more recent name, the Bureau of Agricultural Economics.

This bureau was set up through an Agriculture Department appropriation bill approved March 4, 1913, which carried $50,000 for the new activity. In the Agriculture Department appropriation act for the fiscal year 1915, the new Bureau of Markets was given official standing and an appropriation of $200,000. In the same year activities in connection with rural organization were placed with the new bureau and a special appropriation of $40,000 voted for that purpose. Also in 1915 the cotton futures act, with an accompanying appropriation of $150,000, was passed and its administration placed with the bureau. Thus the total appropriation which the bureau controlled grew to $390,000.

For the fiscal year 1916, appropriations specifically for the marketing bureau totaled $484,050. The next year the Agricultural Department appropriation act included the $250,000 grain standards act and the $50,000 warehouse act. The appropriation direct to the marketing bureau was $872,590, and the total spent by the bureau $1,172,590—a considerable jump from the modest $50,000 set up only four years before.

By the fiscal year 1921, however, this bureau's appropriation had doubled again and was $2,538,709. Shortly thereafter, through one of the periodic reorganizations, the Bureau of Markets became the Bureau of Agricultural Economics. This bureau's appropriation for the current fiscal year is $5,731,336, or more than 116 times the amount it started with 19 years ago.

This is typical of the growth of Government bureaus and commissions. They are rolling snowballs. Once, before the truth of this statement had so firmly implanted itself in my mind, I thought I had found a Government commission that was not gifted with everlasting life. This was the National Screw Thread Commission, brought forth in 1918.

I was in the Press Gallery when the bill passed, and I gave three inward cheers, because, tacked on the end of the act, was a clause limiting the life of the Commission to six months.

Fourteen years have passed since then, and the National Screw Thread Commission is still going strong. It has attained a robust existence and an honored and permanent place in the Congressional Directory. Three times its life was extended. Congress got tired of this piecemeal business and finally made it a "continuing commission," so I suppose that the screw threaders will be with us from now on.

EVER MORE COSTLY BUREAUS

Every year this growth and extension of bureaucracy continue, with our Government developing more and more into a great, overshadowing bureaucratic despotism that is breaking down local self-government, invading the field of private initiative, and fastening burdens and restrictions on honest business. While we still have in Washington the great departments of Government which, presumably, exercise all executive functions, they now have been augmented by more than 40 commissions, boards, bureaus, and independent establishments. These bodies have reached out in all directions, ursurped governmental functions, and now spend a billion dollars annually.

I was brought up in the hard life of a farm family, where every dollar gained was thrice earned by sweat and toil. It wrenches my economic soul to see these millions shoveled out of the United States Treasury for any old project and under any old pretext. I have an old-fashioned idea that money—even tax money—still represents sweat and toil, and that it is the duty of officials occupying positions of public trust to see that public funds are wisely and economically administered. That, I think, is good business and good sense and the only policy on which to found a happy and contented state.

To see how that policy has been ignored one needs to spend only a few minutes in the division of bookkeeping and warrants of the Treasury Department. There he will find records which show annual peace-time appropriations skyrocketing from a billion dollars 15 years ago to five billions this year—from $11 per capita then to $38 per capita to-day.

How is all this money spent? I see answers to the question on every side here in Washington.

RAZING GOOD BUILDINGS

I see the eye-filling structure of the Post Office Department Building, a substantial 8-story edifice soon to be struck down—in its prime, so to speak—because its Romanesque style is out of harmony with the other public buildings being erected around it. Built in 1889 at a cost of $3,241,326, it soon will be replaced by a $10,300,000 structure with a façade more to the liking of the critics. This $10,300,000 is part of the $190,000,000 which Congress has appropriated for sites and erection of Government buildings in the Mall Triangle in Washington—a sum seven times greater than our expenditure for the great empire we acquired through the Louisiana Purchase.

Over in the Library of Congress I see a display of incunabula, acquired through an appropriation of $1,500,000, passed at the last session of Congress. When the bill was first proposed not more than a half-dozen members had ever heard the word "incunabula." The others rushed to dictionaries and found that it referred to "works of an early epoch; especially books printed before A. D. 1500."

After a brief and vigorous campaign, the owner of the books was in possession of a Treasury warrant for the million and a half and the Library was in possession of a collection of old books, which only about one expert scholar in 50 can read.

I see 16 officers of the United States Army being detailed this year to attend the Graduate School of Business Administration at Harvard University at a cost to the taxpayers of $600 each, aside from their salaries and allowances, and another officer of the Army being sent to the School of Journalism at Columbia University, at a cost of $332.

Contemplating the northern and southern boundaries of our country on my office map I vision the million-dollar-a-year waste going on along those borders in our overlapping customs-inspection service and immigration inspection. Take the case of an American returning from Mexico. He arrives at a port of entry. A customs official steps up and asks him some questions about his luggage. Then an immigration inspector steps forward and asks him where he lives. Why couldn't one official ask both questions? There's no good reason that I know of, yet we continue to maintain two sets of officers all along our borders. That is just one instance of overlapping.

Then there are the 48 industrial alcohol plants to which we issue permits to manufacture alcohol. At each plant the Government pays employees salaries totaling $7,075 a year. By a most liberal estimate, not more than 10 of these plants are required to supply our needs. Simply by withholding permits from 38 plants the Government could save $268,850 a year.

Other striking instances of waste and extravagance are found in the public printing. Going down into the basements of the Capitol and the House Office Building I see vast piles of obsolete, useless, and worthless documents and cloth-bound books, more than a million volumes waiting to be hauled away by the junk man. In 1911 a similar accumulation of a million volumes was destroyed or virtually given away as junk. The enormous stocks now on hand represent accretions since that year.

Under the time-honored method of distribution, whenever the Government issues a book on "The Malformations of the Doodle Bug" all members of the House are assigned exactly the same number of copies, though some may live in districts which never hear of a doodle bug. Those members never draw their doodle-bug books out of storage, and the unused volumes gather dust through the years until the junk man gets them.

The annual reports of the Government's department heads help to swell the mountainous accumulations. Experience shows that only about one-fourth of the total copies of an annual report are ever put in circulation. The remaining 75 per cent are dead for all time. The Agricultural Yearbook provides an example. Each member of Congress is allotted 677 copies valued at $1.50 a copy on the Government Printing Office sales list. The Tammany Member, from the heart of New York City, gets exactly as many volumes as a member from Iowa. There are approximately 200 Congressmen who have no rural constituents, yet they are annually allotted 135,400 of these books, valued at $203,100. Actual cost of producing each volume is about 75 cents. Most of them are finally disposed of as waste paper, bringing two or three cents a volume.

Another instance is found in the publication, in beautiful memorial volumes, of the addresses made in Congress in memory of departed Senators and Representatives. These addresses are all printed in the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which would seem to be about all that could reasonably be asked in the way of recognition of the departed. The custom of printing them in the memorial volumes for "gratuitous" distribution has grown up, however. In the Seventy-First Congress these volumes cost $64,478.74. Deaths to date in the present Congress will entail printing of memorial volumes costing $30,000.

LONG-TERM EXTRAVAGANCE

It has been estimated that the waste in Government printing entailed through this allotment system alone is at least $200,000 a year. Since the existing method of distribution has been used for 36 years, the total estimated minimum waste is $7,200,000—which just happens to equal the price we paid for Alaska. Secretary of State Seward was nearly run out of the country when he committed his indignant fellow citizens to pay such a sum.

The Government is honeycombed with numberless such extravagances, abuses, and overlappings. Sadly enough, the fact is too generally overlooked that these things are all paid for by taxes, and that the only source of taxes is the people. Every cent of these tremendous costs must be paid for by the taxpayer's dollar.

What can be done to curb this extravagance, to halt this centralization and the rise of bureaucracy? The fight seems a hopeless one sometimes, but it is a fight that must be carried on. If we quit now, I believe in all seriousness that we and the country are lost. There are signs developing, however, that give hope that public opinion is belatedly arousing itself to the dangers of the situation.

This rising public opinion must become vocal. There will be no improvement until the people order their Senators and Representatives to stand for economy and to make war on bureaucracy. The reform that will save the country—if it is to be saved—will never originate in Congress. It must spring up among the people, and business men and their organizations can be of tremendous influence in the movement.

CONFERENCE REPORT—AMENDMENT OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION ACT

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report on the bill (S. 4780) to provide that advances under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act may be made for crop planting or crop cultivation, including summer fallowing during the year 1932, for printing in the RECORD.

BOLLING FIELD, D. C.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 11732) to amend section 2 of an act approved February 25, 1929, to complete the acquisition of land adjacent to Bolling Field, D. C., and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11732) to amend section 2 of an act approved February 25, 1929 (45 Stat. 1303), to complete the acquisition of land adjacent to Bolling Field, D. C., and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, and 3, and agree to the same.

LISTER HILL,
W. FRANK JAMES,
JAMES M. FITZPATRICK,
Managers on the part of the House.

DAVID A. REED,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to H. R. 11732, an act to amend section 2 of an act approved February 25, 1929 (45 Stat. 1303), to complete the acquisition of land adjacent to Bolling Field, D. C., and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On No. 1: Substitutes the word "numbered" for the word "numberel" to correct a typographical error.

On Nos. 2 and 3: Authorize the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to terminate the contract entered into June 1, 1925, between the United States and A. T. Williams, of Jacksonville, Fla., for the sale and purchase of the St. Johns Bluff Military Reservation in Florida and to execute a quitclaim deed therefor to A. T. Williams or his executors upon the receipt of an amount, including interest, aggregating not less than ten times the official appraised value made of said reservation prior to the time it was offered for sale.

The language in the second and third amendments is the same exactly as that of Senate 3602, Seventy-second Congress, first session, which passed the Senate on March 10, 1932, was reported favorably to the House by the Committee on Military Affairs, and is now on the House Calendar. In reporting the bill for the committee to the House the chairman of the committee, Mr. MCSWAIN, made the following report (No. 1624, 72d Cong., 1st sess.):

This bill passed the Senate on March 10, 1932, and the committee feels that inasmuch as Mr. Williams has already paid more than ten times the present value of the property he and his executors should be released from further payments under the contract.

Upon request of the committee the property was appraised by the Jacksonville Real Estate Board on June 6, 1932, at $5,200.

The reservation, comprising 117 acres of unimproved isolated wild land, is located on the St. Johns River, in Duval County, Fla., about 20 miles by water and about 15 miles by road from Jacksonville. There is no substantial wharf or landing on or near the property, and it is practically inacessible—some 5 or 6 miles from a public highway.

This reservation was authorized to be sold as surplus by act of Congress approved March 4, 1923, after it had been appraised by the department as having a sales value of $4,708, but was not offered for sale until during the spring of 1925, at a time when real-estate values in Florida were highly inflated and speculative.

The highest bid received for the property was submitted by Mr. Arthur T. Williams, of Jacksonville, Fla., his bid being $76,605.50. The next highest bid received was submitted by the Waterfront Development Co., its bid being $25,000.

The department has received from Mr. Williams, on his contract of purchase, more than $50,000, including principal and interest, which is more than ten times the official appraised value of the reservation or more than two times the next highest bid submitted.

The purpose of this proposed legislation is to authorize the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to modify the contract and quitclaim the property to Mr. Williams in consideration of the payments received from him, as principal and interest, which it is understood amount to more than ten times the official appraised value made of the reservation in 1923, $4,708, or to more than two times the next highest bid submitted, $25,000, at time it was offered for sale. If, however, the Secretary determines that an additional payment should be made he shall so inform Mr. Williams.

It is not intended that any sum of money received from Mr. Williams shall be refunded him (see sec. 2 of the bill), in event the total received should be in excess of ten times the official appraised value made of the reservation in 1923 or more than two times the next highest bid submitted for the property.

The Secretary of War approves the bill as amended, and his letter to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs is made a part of this report and reads as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 1, 1932.

Hon. DAVID A. REED,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR REED: Careful consideration has been given to the bill (S. 3602, 72d Cong.) authorizing the modification of a certain contract for the sale and purchase of the St. Johns Bluff Military Reservation, Fla., which you transmitted to the War Department under date of February 12, 1932, with a request for information and the view of the department relative thereto.

There is no existing law which would authorize the modifying of any existing contract when such modification would be detrimental or prejudicial to the interests of the United States of America.

The facts relating to the contract of Mr. A. T. Williams, which is the one referred to in the bill in question, are fully set forth in the memorandum which accompanied your request.

Mr. Williams has already paid to the United States on account of the purchase price of the property known as the St. Johns Bluff Military Reservation, together with interest thereon, an amount in excess of 10 times the value of the property as appraised in July, 1922, which appraisal was in the amount of $4,708, and more than twice in excess of the next highest bid, in the amount of $25,000, which was received for the property when offered for sale in May, 1925. The property was sold during the period when real-estate values in Florida were highly inflated. It has been estimated that the property is now worth not more than possibly $10,000.

In view of the facts stated above, the War Department will interpose no objection to the enactment into law of the bill S. 3602, Seventy-second Congress, with the following amendments thereto:

Caption: Change the word "modification" to the word "termination." Change the period after the word "Florida" to a comma and add the words "and for other purposes."

Line 4, page 1: Change the word "modify" to the word "terminate."

Line 8, page 1: After the words "upon receipt of an amount" add the words "including interest aggregating."

Line 1, page 2: After the word "sale" insert a period and strike out the word "or," at the termination of the line.

Lines 2, 3, 4, and 5, page 2: Strike out in entirety.

It is believed that the bill, with the above amendments, will accomplish the purposes desired and will not establish a precedent that might be embarrassing in connection with other existing contracts covering the sale and purchase of real estate surplus to the needs of the War Department.

If any additional information is desired of the War Department, it will be furnished upon request.

Sincerely yours,

PATRICK J. HURLEY,
Secretary of War.

LISTER HILL,
JAMES M. FITZPATRICK,
W. FRANK JAMES,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HILL of Alabama, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up House Concurrent Resolution 37, which is on the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to consider House Concurrent Resolution 37, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the House concurrent resolution, as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 37

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized and directed in the enrollment of the bill H. R. 11897, an act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, to insert on page 9, line 15 of the bill, the sum of $5,928,389 in lieu of the matter directed to be inserted by the concurrence of the House in Senate amendment numbered 14.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the purpose of the resolution?

Mr. COLLINS. With respect to the action taken yesterday on the amendments in disagreement to the War Department appropriation bill, Senate amendment No. 14, in addition to providing for additional money on account of the restoration of 2,000 officers, carried the following language:

And the rental and subsistence allowances for the fiscal year 1933 shall be the same as for the fiscal year 1932, subject to such reduction therein as may be necessary under the provisions of section 102, Part II, of the legislative appropriation act for the fiscal year 1933.

That language was inserted in the bill by the Senate when the economy bill was in the formative stage. The economy bill, or the legislative bill, as finally approved, excepts rental and subsistence allowances from the reduction applied to salaries, and, therefore, the language inserted by the Senate in the War Department bill is no longer necessary.

The Senate conferees agreed to its omission and through inadvertence yesterday, instead of receding and concurring with an amendment leaving the money as provided by the Senate but omitting the language, the motion was made to recede and concur.

This resolution is intended to have the bill conform with the action agreed upon by the Senate and House conferees.

Mr. GOSS. Has the gentleman taken this up with the gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR]?

Mr. COLLINS. I have. I have likewise taken it up with Senator REED. The gentleman from California and I are in accord.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. What was done with the amendment on which the House voted yesterday? Did the Senate recede?

Mr. COLLINS. The Senate has acted on all matters connected with the War Department appropriation bill. On this particular one they are in accord with the House.

Mr. SABATH. So the Senate receded and concurred in the House amendment?

Mr. COLLINS. This is the only matter that needs to be acted on, and when the Senate adopts this concurrent resolution, action on the War Department appropriation bill will be complete. This resolution carries out the intent of the conferees.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The House concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the House concurrent resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

INTEREST ON ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FISH. Would the Speaker mind informing the House as to the status of the Bacharach bill, reducing the rate of interest on adjusted-service certificates, and would the Speaker mind informing the House what he has in mind?

The SPEAKER. The House bill is on the calendar, and the Senate bill is on the Speaker's table.

Mr. FISH. Can the Speaker give us any further information at this time?

The SPEAKER. It is the purpose of the Chair to recognize some one—the gentleman from Mississippi, the gentleman from Illinois, or some one who reported the original House bill—to suspend the rules and pass some kind of a bill as soon as the Chair has the privilege of suspending the rules. The Chair will not have that privilege until the Senate sends to the House a resolution for adjournment.

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman will permit, I thought the Ways and Means Committee directed the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BACHARACH] to present that bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know that the gentleman from New Jersey was directed to make the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. SNELL. That is what I understood.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands it, the committee directed the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BACHARACH] to report the bill, but when the Chair recognizes some one to suspend the rules and pass a bill, the Chair thinks it proper to recognize some one on the Democratic side.

Mr. SNELL. I appreciate the fact the Speaker has the right to do that, and I just wanted information as to whom the committee had selected to call the bill up.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair recalls, the committee directed the gentleman from New Jersey to report the bill to the House. The Senate bill, however, is over here on the Speaker's table, and if the rules are to be suspended, unless there is some peculiar situation arising, the Chair thinks it is his duty to recognize some Member on the Democratic side to make that motion.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Could not the bill be called up by unanimous consent, with an amendment, if that is what the committee has in mind, and not wait until the opportunity presents itself to suspend the rules and pass the measure?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is sure the gentleman from New York is familiar with this type of legislation and its history in the House of Representatives for the last 10 years. For the past 10 years this character of legislation has been passed under suspension of the rules.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is true.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that if the matter of amendment were thrown open to the House, we might not know the bill as being the same one reported by the committee.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think we could get unanimous consent that no amendments would be offered.

The SPEAKER. For the reason just stated by the Chair the Chair thinks that we ought to suspend the rules and pass the legislation.

CONSENT CALENDAR

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order now to consider bills on the Consent Calendar, unobjected to, subject, of course, to interruption by the consideration of privileged matters.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I inquire of the majority leader what is on the calendar for to-morrow, other than business on the Speaker's table?

Mr. RAINEY. I know of nothing.

Mr. STAFFORD. My friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] has just suggested that he has not the bills on the Consent Calendar at hand. Would it be agreeable to the gentleman from Illinois to move that bills, unobjected to, on the Consent Calendar be the order of business for to-morrow? There are a number of Members of the House interested in these bills and I think it only fair that they be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. RAINEY. I appreciate that, and I think, perhaps, the gentleman is right.

Mr. STAFFORD. I object for the time being. I shall have no objection to having that made the order of business for to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. There may not be any "to-morrow," legislatively speaking. If the conferees get an agreement and bring the relief bill back here and we pass the Army bill, the Chair imagines some one will move that we adjourn and go home.

Mr. SNELL. There has been no resolution of adjournment offered in the other body.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands one will be sent over when we have disposed of these two pieces of legislation.

Mr. SNELL. What is going to become of the home-loan bank bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] to see if we could spend an hour or so on the Consent Calendar.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire whether it is the idea of the Speaker that the House should remain in session for an hour or thereabouts?

The SPEAKER. Yes; that the House should stay in session to see if we can receive an agreement from the conferees.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have sent for my papers and will be ready to go on with the Consent Calendar in five minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. In view of the statement of the Speaker, I have no objection to taking up bills on the Consent Calendar unobjected to.

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair state that, as the Members know, the House must stay in session until the Senate has agreed to the conference and has messaged its agreement back to the House. If we want to facilitate the passage of the relief bill, we must stay here until we get that message.

Mr. SNELL. Will the Speaker inform us what he is going to do with the home loan bank bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see the gentleman from Alabama in the hall at the present time. The Chair is going to do whatever the gentleman from Alabama asks to be done.

Mr. SNELL. Could not some arrangement be made to get into communication with the gentleman from Alabama in the next half hour or three-quarters of an hour and find out, and then let us know?

The SPEAKER. The Chair imagines the gentleman can be found in his office.

Mr. SNELL. I think that is a matter that ought to go to conference.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think it ought to go to the committee, the way it is now.

The SPEAKER. There may be objection to sending it to conference.

Mr. SNELL. I appreciate that, but I would like to have some move made to get it to conference.

Mr. ALMON. The Speaker has stated there may not be any session to-morrow, and I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] has submitted one unanimous-consent request, and the Chair is going to put that first.

Is there objection to taking up bills on the Consent Calendar unobjected to?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does that mean that the Speaker will recognize anyone to move to suspend the rules and pass any bills?

The SPEAKER. That could not be done, because it would not be in order at this time to move to suspend the rules.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand, the request is to consider bills on the consent calendar unobjected to, having the bills retain their same status otherwise.

The SPEAKER. That is the request, absolutely.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if some gentleman who has a speech on his system will only speak for five minutes, our papers will be over here by that time, because I have already sent for them.

Mr. RAINEY. I will say to the gentleman that when the first bill is called, the gentleman from Illinois will reserve the right to object or move to strike out the last word and speak for five minutes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is perfectly satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY]?

There was no objection.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 10372) to authorize the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks to employ landscape architects, architects, engineers, artists, or other expert consultants.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I did not understand that we were to begin where we last left off, but at the beginning.

INVESTIGATION OF FEDERAL AGENCIES

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WOODRUM). The Chair understood that the gentleman from Illinois was to be given some time to address the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois have three minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker and ladies and gentlemen of the House, I feel that not only the Treasury Department but the Federal Reserve Board and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as well should be thoroughly investigated, because I am satisfied that such an investigation will disclose that all the nefarious activities of these three governmental agencies are dictated, sanctioned, and approved by President Hoover himself. Further, I am convinced, after mature consideration, that most of the activities of the majority members of these agencies, whose members are Republicans, are controlled by the Wall Street financiers, who, I reaffirm, are solely responsible for the present great crisis.

Nobody with any intellect can gainsay that these large-investment bankers and stock-exchange manipulators rigged the market shamefully in 1929 to enable themselves to unload millions and millions of shares of worthless securities, including foreign bonds, upon the American people. By these shameful, untenable manipulations those fellows destroyed the resources of more than twenty millions of good American citizens, including the resources of thousands of small banks, thereby taking out of the legitimate channels of trade and commerce untold wealth; and they were knowingly aided and abetted by President Hoover. They started a crusade of manipulation and deflation in 1929 unheard of in the history of any nation. A real, thoroughgoing investigation of these three agencies would, I am sure, prove the existence of the most gigantic conspiracy and collusion on the part of these bankers, national and international, and the administration. Notwithstanding the earnest and repeated appeals made to the President to stop and mitigate this orgy of destruction, he deliberately refused to put a stop to the blameworthy work of this dastardly, avaricious, greedy gang.

This proposed investigation would disclose, I am sure, that the Federal Reserve Board has aided and abetted this infamous conduct. It has permitted the withdrawal and use of eight and a half billions of dollars directly and indirectly and about fifteen billions of dollars of the people's money by these Wall Street vultures. When urgent appeals were made to the Federal Reserve Board in 1930 to save us from the complete demoralization and destruction of business, including the saving of thousands of banks through the whole United States, it refused to accept for rediscount good commercial paper held by all the small banks throughout the United States, because that would not be pleasing to the Wall Street plunderers, who asserted that it might cause deflation.

Investigation will disclose that notwithstanding the fact we are supposed to have five and a half billions of dollars in outstanding currency, yet there is only about $2,000,000,000 in actual circulation, the remainder of the currency being safely tucked away in the vaults of, say, a half dozen of the largest banks, while there is from three to five hundred millions in foreign countries and about $1,000,000,000 in the safe-deposit boxes of the people of America who have lost confidence in the banks of the country as well as the administration. All this is well known to the Federal Reserve Board, whose members are not dumb. In fact, they are in a way quite astute gentlemen; yet they steadfastly oppose every move to increase the amount of currency.

This makes business recovery impossible, as the banks refuse to loan and have been contracting credit throughout the whole Nation. I have long advocated of allowing the Government to issue an additional two or three billions of dollars of currency against its own bonds instead of giving the banks the power to issue currency against Government bonds and other securities. This would save millions upon millions in interest to the Government and the overburdened taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, this proposed investigation would also disclose that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which we created in great haste immediately after we convened last winter, has and is deliberately delaying aid to the small banks of the country, and when it has accorded loans to these institutions they have been makeshift loans representing about 40 per cent to 50 per cent of the value of the collateral offered by these small banks instead of 60 per cent to 75 per cent, which would have saved them. This proposed investigation would also disclose that the same strictness was not applied to the favored big banks as was applied to the small banks. This is especially true of the $80,000,000 loan to General Dawes's bank a few weeks ago.

Knowing of this flagrant discrimination on one side and favoritism on the other side, I have called the attention of the House to this favoritism and discrimination on several occasions, and felt that this investigation should be made; but, deferring to the wisdom and wishes of our eminently patriotic Speaker, this proposed investigation has been postponed. Let me read to you what our Speaker said to this House on May 26, 1930, about an investigation of the Treasury Department. Quoting from page 9572 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Seventy-first Congress, second session, I find the Speaker saying:

> Several weeks ago I introduced a resolution authorizing an investigation of the Treasury Department in connection with these tax refunds, and that resolution has never been reported by the committee to which it was referred. I believe that in view of this decision of the Court of Claims the resolution should be acted upon and Congress informed as to the reason and motives of the Treasury Department in granting these refunds without a court decision.
> The $33,000,000 refund to the United States Steel Corporation was approved by the majority of the members of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation in March. Since that time refunds aggregating $5,845,052.75 have been approved by the Treasury Department, and it is interesting to note that of this amount $3,435,948 represents refunds to Pennsylvania corporations.
>
> I believe that the great mass of American taxpayers, upon whom the burden of these enormous refunds must fall, are entitled to demand of Congress and the Treasury Department that these matters be submitted to the courts for adjudication. The fallacy of the rule applied by the Treasury Department has been made evident by the decision of the Court of Claims, and it is obvious that a halt must be called, a thorough investigation made, and rules established upon a sound basis by the courts.

Again, on July 8, 1932, the Speaker said, in connection with this same subject:

> I still have the same opinion I expressed at that time (May 26, 1930). The reasons I have not pressed on the Rules Committee the investigation demanded by the gentleman from Pennsylvania are two. For the last six months the country has been very much disturbed in economic matters. I did not want to investigate the Treasury Department with a view to having the people of the country lose confidence in it. The only thing they seem to have left is confidence in the Government of the United States in its fiscal matters. To make an investigation at this time and discover such things as the gentleman from Pennsylvania and I believe would be discovered in that department would certainly unsettle that confidence and would not be beneficial to the American people.
> Secondly, I thought if we undertook to do it at this time, with an election immediately in front of us, it would be charged during the campaign that we attempted to use the investigation for partisan purposes.
> Those are the two reasons why I did not ask for it to be done.

Now you have the reasons for postponing this proposed investigation; but I give notice now that right after the forthcoming election I shall insist upon and demand a thoroughgoing investigation of these three governmental agencies, and I do not hesitate to say that I am of the opinion that if justice prevails sufficient evidence will be adduced to justify criminal prosecutions against many of the officials now in command of this administration.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield with pleasure to my good friend from New York.

Mr. BLACK. All the squawking that we have heard from the Republican side was the same kind of squawking that we heard before the investigation of the Harding régime.

Mr. SABATH. That is quite true. If some Republicans were in the position of the Speaker, there would be an immediate investigation without doubt. If you gentlemen were familiar with the charges, if you were familiar with the conditions surrounding the $3,700,000,000 tax refunds to special and privileged interests, of which sum considerable has gone to the Republican campaign fund, I know you, too, would be demanding an investigation.

Moreover, I want to say to my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] that if he knew there were $2,000,000,000 worth of uncollected Federal taxes, in connection with the $3,000,000,000 deficit, he and his Republican friends would be insisting upon this investigation.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I am sorry that I can not yield now.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman voted for an investigation——

Mr. SABATH. Yes; I voted for this proposed investigation, but I can not, as I have said, yield to the gentleman. The gentleman can not with his incessant stentorian tones disconcert me. He has been trying to badger me all the time in these debates of the last four days in his futile attempts to defend his administration and get some cheap publicity. The gentleman does not seem to appreciate how ridiculous are his tactics and statements.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes more, so that he can correct his statement. He indicated that I opposed the resolution, when as a matter of fact we did not have any vote upon it, although I was ready to vote for it.

Mr. SABATH. Oh, I did not say that.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SABATH. I am willing to accept the additional five minutes with pleasure.

Mr. BLACK. I object.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes in view of the fact that my name was brought into the discussion this afternoon as being opposed to an investigation, when there was not a vote on the investigation question at all.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think the gentleman from Wisconsin is mistaken. I did not accuse him of voting against the investigation. I said that if he had possession of the facts that I had he would vote for an investigation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I object.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an article upon the history of the Post Office Department in colonial days, prepared for me by the Post Office Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I object.

EMERGENCY CONSTRUCTION AND RELIEF BILL

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address delivered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] over the radio on Saturday evening last.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following remarks of Hon. ALLEN T. TREADWAY, Member of Congress, on emergency construction and relief bill, over Columbia broadcasting network, Saturday, July 9, 1932:

ADDRESS OF HON. ALLEN T. TREADWAY

I consider it a privilege to be presented to this radio audience to-night by Mr. Frederic William Wile, internationally known as a pioneer in broadcasting and as a keen commentator on current public affairs.

The events leading up to to-day's situation in regard to the emergency construction and relief bill are very unique in the history of legislation.

My cospeaker, Senator WAGNER, of New York, some time ago introduced bills in the Senate which carried his views as to a proper method of relieving unemployment.

On June 6 Congressman RAINEY, of Illinois, introduced in the House of Representatives what has since been known as the Garner bill. In brief, this bill made available through the President $100,000,000 for distribution to relieve distress through such instrumentalities as the President might designate, either as gifts or as loans, of money or supplies.

The bill further, in the words of its authors, broadened the base of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by removing the limitation in the act creating that corporation and permitting it to make loans to any person.

The Garner bill also provided for extensive public-works construction in the form of public buildings, river and harbor projects, roads, flood control, and miscellaneous items to the total of $1,218,739,000.

This bill, bearing the approval of the Democratic majority of the House of Representatives and introduced at the behest of Speaker GARNER, received very meager consideration by the Ways and Means Committee and was reported out by a strictly partisan vote.

The Republican members of the committee presented a substitute measure which would have added $300,000,000 to the capital of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and which would have materially broadened the functions of that corporation, but it did not authorize loans or donations by the President or the expensive public-building program of the Garner bill.

The Garner bill passed the House of Representatives and was sent to the Senate. There it was disagreed to and the measure introduced by Senator WAGNER of New York was substituted and passed.

There were very material differences between the bill which passed the House and that which passed the Senate, and it was the difficult task of the conferees to adjust these differences and report to the respective branches one bill.

The conference committee labored diligently for more than a week with the result that a bill was reported to the respective branches bearing the approval of all the conferees except myself.

That was the situation when the conference report was signed last Tuesday, July 5.

That afternoon the President invited to the White House 16 members of the House and Senate, Republicans and Democrats. We spent two hours and a half together, and a subcommittee of that delegation returned to the White House on Wednesday morning.

The reason for the meetings was the very apparent desire of the President to cooperate with Congress in an effort to secure prompt relief legislation and to express his opposition to the individual-loan scheme insisted upon by Speaker GARNER.

In plain language, this scheme would permit the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to loan to any individual who, in the opinion of the board of directors of that corporation, could not obtain funds upon reasonable terms through banking channels.

This arrangement would set up a superbanking establishment in order that banking facilities might be furnished in every community to accommodate every borrower in the United States.

This was the one provision upon which Speaker GARNER positively insisted. All sorts of compromises were suggested at the White House, until finally Senator ROBINSON of Arkansas, Democratic leader of the Senate, offered certain proposals which would have eliminated the clause whereby individuals could borrow from the Government.

Immediately Speaker GARNER declared that he would not yield to the elimination of the objectionable clause.

The result was that we adjourned without action and Mr. GARNER was asked to sleep on the idea. On Wednesday morning he returned to the White House in the same frame of mind, so that nothing came of those six hours of conference with the President.

When the House met at noon on Wednesday, Speaker GARNER took the floor and made a very impassioned speech in defense of his position. Minority Leader SNELL explained the other side.

The stage was therefore set for the happenings of Thursday. It fell to my lot to lead the opposition.

Let me therefore tell the radio audience both my impressions of the conferences with the President and the merits of the proposition upon which the impending veto rests.

If there is one lesson to be learned from long congressional service, it is the absolute necessity for compromise. I have rarely known of an important piece of legislation to become law in accordance with the exact views of its proponents. It is a case of give and take.

When Senator ROBINSON offered the compromise proposals which I have referred to, the President indicated his willingness to make the necessary concessions.

It occurred to me at once that Speaker GARNER would agree to the same. Imagine my surprise when, instead of his expected acceptance, he displayed his characteristic impulsiveness. In a loud voice and with fist beating upon the table he asserted that he would never compromise upon the individual-loan feature.

It was plain that the stubbornness of one man was definitely blocking the relief needed by thousands of our citizens.

As the press has carried complete stories of these recent developments, let me briefly explain my views upon the present situation relative to this vital piece of legislation.

The Speaker of the House of Representatives is a very influential man, and now that he is the vice presidential candidate of the Democratic Party he is able to make political issues of his personal views.

This he has done, and I predict that in his addresses to the people during the campaign he will make a speech very similar to the one he delivered in the House on Wednesday. It may sound well on the ranches of Texas to endeavor to align the masses against the classes, but it stamps the man who indulges in that sort of debate as a demagogue with small local perceptions.

This is a country in which there is no caste, no distinction, where one man is the equal of his brother in the eyes of the law and in the eyes of the citizenry of this great democracy.

The Speaker said he was through with class legislation, and I say he has just begun with it when he tries to distinguish between groups of American citizens.

His great argument is that every citizen of the country should have the opportunity of borrowing from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Four members of that corporation were present at the White House during the conference. Every one of them said that the individual borrowing plan was absolutely impossible of execution.

One of them who particularly opposed the Garner proposal was Mr. Jesse H. Jones, of Texas, a member of the Finance Corporation, a Democrat, and a man of great influence in his State, who was able to take to Houston the Democratic convention in 1928. But he did not possess sufficient influence to overcome the obstinacy of his fellow Texan.

The Speaker's provision would cause to be set up in practically every community in the United States a branch of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. This in itself would destroy the general banking business of the country.

The Speaker's answer to that argument was that if the seven men comprising the corporation could not do as they were told, they could be dismissed and seven others employed in their places. Such an answer as that certainly does not reflect the highest type of statesmanship.

To show how fantastic the Speaker's proposal is, let me call your attention to the constant taking over of collateral for defaulted loans by foreclosing mortgages on real estate, selling out securities, or forcing borrowers into bankruptcy.

If Uncle Sam should become a pawnbroker and be obliged to foreclose on the type of collateral he would secure on these individual loans, the day would soon come when he would be the greatest landowner in the world and the biggest owner of unredeemed and practically worthless collateral.

The Speaker vehemently opposed loans to what he called a favored clientele, consisting of banks, railroads, life and fire insurance companies. He repeatedly said that such loans as these did not reach the average individual. Let us see whether they do or not.

Do you know that over 68,000,000 of our people carry 120,000,000 life-insurance policies? More than half the population of this country has life insurance of some kind or other.

Do you know the tremendous number of fire-insurance policies held throughout the country? I have word from the president of a large fire insurance company whom I personally know. He states that to the best of the ability of his company to make an estimate there are about 120,000,000 fire insurance policies in force in the United States to-day.

How many people are stockholders in these so-called selected railroads?

There are 245,509 stockholders in the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.

There are 58,833 stockholders in the Atchison Railroad Co.

There are 62,719 stockholders in the New York Central Railroad Co.

There are 29,021 stockholders in the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co.

These are official statistics as of 1931, secured through the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Is it not clear that the securities of these companies are of vital importance to the welfare of a very large number of the American people?

Why say that you are making loans to a selected class? The real financial welfare of our country is dependent on the maintenance of the 100 per cent value of these and other stocks, because the stockholders are the people of the country.

I am reliably informed that in April of this year there were 1,086,662 railroad employees in this country. Assuming that most of these employees are married and have families of four persons in each family, it will easily be seen that the welfare of the railroads is the welfare of from 3,000,000 to 5,000,000 people.

Relative to loans to banks, it is estimated there are 35,000,000 depositors in banks and 12,350,000 members of building and loan associations.

It is therefore very apparent that by maintaining the financial solvency of our banks and our railroads and our insurance companies we are directly benefiting the individual citizens of the country who derive their livelihoods from these corporations or to which corporations they have intrusted their financial affairs. If this does not reach the individual, what does?

Mr. GARNER states he wants loans made to individuals, and that ample security should be required. How can the average man in the street put up any security if he is broke and asking for a loan? In that respect the suggestion is ridiculous. Four-fifths of those who would ask for loans would be denied relief under the phraseology of the bill which the Speaker advocates.

In holding out for this absurd provision against the President and the rest of the conferees the Speaker's position reminds me of the old story of the 11 obstinate jurors standing out against the one who was in the right.

Another homely illustration is the case of the company marching down the street. There was a proud mother on the sidewalk watching the parade go by. Her beloved boy, Johnny, was not in step with the rest of the company. She immediately said, "They are all out of step but Johnny." They are all out of step except the Speaker of the House, and he seems to feel he is leading the procession.

I want to refer to three statements which Speaker GARNER made in his speech Wednesday. He said the President was opposed to the expenditure of a single dollar toward giving employment to the American people through public-works construction. The fact is the President has approved the Budget, which includes $575,000,000 for public works. This is quite in contrast with the Speaker's statement.

Mr. GARNER then intimated that the President said there is a panic just around the corner. I deny that the President ever said any such thing in the presence of the conferees or at any other time. He never said that there is a panic just around the corner, because he does not believe there is. He has too much confidence in the well-being and sound judgment of our people.

What the President did say was that the Garner proposal might set back recovery indefinitely; that he thought the country would be shocked if we should unbalance the Budget, as the Garner proposal would do. The President told Mr. GARNER that the responsibility would lie with the latter if such events were to take place.

The Speaker has a happy faculty of putting into the mouths of other people words he would like them to say. He frequently showed that characteristic, when a member of the Ways and Means Committee, in dealing with witnesses.

His worst offense of this sort in Wednesday's speech was when he stated he wanted to see legislation passed and that he would like to give assurance that Congress desires to serve the whole people of the United States. Following these statements the Speaker quoted the President as saying:

"I will take my select clientele or you will take nothing in the way of relief."

He placed that sentence in quotation marks as having been uttered by the President of the United States.

I can not too emphatically state that the President never said any such thing.

My friends of the radio audience, the issue is clean-cut and easily understood. Speaker GARNER feels that through the influence of his position he can secure a type of legislation admitted by his own friends to be impractical as well as physically impossible of execution.

The bill originally contained a large quantity of that element known politically as pork, as against the sincere desire of the President for legislation of a constructive nature which could be administered by the present machinery of the Government and bring direct relief to thousands of needy American citizens.

Doubtless you have read the President's statement on the subject which plainly indicates his disapproval of the bill as it will be presented to him following its passage by Congress. It will be promptly returned to Congress with a veto. The votes in the House on Thursday and in the Senate to-day show the bill can not be passed over a veto in spite of the influence of the Speaker.

Therefore the President will undoubtedly submit a program conforming to his best judgment as to the needs of the country.

Stubbornness and political bunkum will eventually be beaten by public opinion. Congress will not adjourn until a suitable and workable relief measure is passed.

The Speaker of the House of Representatives, although a vice presidential candidate, will soon discover that he is not more important than the President of the United States.

In the final analysis the welfare of the American people will prevail over political expediency.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. POLK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

CONSERVATION OF WILD LIFE, FISH, AND GAME

The first bill on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 263) to promote the conservation of wild life, fish, and game, and for other purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I objected to that bill for the reason that I feared it would establish a new policy upon the part of the Federal Government in the matter of cooperation on the old 50-50 policy, in the conservation line. There are other features in the bill which are necessary. The Federal Government could avail itself of investigations made by the States. I spoke to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG] and with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], and I believe if we should strike out section 1 it would remove the objection that I have.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the bill recognizes a very important policy of governmental activity, and I think it too important to pass in this way at this late day in the session. I am asking that it go over without prejudice.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I want the RECORD to show that I am keeping my word that with section 1 out of it I shall not object at this time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CERTIFICATES OF ARRIVAL

The next business was the bill (H. R. 10274) to amend the act approved March 2, 1929, entitled "An act to supplement the naturalization laws, and for other purposes" (45 Stat. 1512).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve that objection? In the absence of Mr. DICKSTEIN, will he not agree to pass the bill over without prejudice?

Mr. JENKINS. That is the situation under the order under which we are proceeding. An objection is tantamount to passing it over without prejudice.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether I am correct in my understanding of the procedure for this afternoon, namely, that we are not proceeding under the ordinary rule for the consideration of the Consent Calendar, but only that the Consent Calendar is being called for the consideration of such bills upon it to which there is no objection whatever?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct as the Chair understands it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. So that the rule for three objectors does not apply, and the bill does not lose its place on the calendar if there is objection on this call.

Mr. STAFFORD. That was the order made—bills unobjected to on the Consent Calendar should be called, the bills maintaining their same status, notwithstanding an objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that was the intention. I believe that when the gentleman from Illinois submitted that request he used the words "unobjected to" inadvisedly, having in mind possibly the Private Calendar. The Consent Calendar is always a calendar where bills are subject to objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. It was so qualified by the statement made by myself.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The majority leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], is not here, but when he asked for that consent I believe he wanted to take up the Consent Calendar in the regular order, with one objection in the first instance and three thereafter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not say what the gentleman from Illinois intended to say. The Chair only understands what the gentleman did say.

Mr. O'CONNOR. But, Mr. Speaker, since this Consent Calendar has been established there has never been a request to go to bills on the Consent Calendar, unobjected to. That is redundancy.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not redundancy, as the gentleman will see in a few seconds if he will just compose himself.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am always composed. I do not believe that is the understanding.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I have no interest in this particular calendar.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not have any particular interest in it, either.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I have not conferred with any of the other gentlemen who are watching the call. I simply based my opinion upon the request of the gentleman from Illinois, as I heard it made by him.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If I thought there was that intention, I would object, because that is adopting a rule on the floor of the House. There is no such thing as Consent Calendar, unobjected to. The Consent Calendar carries objections. That is what the calendar means. Just because some one drops an extra word is no reason why we should proceed in that way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the next bill on the Consent Calendar.

HEIRS OF DECEASED INDIANS, ETC.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6684, to amend the act of June 25, 1910, entitled "An act to provide for determining the heirs of deceased Indians, for the disposal and sale of allotments of deceased Indians, for the lease of allotments, and for other purposes," so as to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to modify the terms of certain contracts, when in his judgment it is in the interest of the Indians so to do.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

STATUS OF REGULAR ARMY UNDER ACT OF MAY 24, 1928

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11174, to restore to their former retired status in the Regular Army of the United States persons who resigned such status to accept the benefits of the act of May 24, 1928 (45 Stat. 735), and for other purposes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, on this bill I took the matter up carefully with the General Accounting Office. The bill is predicated on what seems to be two conflicting opinions rendered on the same law by the Comptroller General. There is now pending in court a test case on the subject matter involved. I have prepared an amendment, which I have submitted to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG], which will satisfy the office of the Comptroller General and which would avoid what some people believe is the purpose of obtaining undue advantages under the bill. I will read the amendment:

In line 15, page 2, strike out the period, insert a colon, and add "And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to entitle any former emergency officer retired under the act of May 24, 1928, to retired pay from the Veterans' Administration in a greater amount than when added to the retired or retainer pay received from the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps shall equal 75 per cent of the pay the former emergency officer was entitled to receive (except pay under the act of May 18, 1920) when discharged from his commissioned service as a World War emergency officer."

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the House what the real purport of the amendment is?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The purport of the amendment would be to prevent obtaining greater retirement than he would have under a law as construed by the Comptroller General.

Mr. KLEBERG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. KLEBERG. I would suggest that inasmuch as this affects only 23 individuals who happened to be officers who resigned for the purpose that the gentleman has just set out, I will accept the gentleman's amendment with pleasure. All we seek to do is to remove the indecision caused by the two conflicting opinions rendered by the Comptroller General and put them all on the same basis as all other men and warrant officers who resigned following the second order of the Comptroller General, which almost contradicted the other, under which these gentlemen resigned. I will be glad to accept the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I can assure the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] that this amendment would obviate any undue advantage.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I must ask unanimous consent that this bill go over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

TAX LAWS WITH REFERENCE TO BOULDER DAM

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11945, to provide that tax laws of Nevada and Arizona shall apply to construction and reserved areas at Boulder Dam.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Well, I object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be passed over.

There was no objection.

CONSTRUCTION CHARGES ON INDIAN IRRIGATION PROJECTS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3675, relating to the deferment and adjustment of construction charges for the years 1931 and 1932 on Indian irrigation projects.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Clerk, under the order entered, is not to call bills that have heretofore been objected to on the Consent Calendar.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We would never be able to follow that.

Mr. STAFFORD. The bills should be called in their order, and those considered that are not objected to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the next bill on the Consent Calendar.

EXAMINATION OF GOVERNMENT RECORDS IN RELATION TO WISCONSIN INDIANS

The Clerk called the next business, Senate Joint Resolution 125, authorizing the attorney general of Wisconsin to examine Government records in relation to claims of Wisconsin Indians.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was under consideration I called attention to the objectionable feature of permitting a representative of a State to go into the departments, without any restrictions, to examine the records of the department to make out a case.

I have prepared an amendment that would permit this scrutinizing policy only subject to the approval of the head of the department. I understand some authority is necessary, but the authority should not be so all-pervasive that it should be without the approval of the head of the department.

I have prepared the following amendment, which I wish to call to the attention of the gentleman having the bill in charge, my colleague the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHNEIDER], and wish to know whether it would be acceptable to him and other Members of the House: On page 2, line 1, after the word "authorized," insert "under such regulations as the head of the department or independent establishment may prescribe."

Strike out after the words "United States" in line 4 the balance of line 4, all of lines 5, 6, 7, and 8 down to the word "as," so that it will read:

is authorized under such regulations as the head of the department or independent establishment may prescribe to examine official papers, documents, and records of the United States Government, and to make copies thereof, as may be needed in carrying out the provisions of chapter 144 of the Session Laws of Wisconsin of 1931, without expense to the United States.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman something about these claims. This bill turns over the records of the United States to Wisconsin officials. What for? To get evidence to prosecute claims against the United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is absolutely correct.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. What is the extent of the claims?

Mr. STAFFORD. I turn the inquiry of the gentleman over to my colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHNEIDER].

Mr. SCHNEIDER. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that authority to secure this information is carried in a good many jurisdictional bills that are passed by this House giving the Indians the right to go into the Court of Claims.

This resolution requests that the attorney general of Wisconsin may have the right to go into the departments to secure certain information, to ascertain whether or not the Indians of Wisconsin do have a claim and, if so, to tell them, and if not to clear up that proposition.

The gentleman probably knows the Indians are constantly led to believe they have claims against the Government when they have no claims, and there are many attorneys and other people collecting fees from the Indians to prosecute these alleged claims that have no merit whatever.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If the gentleman will read the preamble he will see it goes away beyond what the gentleman from Wisconsin states.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. We will strike that out.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The preamble states that the attorney general of Wisconsin is directed to investigate and prosecute the claims. Prosecute the claims against the Government and you want the evidence upon which to base your claims from the Government.

Now, what are these claims? How much is involved? What are you asking the Government to turn over to the attorney general?

Mr. SCHNEIDER. The attorney general is seeking information. The only place this information can be secured is in the departments of the Government. They run back 25, 50, or 75 years, and nobody except the Government has the information. For this reason the State is asking that the attorney general may have access to the public records for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the Indians have been paid, and whether or not they have a claim.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Let me ask the gentleman this: Does the gentleman not think he should give us some idea of the extent of the claims?

Mr. SCHNEIDER. The claims are varied. Some will probably be timber claims, and some probably land claims.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman is liable to have a claim for the value of the city of Milwaukee presented if this bill goes through.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. There are treaty claims also.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. I hope the gentleman will withhold his objection until the amendment can be considered.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I will withhold my objection, but I am anxious that these matters be disposed of in the same way. I have Indians in my State, and I think they should all be treated alike.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I hope the gentleman will permit the Member to explain the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I will withhold my objection.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. The bill simply is for the purpose of allowing the Attorney General to get information.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I dislike very much to be compelled to object to this bill, in view of the fact that this bill is introduced by my very good friend from Wisconsin, Mr. SCHNEIDER, but it seems to me this bill ought not to pass, and without taking the time to go into a long explanation of it I may simply say the Attorney General's department has recommended against it.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. I differ with my colleague. The Attorney General has not objected. It is the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of the Interior gives the right to attorneys and to anyone to go into that department and seek the information which we are seeking here, but the Comptroller General will not permit the same kind of information to go out. He contends that the law prohibits the matter from being sought, although the Secretary of the Interior permits it. We are only asking from the Attorney General the securing of the same information from his department we are now securing from the Department of the Interior.

Mr. JENKINS. I may have been in error about the Attorney General objecting to it, but the department from which you seek this information objects to it.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. Would not the amendment suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] cure the situation?

Mr. JENKINS. My objection is that permission is given to the attorney general of Wisconsin to go into the department, but it does not specify what department, and it does not specify what records he is to have, but it is a general license to this attorney general to go into the departmental records of the United States Government whether these records are secret, private, or public, or whether any of them are antagonistic to the attorney general or not.

They may be the records upon which the Government might want to base its claim in opposition to what the attorney general of Wisconsin might want. In other words, under this bill the Federal departments would have to lay before the attorney general of Wisconsin and no other attorney general of the United States certain records which that attorney general might want to use against the United States Government.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. JENKINS. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. After reading the report I note that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs says he is giving all the information they want and at any time they want it, and that he has always given it to them. In view of that statement, why do you desire legislation? There must be a reason. What is it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. JENKINS. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. The amendment which I have proposed, and which is acceptable to my colleague, removes the objection which is raised by the gentleman from Ohio. The amendment which I propose to offer provides:

under such regulations as the head of the department or independent establishment may prescribe.

That removes the objectionable feature raised by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS. No; it does not. I understood from the other gentleman from Wisconsin, in my conversation with him earlier in the day, that the situation is like this: That the attorney general of Wisconsin wants to get information which the departments in Washington are perfectly willing to give him but have no authority to give him. If this bill were drawn to do that and nothing else, I would have no objection to it; but I do not interpret it in that way.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the amendment which I propose to offer takes care of that situation.

Mr. JENKINS. I do not think it does, because the last part of this bill will stand the same and the first part will stand the same, and the attorney general of Wisconsin would have rights that no other attorney general would have, and you do not define what rights you give him.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman's amendment makes it permissive on the part of the attorney general.

Mr. STAFFORD. My amendment is:

under such regulations as the head of the department or independent establishment may prescribe.

Mr. JENKINS. But you do not say what department.

Mr. STAFFORD. Any department, under such regulations as the head of the department or independent establishment may prescribe. You can not designate the department, but I make it broad so as to have it apply to all those which have this information.

Mr. JENKINS. Inasmuch as this bill will have no chance to pass the other body, I am going to insist upon my objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is a Senate bill.

CHELAN NATIONAL FOREST

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3711, to authorize the adjustment of the boundaries of the Chelan National Forest, in the State of Washington, and for other purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CRATER LAKE NATIONAL PARK

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 4070, to authorize the acquisition of a certain building, furniture, and equipment in the Crater Lake National Park.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

TRANSFER OF WIDOWS ISLAND, ME.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5642, to authorize and direct the transfer of Widows Island, Me., by the Secretary of the Navy to the Secretary of Agriculture for administration as a migratory-bird refuge.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to say that this bill is of considerable public interest in my State. There is a small island off the coast of Maine which the Department of Agriculture desires as a bird refuge. The island is now owned by the Navy Department. It has some old ruined buildings upon it, and it is frequented by black ducks. The Navy Department has no use for the island, and the Agricultural Department desires it as one of the bird refuges which they are establishing throughout the country, and other than this island there is no other available.

At the present time they are shooting black duck on this island and I would like to see the bill passed at this session in order to stop the hunting of these birds during the coming fall season.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will say to the gentleman that I have carefully examined this bill and I see no objection to its passage.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. I thank the gentleman for that statement.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am impressed by the statement that the Secretary of Agriculture would like to have this island for administrative purposes. There may be much in what the gentleman from Maine says, but I wish to make a further investigation as to the general scope of the bill. I have said to the gentleman from Maine that I am perfectly willing to have the Government cede that island to the State of Maine, but the gentleman has said the State does not want it. For the time being I object.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. This island is not to be used for State purposes. The Government still wants this land, and they want it for a Federal purpose. They want it as a migratory-bird refuge, and it is the only place in that vicinity available. The Government wants this island, and it needs it. The black duck are closely hunted in that vicinity, and they are hunting them there now. I would like to have this bill passed at this session in order to forbid the hunting of these duck during this next fall season.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object until I can make a further investigation of the bill.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. The gentleman agreed to make that investigation before.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had concurred in a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 37. Concurrent resolution authorizing a correction in the enrollment of the bill H. R. 11897.

COLVILLE NATIONAL FOREST

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9440, to authorize the adjustment of the boundaries of the Colville National Forest, in the State of Washington, and for other purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TRAFFIC ACTS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 4123, to amend the District of Columbia traffic acts, as amended.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

NATIONAL GUARD OF THE STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 487, to authorize an appropriation for the purchase of land in South Dakota for use as camp sites or rifle ranges for the National Guard of said State.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER, ST. LOUIS, MO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9265, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near a point between Cherokee and Osage Streets, St. Louis, Mo.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER, HELENA, ARK.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12316, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Helena, Ark.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

RESEARCH LABQRATORY FOR UTILIZING COTTON, ETC.

The Clerk called the next joint resolution, House Joint Resolution 352, authorizing and directing the Secretary of Agriculture to request allocation of funds; also to establish a research laboratory for utilizing cotton, cotton hulls, seed, linters, and waste farm products.

Mr. STAFFORD and Mr. SCHAFER objected.

ENTRY OF CERTAIN EXHIBITS UNDER BOND

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12171, to provide for the entry under bond of exhibits of arts, sciences, and industries, and products of the soil, mine, and sea.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have examined this bill and the report quite carefully. It is somewhat of a departure from the established policy of the Government. I have suggested to those interested in the proposal to have these goods for exhibition purposes admitted free of duty that it be limited for a period of two years, and to strike out the provision on page 2, which would apply the duty only on the value of the shopworn quality of the goods.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I shall object to this bill, so we are losing time. We are not passing any bills here to-day; and if you object to some of them, you might as well object to all.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is a bill that is on the Special Calendar of the Speaker for suspension of the rules, and we will not be able to get these amendments on the bill otherwise.

Mr. CULLEN. If the gentleman will permit, I shall accept the amendments, because I think they are fair and that they should be incorporated in the bill, and, Mr. Speaker, I am going to ask unanimous consent that Senate bill S. 4747, which is now on the Speaker's table and which is identical with my bill that is on the House Calendar, be substituted.

Mr. GARBER. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the purpose of the bill?

Mr. CULLEN. Yes; I will make an explanation.

This is not a strange method of legislating. Similar legislation has been passed on many occasions.

Mr. GARBER. There is not any question about that, but we want to know the purpose of the proposed legislation.

Mr. CULLEN. I am going to tell the gentleman that.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLEN. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. I do not want to take up much time, but I would like to ascertain if the new leader of the Democratic Party in the House, the conscientious objector, the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], approves of this bill and approves of taking up 5 or 10 minutes to discuss its merits.

Mr. CULLEN. I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] approves of the bill.

Mr. SCHAFER. If he does, I shall not take up any more time and shall not interpose any objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a question. Of course, I am in sympathy with the gentleman's amendment. Will the striking out of that provision, which is rather unusual, fixing the duty on the depreciated value of the importation provide definitely that the full duty will be paid if sold?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; the first part of the proviso covers that.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In reply to the gentleman from Oklahoma, I may state that in this building, known as Radio City, it is intended to have a sort of commercial museum with exhibitions, and the articles mentioned in the bill will be on exhibit; and while they are on exhibit, no duty will be paid; but a bond will be given for the amount of the duty, and in the event they are sold or disposed of, of course, the full duty must be paid. If they are not sold or disposed of, then they go back.

Mr. CULLEN. Let me say that this has the approval of the Treasury Department.

Mr. GARBER. Are these articles for public exhibition?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ADVANCES UNDER THE RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION ACT

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 10673, to provide that advances under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act may be made to producers of livestock and to dairy farmers.

Mr. STAFFORD. That has already been incorporated into law, and I object.

LIGHTER SERVICE

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, S. 2883, an act prescribing regulations for carrying on the business of lighter service from any of the ports of the United States to stationary ships or barges located offshore, and for the purpose of promoting safety of navigation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACK, Mr. KNUTSON, and Mr. LAGUARDIA objected.

EXHIBITS OF ARTS, SCIENCES, AND INDUSTRIES

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 376, H. R. 12171. The gentleman from Washington, who objected, will withdraw his objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title to the bill, as follows:

H. R. 12171, a bill to provide for the entry under bond of exhibits of arts, sciences, and industries, and products of the soil, mine, and sea.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute the bill S. 4747, an identical bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all articles which shall be imported from foreign countries for the sole purpose of exhibition or display at a permanent exhibition or exhibitions and/or at a temporary exhibition or exhibitions of the arts, sciences, and industries, and products of the soil, mine, and sea, to be held at any time and from time to time by Rockefeller Center (Inc.), a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New York, and/or by its tenants or licensees in a building or buildings to be owned by Rockefeller Center (Inc.), and to be a part of and to be known as Rockefeller Center and to be located between Fifth and Sixth Avenues and Forty-eighth and Fifty-first Streets, in the Borough of Manhattan, city and State of New York, upon which articles there shall be a tariff or customs duty, shall be admitted free of such tariff, customs duty, fees, or charges under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful, at any time during or at the close of any exhibition held pursuant to this act, to sell for delivery at the close thereof any goods or property imported for and actually displayed at such exhibition, subject to such regulations for the security of the revenue and for the collection of import duties as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles, when sold or withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States, shall be subject to the duty, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of their withdrawal and to the requirements of the tariff laws in effect at such date; and on such articles which shall have suffered diminution or deterioration from use, incidental handling, and exposure the duty, if payable, shall be assessed according to the appraised value or condition at the time of withdrawal for consumption or use: And provided further, That Rockefeller Center (Inc.) shall be deemed, for customs purposes only, to be the sole consignee of all merchandise imported under the provisions of this act, and that all necessary governmental expenses incurred as a result of exhibitions authorized under this act, including salaries of customs officials in charge of imported articles, shall be paid to the Treasury of the United States by Rockefeller Center (Inc.) under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury: And provided further, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed as an invitation, express or implied, from the Government of the United States to any foreign government, state, municipality, corporation, partnership, or individual to import any articles for the purpose of exhibition at the said exhibitions.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 12, strike out the language, namely, "and on such articles which shall have suffered diminution or deterioration from use."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 8, after the word "Treasury" insert "And provided further, That all such articles shall at the expiration of two years be subject to the import duty then in force unless same shall have been sold or exported from this country prior to that period of time."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. The RECORD of last Friday discloses that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], alleged to be the acting leader on the Republican side at the time, stated that he would favor an investigation of the Treasury Department, although stating he was acting in his individual capacity. The RECORD speaks for itself. There was a hearing before the Committee on Rules last Saturday and it continued over until Monday. I appeared before the Rules Committee and asked for an investigation of the Treasury Department, the Federal reserve system, and the monetary system of the United States, and especially the office of the Comptroller of the Currency.

That committee gave careful consideration to the resolution all day Monday, and I understand voted yesterday—Tuesday—not to have the investigation. The Republican members of the committee voted unanimously against the resolution to investigate the Treasury Department. Although the gentleman from Michigan said that he would support it, when the question came on a record vote, he did not vote for the investigation. I understand there was a tie vote, 6 and 6. I know why he did not vote for it.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I can not yield now. There is one reason why the Republican Members oppose this investigation. We had an investigation before the Judiciary Committee of the Secretary of the Treasury when considering the impeachment resolution against Andrew W. Mellon. Mr. MICHENER was a member of the Judiciary Committee at the time of its consideration. Had that proceeding not been interfered with by the President of the United States there would have been a complete investigation and audit of the United States Treasury, but the President of the United States pardoned the gentleman who was accused of those crimes by appointing him to a different office and sending him to a foreign country, thereby relieving the Committee on the Judiciary of further jurisdiction of that case. The impeachment proceedings were in the nature of an ouster proceeding; the President voluntarily ousted him, so that left nothing further for the committee to do. Therefore an investigation of the Treasury Department was deliberately prevented by the President of the United States. There was another resolution before the Committee on Rules to investigate the Treasury. Mr. MCFADDEN, of Pennsylvania, introduced a resolution and I introduced a resolution. I say that resolution yesterday was deliberately defeated for the purpose of preventing the people from knowing what has been going on in the Treasury Department. Before the war Mr. Mellon and his brother had inherited quite a fortune and they owned and controlled probably two or three hundred million dollars in property.

After the war was over they owned and controlled property of the value of $2,200,000,000. Then Mr. Mellon went in as Secretary of the Treasury. Get the World's Work for March, 1932, and you will find a complete statement, itemized, of the properties he and his brother owned and controlled at the time he was granted a pardon, aggregating $7,950,000,000; and if we were to have an investigation of the Treasury Department, the people would find out whether that money had been honestly acquired. That is why they did not want an investigation; that is why the Republican Party does not want an investigation. They will vote against it solidly. I doubt that even my good friend the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. SCHAFER, who is always progressive and is willing to do what he believes is right, could afford to support that resolution.

Mr. SCHAFER. I will vote for any investigating resolution.

Mr. PATMAN. I hope the gentleman will assist in getting the resolution considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] has expired.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, in view of the exhibitions that are occurring on the floor, I rise to move that the House take a recess for one hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will not recognize the gentleman for such a motion.

ROLL CALL

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 119]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three hundred and nine Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

KLAMATH INDIAN RESERVATION

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2671, providing for the final enrollment of the Indians of the Klamath Indian Reservation in the State of Oregon.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that that bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

OBLIGATIONS TO ENROLLED INDIANS UNDER TRIBAL AGREEMENTS

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 409, to carry out certain obligations to certain enrolled Indians under tribal agreements.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that that bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

SETTLEMENT, ALLOWANCE, AND PAYMENT OF CERTAIN CLAIMS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8374, to authorize the settlement, allowance, and payment of certain claims, and for other purposes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, this bill is an omnibus private bill, with the exception that there is a provision toward the end which would make it a public bill. I think it is very bad practice to permit an omnibus private bill to be reported with one provision that will make it a public bill on this calendar. I have no objection to the merits of the bill, but I do not think it ought to be on this calendar.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. I quite agree with the conclusion of the gentleman that this is substantially a private claims bill, but most of the claims referred to have been passed upon by the Comptroller General—not all of them. It is the general policy of those watching the Private Claims Calendar to approve bills recommended or approved by the Comptroller General. I have gone over rather carefully the various items providing for payment of claims, and I am inclined to think that even though the bill is subject to the criticism which the gentleman from New York has made, that it is a private claims bill with one exception only, which makes it in order on the Consent Calendar, nevertheless we should go through with it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We want it known, however, that any attempt to bring in an omnibus private bill on the Consent Calendar will be resisted.

Mr. BLACK. We do not expect to bring in any omnibus bill. The only omnibus bill we have in mind is a collection of the bills of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA]. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. With that assurance from the chairman of the Committee on Claims, I shall not object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, there is one series of claims to which I think criticism may be lodged, and that is those to the various mariners who went to the rescue of a distressed aviator at sea, where claims are allowed for $338 for the loss of profits that might have been gained by collecting a school of fish. I think that amount should certainly be reduced by $200.

Mr. BLACK. I do not know anything about aviators, fish, or mariners. So I shall not object.

Mr. STAFFORD. With that understanding, I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That payment to the American Appraisal Co. for services rendered in the amount of $750 for the appraisal of the Peter Lyall plant at Montreal, Canada, and for services rendered in the amount of $1,250 for the appraisal of the Long Island Air Reserve Depot, New York, is hereby authorized to be made from the proceeds of the sale of surplus real estate under the jurisdiction of the War Department not as yet deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the military post construction fund, as provided for by the act of Congress approved March 12, 1926 (44 Stat. 203).

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Western Electric Co. (Inc.) the sum of $7,192.35 in full satisfaction for services and materials furnished the War Department in connection with a contract dated June 5, 1920, and for completing certain work in connection with subaqueous sound-ranging equipment for seacoast defenses.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all of section 2.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, notwithstanding the provisions of the act of July 16, 1914 (38 Stat. 508), to adjust and settle the claims of John A. Belhan and the Standard Oil Co. in the amounts of $356 and $8.49, respectively, for rental and operation of an automobile used in connection with improvements to the road system in the Vicksburg National Military Park, Miss., during the fiscal year 1931, and to certify same for payment from the appropriation "Vicksburg National Military Park," 1931.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 12, page 2, strike out the figure "3" and insert the figure "2."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust and settle the following claims and certify the same to Congress:

(a) Jay Street Terminal on account of damages suffered by reason of a collision with the bulkhead of claimant by the United States Army mine planter General E. O. C. Ord, in the East River, on or about September 3, 1929: $1,097.

(b) A. J. Segel on account of damages suffered by reason of an Army recruiting sign falling, during a storm, on his automobile while parked on a public street on or about March 26, 1930: $10.

(c) Alleghany Forging Co. on account of damages suffered by reason of excess in freight, hauling, labor, and incidental expenses due to shipment by the United States of salvaged material, purchased by claimant to wrong destination: $174.92.

(d) Walter Bell on account of damages suffered by reason of destruction of mature vines of a cranberry bog by fire, which started on Camp Dix Military Reservation, and extended over said bog on or about June 3, 1930: $2,500.

(e) Carl B. King Drilling Co., on account of damages suffered to its airplane due to an Army airplane running into it at Clover Field, Calif., on or about August 2, 1930: $1,722.03.

(f) M. Giacalone, on account of damages suffered while engaged in rescuing an Army aviator and assisting in salvaging an Army airplane from the sea off the coast of Hawaii on or about October 30, 1930: $459.61.

(g) Jact Buono, on account of damages suffered while engaged in rescuing an Army aviator and assisting in salvaging an Army airplane from the sea off the coast of Hawaii on or about October 30, 1930, $469.88.

(h) Joseph Asaro, on account of damages suffered while engaged in rescuing an Army aviator and assisting in salvaging an Army airplane from the sea off the coast of Hawaii on or about October 30, 1930: $459.

(i) Sam Harrison, on account of damages suffered by reason of a bomb dropping from an Army airship onto a farmhouse owned by him near Scott Field, Illinois: $1,982.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 22, on page 2, strike out the figure "4" and insert the figure "3."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK: In line 12, on page 4, strike out "onto" and insert "on."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word, to ask the chairman in charge of the bill if these paragraphs are not claims bills all carried in one bill, and thus brought up on Consent Calendar rather than the Private Calendar?

Mr. BLACK. These bills are claims that came to the committee directly from the Speaker's office, with accompanying letters from the War Department and the Comptroller General.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What is the total amount involved in the bill?

Mr. BLACK. It is not very heavy. I do not recall the total.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What is it—$10,000, $20,000, or $30,000?

Mr. BLACK. It is not that much. It is very small.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The point is the Claims Calendar is badly congested with claims running in numbers on the calendar as high as 900. Occasionally an evening has been had, and occasionally an afternoon has been had, for the consideration of claims bills, but now, when it is assumed the session is about to adjourn, an omnibus claims bill is run in on consent day, with conversation carried on in almost a whisper between the two distinguished general objectors, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, I raised my voice so that even those in the galleries could hear me.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The galleries could not hear the gentleman.

I withdraw any objection I had to this claims bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 4, line 2, strike out "$459.61" and insert in lieu thereof "$309.61."

Page 4, line 6, strike out "$469.88" and insert in lieu thereof "$319.88".

Page 4, line 10, strike out "$459" and insert in lieu thereof "$309."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, let me ask the gentleman from Wisconsin how he arrives at the corrected figures?

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman had been giving his keen ear and eagle eye——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I can not do that. If the gentleman can tell us without going into all this hot air and thin talk, I would like to hear him.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is something more than hot air; it is facts I am giving the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. But the gentleman from Wisconsin can throw more words—literally throw more words—around a thin idea than any man in this part of the United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not compete with the distinguished gentleman from Washington. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. I do not think these Republican colleagues should be fighting among themselves.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I want to know how the gentleman arrives at these corrected figures when he says this bill came out of the Speaker's rooms.

Mr. SABATH. I know the gentleman from Wisconsin will be able to answer that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. He says with the assistance of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. Maybe the gentleman from Wisconsin can answer——

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is in error again. The gentleman is chairman of the War Department Appropriations Subcommittee.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I asked for information as to the nature of these claims.

Mr. STAFFORD. These claims refer to the claims of three fishermen who went to the rescue of a distressed aviator at sea. The War Department estimated that the loss of these three seamen for one day's catch at sea was $338.25.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Twenty-six cents was it not?

Mr. STAFFORD. I suggested to the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Claims Committee, that this seemed to be a pretty large amount for just one day's catch and should be reduced by $200, but the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] suggested that we better cut it down only $150, and I made the reduction $150. So there should be no kick from these three fishermen on this amount as fair compensation for one day's labor in going to the rescue of this distressed airship at sea.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin inform the gentleman from Washington in addition that they salvaged an engine which was worth $5,361.97.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What is the catch per day now estimated to be worth?

Mr. STAFFORD. Inasmuch as the gentleman comes from a fishing State, he is better qualified to know that than I am.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw any objection I may have.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Page 4, line 14, strike out the figure "5" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "4."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Strike out all of sections 6 and 7 and insert in lieu thereof section 5, as follows:

"SEC. 5. That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized to allow transportation accounts for private automobiles of officers, warrant officers, nurses, enlisted men, or civilian employees shipped as their authorized baggage allowance from October 12, 1927, to October 10, 1929, and within the authorized weight allowance, at classification rates charged by the transportation companies: Provided, That where any amounts have been collected for shipments made during such period of the difference between classification rates and household goods rates as authorized by existing law the payment, upon presentation of claims therefor, of amounts thus collected to those from whom collected is authorized and directed."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment striking out section 5.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division of the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment, striking out sections 6 and 7.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Page 6, beginning with line 18, insert section 5.

"SEC. 5. That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized to allow transportation accounts for private automobiles of officers, warrant officers, nurses, enlisted men, or civilian employees shipped as their authorized baggage allowance from October 12, 1927, to October 10, 1929, and within the authorized weight allowance, at classification rates charged by the transportation companies: Provided, That where any amounts have been collected for shipments made during such period of the difference between classification rates and household goods rates as authorized by existing law the payment, upon presentation of claims therefor, of amounts thus collected to those from whom collected is authorized and directed."

The committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment as a new section, section 5, of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 4, after line 25, insert a new section, to be known as section 5 and to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That the payment of any and all the claims herein authorized shall be in full payment thereof by the Government."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the customary attorney's fee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: At the end of the bill insert the following:

"Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

HOME LOAN BANK BILL

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 12280) to create Federal home-loan banks, to provide for the supervision thereof, and for other purposes, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 12280, known as the home loan bank bill, disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I will not object, I would like to ask my friend whether or not the House conferees will give consideration to the proposition of enabling the House, if necessary, to vote on the rider attached to the bill by the Senate, in other words, the $1,000,000,000 expansion of currency rider which was attached in the Senate—whether or not the conferees on the part of the House will see that the membership of the House has an opportunity to vote on that separately in case it is necessary to take such action.

Mr. STEAGALL. I do not know that I can assure the gentleman just what will be done with that particular amendment to the bill. I can only voice my own views in the matter. I do not know how other members of the conference committee look upon that amendment, or how they will stand with reference to that or any other amendment.

Mr. McCORMACK. Did the gentleman's committee consider that bill?

Mr. STEAGALL. No. The Glass amendment has never been considered in this House. The Glass amendment, adopted as a rider to this bill, was reported to the Senate by the Banking and Currency Committee as a substitute for the Goldsborough currency expansion measure which passed the House.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman's statement is perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Alabama knows the keen interest of a great many of us in section 5. Section 5 provides, gentlemen, that no institution shall derive any benefits from this act, be eligible for membership, or have the right to retain membership if such institution charges borrowers on their homes more than the legal and lawful rate of interest. Section 5 has been emasculated by the Senate. In other words, the bill now permits the charging of the maximum legal rate and other charges such as commissions, fines, and penalties. In many instances building and loan associations charge penalties which amount to as much as 24 per cent a year. I want to call the gentleman's attention to that and to beg of him not to surrender, because, after all, this is a bill to protect the home owners.

The President of the United States has taken pride in his suggestion to protect the home owners. This House has done likewise. If we surrender on that, we will be protecting a lot of loan sharks and racketeers and not the home owners. [Applause.]

Mr. STEAGALL. I will say to the gentleman from New York that I think upon reflection he will be sufficiently assured of my attitude with reference to the amendment offered by him if he will recall that I took the floor at the time in support of that amendment, which was adopted by the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, the expression used in the LaGuardia amendment is an unfortunate one. It used the expression "legal rate of interest" as against the contract rate of interest. I understood from the gentleman from New York that what he really intended was the contract rate of interest allowed by law.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will take the contract rate of interest, but not bonuses, commissions, penalties, and fines.

Mr. OVERTON. If you restrict it to the legal rate of interest, then you will disqualify State after State from enjoying the benefits of this act.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. My amendment is sufficiently broad, because it provides the maximum legal rate which, of course, embraces the contract rate.

Mr. OVERTON. There is an obvious difference between the legal rate and the contract rate allowed by law.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If the gentleman is satisfied with the contract rate, eliminating bonuses, commissions, charges, penalties, and fines, which result in a usurious rate, then we are in complete accord.

Mr. OVERTON. That is perfectly satisfactory to me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to emphasize what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] has pointed out in connection with this bill. This bill was considered at great length by the Senate and many amendments were placed thereon. Under the attempt to filibuster by certain Members of that other body, they have substituted this proposal to permit an increase of the circulating medium under the provisions of this bill by $1,000,000,000. One billion dollars' worth of credit established in the Federal reserve system will, under certain conditions, make possible an inflation up to $20,000,000,000. That is a very dangerous proposal in this bill and I am unalterably opposed to it. Unless there can be assurance given that that will be eliminated this bill should not be sent to conference.

Mr. McCORMACK. Might I suggest, unless we are given assurance that we will be given an opportunity to vote on it.

Mr. McFADDEN. I will say to the gentleman that this is piecemeal legislation pertaining to the Federal reserve system. We have done about all that should be done by way of piecemeal legislation at this session of Congress. I think under all the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I shall object to the bill going to conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield in order that I may make a suggestion to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. STEAGALL. I may suggest that under strict parliamentary procedure I have not the floor any longer.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] has asked unanimous consent to agree to the conference asked by the Senate. The only query that comes is whether there is objection to this request.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] objected, and I ask him to withhold his objection a moment.

Mr. McFADDEN. I withhold my objection.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Under the rules of the House the amendment added by the Senate would not be germane to the original House bill and if offered here would be subject to a point of order. Under the later practice in the House, when a bill has come from the Senate with an amendment subject to a point of order in the House, while, of course, a point of order can not be sustained as to the Senate amendment, it has been the custom that such an amendment has been submitted to the House for separate action and I think this practice should be followed in this instance.

Mr. McFADDEN. But, Mr. Speaker, I understand there are 50 or 60 amendments which have been placed on this bill during its consideration yesterday and the days before in the Senate.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, there are not more than 15 or 20 amendments on the bill.

Mr. McFADDEN. I have not had a chance to examine the amendments and therefore I shall insist upon my objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I suggest to my distinguished friend, in whose remarks I am in complete accord, that the important thing is the passage of a home loan bank bill. The people of the country and most of us in the House here are interested in its passage, and may I ask my friend to have the same confidence that I have—and I know that he has—in our conferees. I am sure we will secure a separate vote on the rider put on in the Senate, and may I ask my friend not to press his objection to this bill going to conference, in view of the fact that we have complete confidence in the conferees on the part of the House. I am satisfied they will give us a separate vote on this matter.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, under ordinary circumstances I would agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts, but there is a move on to pass this bill regardless of these amendments, and for that reason I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects.

Let the Chair make a statement. The Chair was over in the Senate a moment ago and talked with several Senators. Unless the House stays in session a sufficient length of time for the Senate to agree to the conference asked by the House on the relief bill, necessarily it will require another day before adjournment. The idea of the Chair, which, I take it, is the idea of most of the gentlemen here, would be to continue for a little while with a view to getting this message from the Senate so that conferees may meet to-night or at some early hour in the morning. The Chair can never speak without some hesitation about information which he gets from the Senate as to possibilities of this kind, but the Chair talked with them a few moments ago and they hope to get through with this matter at an early hour. Gentlemen will have to draw their own conclusions as to just what this means, but the Chair thinks we better try for 30 minutes, at least, to go on with the Consent Calendar, and see if we can not have this conference to-morrow morning or to-night.

Mr. SNELL. If the Chair will permit me to ask a question or two, what does the Chair propose to do—bring in a rule to send the home-loan bank bill to conference? The Rules Committee, I understand, is meeting now; and if the Chair will give the order, they will report out a rule to send this bill to conference. If I understand the situation at the other end of the Capitol, they are not going to do anything until we make some disposition of this bill.

The SPEAKER. If that is the case, the Chair will state to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] that if the Republican Senate is going to say to the House of Representatives that they will not agree to a conference asked by the House of Representatives until we agree to their conference, I say to call their hand [applause], and we might as well understand that now.

Mr. SNELL. I may say that so far as I am personally concerned—and I think I am speaking for a good many Members on this side—we are very much interested in the home loan bank bill [applause], and we are going to use every possible effort at our command to pass that bill before this House adjourns. [Applause.] And I may say to the distinguished Speaker that I am just as anxious to adjourn as he is, but we are not going to hurry unless we have some action on this bill. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair say to the minority leader, inasmuch as he has asked the Chair a question, that the Chair is not going to put any impediment in the way of the passage or the consideration of the home loan bank bill; but the Chair does take the position that the House of Representatives is as much a dignified body as the Senate and has as much rights as the Senate. The Chair has always stood up for the House of Representatives and the Chair is going to do so now.

Mr. SNELL. Let me say that I respectfully request the Speaker to ask the Rules Committee to bring in a rule to send the home loan bank bill to conference. This is in keeping with the dignity of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker has made very few requests of the Rules Committee since he has been Speaker of the House.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman from New York has had some experience, and we know what control the Speaker has over that committee, and I make that request now.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next bill on the Consent Calendar.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE FOR EASTERN AND WESTERN DISTRICT OF SOUTH CAROLINA

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 11676, providing for the appointment of a commissioner to hear cases arising under contracts of war-risk insurance in the District Court for the Eastern and Western District of South Carolina.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I object.

CONSERVATION OF OIL AND GAS

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 12076, for the conservation of oil and gas and protection of American sources thereof from injury, correlation of domestic and foreign production, and consenting to an interstate compact for such purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

There was no objection.

ADDING CERTAIN LANDS TO THE BOISE NATIONAL FOREST

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 413, to add certain lands to the Boise National Forest.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, this bill provides for the addition of an area to the Boise National Forest. The report shows that it is for the protection of the watershed, so that the existing irrigation project will not be impaired by sediment that may flow into Snake River and Fayette River. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho to make an explanation as to the character and extent of the land sought to be added to the national forest.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes an addition of approximately 254,872 acres to the Boise National Forest. Of that amount, about 155,000 acres are privately owned land, and about 95,088 acres are public domain, belonging, of course, to the Federal Government.

The reason why this area ought to be added to the national forest in the first place is because the land itself is essentially valuable for forest purposes. It is suitable for grazing but is essentially forest land. Some of the land has standing timber upon it, but for the most part the land has been stripped of valuable timber and is what we would call cut-over land. Some of it has second-growth timber, too small to be merchantable, and most of it is potentially forest area.

The land is part of the watershed of the Boise and Payette Rivers, which drain into the Arrowrock and Black Canyon Reservoirs, which impound the water used on the Boise reclamation project.

This project has cost the Federal Government something like $17,000,000. To-day the Boise-Payette project has values, including rural and city improvements, aggregating $50,000,000. The land that it is proposed be included in the Boise National Forest will be handled and administered as other lands in the national forest to which it is adjacent.

Mr. GOSS. It is subject to the general transfer provisions?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; the land in private ownership would not come under the administration of the national forest, although it would be included within the external boundaries. Again, the gentleman is correct in the matter of exchange, in that the land would come under the act of Congress of March 20, 1922, under which private land within a national forest may be received in exchange for land or timber in the national forest.

Mr. GOSS. I was in hopes that gentlemen from the West might be able to prepare an amendment in connection with bills of this kind, overcoming the objection that I have raised to all of these bills. The gentleman well knows my position in cases of this kind. I hoped that gentlemen interested in the matter could get together on some provision that would safeguard the Government in transferring these lands.

Mr. FRENCH. That is precisely what we have tried to do. The gentleman has correctly pointed out land frauds in the past and emphasized the fact that we must safeguard all land exchanges and all land transactions that fraud may not occur. I am for the strictest kind of supervision, and I am with him 100 per cent in his desire to safeguard the Federal Government against every opportunity for fraud.

Mr. GOSS. That is why I am in hopes that we can get some amendment to straighten out the whole matter. For instance, I might refer to the prohibition-enforcement bureau, not to bring in that matter, of course, but many prohibition agents have been fraudulent, according to the records of that bureau. It might be possible to have something like that under this. I would like to see it continued under the jurisdiction of Congress rather than to let it get from under our hands forever.

Mr. FRENCH. On the other hand, I firmly believe that the Government's interests can be safeguarded better by fixing responsibility in definite and direct manner upon a responsible officer. Let me call attention to the outstanding fraud committed against the Government under the Mount Rainier exchange law that the gentleman himself referred to some days ago. This was in the nineties, when the Congress included a few lines in a bill which provided that the owners of lands in certain great areas might have the privilege of surrendering their land for scrip, and the scrip was made good or usable on any of the public domain belonging to the United States. In other words, land that was worth absolutely nothing from the standpoint of timber and grazing or agriculture was surrendered back to the Government and scrip was obtained for it, and that scrip was placed on land worth $100 or more an acre. A crime like that would not be committed by a public officer upon whom definite responsibility had been placed.

Mr. GOSS. If the Congress could make that great mistake in those days, it seems to me that it might be very possible for a field agent to do it now.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, we took time by the forelock and prevented that outrage from forever after being perpetrated on the Government or the people of the United States.

Mr. FRENCH. The gentleman is correct in that. Since that time the Congress has tried to pass laws that will prevent any such outrage. We are to-day operating under a provision of law that permits exchanges. But upon what basis? Not upon the basis of an acre of land being a unit of value, when an acre of land may be worth nothing if it is in one locality and worth $1,000 if it is in another, but the plan of exchange has to do with actual values of the land, including timber, after closest investigation. In exchange of lands responsibility is placed by law upon the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture. Neither one alone may act. Each one thus becomes a check upon the other.

These two Cabinet officers may approve only after the provisions of law have been complied with. The provisions of law call for the minutest examination on the part of the field representatives of the Department of Agriculture, so that values may be determined and these values are used as the basis of exchange. The law further calls for publication of the proposed exchange in a paper in the county or counties where the land to be received or the land or timber to be exchanged is situated. Publication must be made for four weeks, so that the whole world will be given notice of what it is proposed shall be done. During the years that that law has been in operation, I know of no fraud, I know of no wrong that has been perpetrated against the Government. I think that the gentleman from Connecticut will recognize that this is a matter of administration, not a matter of legislation. I have talked over with the gentleman the plan that he has proposed by which it could be rereferred to the Congress, and I have talked the proposal over with Members from the West, and I think with practical uniformity they feel that such a plan would be a step backward and not forward. This body should pass upon general policies but it is not competent to pass upon the details involving values of acres of lands and values of timber. Indeed for the Congress to assume responsibility would be to remove present responsibility from the shoulders of administrative officers, because they would feel that after all the final decision would be up to Congress and not to them.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I yield.

Mr. GOSS. That is partially correct, but I would like to see Congress have the veto power of what has been decided in the field. Certainly the Congress can not go very far astray if it has that power of ratification after the field agents have carefully gone into the matter. In some of these tracts that have passed, of 500,000 acres, as little as 10,000 acres have been transferred back and forth.

Mr. FRENCH. Surely the departments are proceeding with caution.

Mr. GOSS. I think that is a great deal of authority to give, and until we can get together on the matter I would like to have this passed over.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit in that particular?

Mr. FRENCH. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was rather influenced in connection with this bill by the fact that of the 250,000 acres, 95,000 acres are already owned by the public, a part of the public domain, and the remaining 160,000 acres have scrub growth of very little value on the watershed, which to-day, with low values for stumpage, could be purchased for a mere song, where, if business conditions improve, stumpage will naturally go up, and with the increased growth the Government could not make as favorable exchange or purchase of these 160,000 acres. If eventually, why not now?

Mr. GOSS. I have in mind a bill that was under consideration a few days ago when the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] participated in the debate, in connection with the matter of these logging shows close to the lumber mills, and the idea that they could get these timber rights in the national forest, and then after our protection, to transfer them out, for better shows, nearer to the logging operations than those far away and inaccessible.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In other words, the exchange is almost continuous. It is almost a constant change, and this is what the gentleman from Connecticut has in mind, because I have talked it over with him—some of us are under the impression that this is what is going on: First, the land where the trees have been cut off, the logged-off land, is exchanged for timberland. Then they cut the timber and sell the timber, and then they let them bring it back and exchange it back again, so that the advantage and profit and benefit of what we believe is reforestation and conservation is going to the particular enterprises or groups who are on the inside and are able to make these exchanges.

Mr. GOSS. That is the point exactly.

Mr. FRENCH. The gentleman from New York may or may not be correct. Technically it would be possible for the Forest Service to acquire a tract of land on an exchange either of land or timber, and in turn at some time to exchange the same tract for other land. In the years of administration of the law by the Forest Service I never heard of such a case.

These forest lands and potential forest lands should have been included in forest reserves many years ago. They never should have passed to private ownership. We are now trying to salvage what we may; we are trying to undo wrongs that were perpetrated 30 to 50 years ago. We are trying to preserve watersheds from erosion, improve range conditions, and build up forests for their ultimate timber values.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Here are watershed lands that it is generally admitted should be reforested. They are cut-over lands with very small growth, stubble growth, and the like. They can be purchased at a nominal sum of $3 or $5 an acre. In the State of Wisconsin the National Forestry Association is purchasing cut-over lands at that price for national forestry purposes. If the fundamental principle is correct that these are watershed lands and should be in the national forests, why not then get them when the price is low and purchase them with timber on the forest reserves?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Because you are giving up the timber.

Mr. STAFFORD. We will give up the timber; yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If we reforest the lands, let us conserve it.

Mr. GOSS. That is right.

Mr. STAFFORD. But we do not. I got my first ideas of reforestation back in 1908 as a member of the Mann Paper and Pulp Commission. The problem before that commission was whether we would have enough pulpwood to supply the manufacturers of newsprint paper in this country. We visited the various pulpwood districts in this country, and we found only one paper mill owning forest lands which was engaged in a real reforestation policy similar to that which is carried on in Sweden, similar to that carried on in Germany and other countries.

That is cutting out the matured timber and leaving the undersized to grow up to full growth. That is the policy that the Forest Service is following to-day. They are giving contracts for the matured timber and allowing it to be cut off but withholding the medium-sized timber to mature. If I am in error in that position, then my whole argument falls. We are exchanging only that which is salable.

Mr. GOSS. But that may be transferred out again at any time, even if it is secured for watershed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not only that, but timber has a certain life, just like an individual, and after it reaches a certain age it no longer matures. It goes backward. It dies. So proper reforestation is to cut the timber after it matures. That is all this is.

Mr. GOSS. But what I am complaining of is to take these large tracts and transfer the tracts into the forest reserve, if the whole tract outside of the forest reserve is near the logging camps, to be cut off, so that when we let this second-growth timber grow up we can transfer that into the forest reserve.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

GUNNISON NATIONAL FOREST, COLO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12126, to add certain lands to the Gunnison National Forest, Colo.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks upon this bill, I desire to say that the gentleman from Colorado, Mr. TAYLOR, made a very clear and convincing presentation of the need for the enactment of this bill. The committee was glad to report the bill favorably, and I sincerely trust the Congress will see fit, at an early date, to enact it into law.

I can not refrain from taking this occasion to pay a tribute to the services rendered in the House by the gentleman from Colorado during the 24 years that he has been a Member.

Under the rules of the House seniority alone becomes a great asset to a Member in enabling him the better to serve his district and constituents. Seniority gives rank on committees and even chairmanships, which can be secured only after years of patient waiting. Only 9 of the 435 Members exceed Mr. TAYLOR in seniority.

But length of service in this particular case has brought something besides seniority. The gentleman from Colorado has grown in wisdom, in breadth of vision, and in depth of understanding with each successive year. The valuable legislative training acquired through his past years of service have rendered him an able, efficient, and influential Representative of his people.

It is most fortunate for the West that a man like ED TAYLOR is chairman of the committee which appropriates for the Interior Department, which has to do with the most important of western activities. I have talked with practically all of the western Congressmen, and I can say that nearly every one of them, without regard to party, agrees with the sentiments I am here expressing and hopes with me that Mr. TAYLOR will live to serve many additional years in this House of Representatives, feeling as we do that his services here are highly beneficial not only to his constituents and the people of his own State but also to the entire West and to the Nation as well.

EXTENDING PROVISIONS OF FOREST EXCHANGE ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 763, to extend the provisions of the forest exchange act to lands adjacent to the national forests in the State of Oregon.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman withhold his point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No; I do not want to withhold it. I insist on my point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, owing to the great pressure put on me by those who have bills on the Consent Calendar, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

PRODUCTION OF SULPHUR UPON THE PUBLIC DOMAIN

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3276, to amend the act entitled "An act to promote the production of sulphur upon the public domain within the State of Louisiana," approved April 17, 1926.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I inquire of the gentleman from New Mexico under what law sulphur is now mined in the State of New Mexico?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Under a local law passed by the State legislature.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. That is the Napoleonic Code, is it not?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes; it comes from the Napoleonic Code.

Mr. STAFFORD. My inquiry is as to whether the national law pertains to the acquisition of mineral rights, particularly sulphur, on the public domain in New Mexico.

Mr. CHAVEZ. There is no law in the Federal statutes by which anyone can get a permit to prospect for sulphur in the State of New Mexico on the public domain and we want to get in the same status that Louisiana is in now.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am under the impression the mineral law that was passed some 10 or 12 years ago applied also to sulphur.

Mr. CHAVEZ. No. It did not extend to sulphur because they have been trying to prospect for sulphur in the public domain; but inasmuch as there is no authority under the Federal law by which a prospector can prospect for sulphur in the public domain, they have been unable to do anything about it.

I may say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the situation in my State is this: We have sulphur in the public domain and there are people who are willing to invest their money and spend their money to go into the public domain and develop this rich product in the State.

Under the 1926 law which was passed for the benefit of the State of Louisiana, that State has taken advantage of prospecting in the public domain. New Mexico would like to be in the same situation, so that anyone in the State or anywhere can go in the public domain in New Mexico and prospect for sulphur; and if he were successful, the Secretary of the Interior would be authorized to issue him a permit to the extent of 640 acres, but not for more than two years.

Mr. STAFFORD. If a permit should be issued by the Secretary of the Interior, what would be the obligation of the permittee so far as returns to the National Government are concerned?

Mr. CHAVEZ. According to the 1926 law, the law which was passed for Louisiana, the obligation would be as indicated in the report, if the gentleman will look at the report.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have examined the report and have it underscored, but I wish the gentleman would state the matter again.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Section 2 of the 1926 law placed the obligation on the permittee. He would be working on a royalty basis, and 5 per cent of the net proceeds would go to the Federal Government.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the gentleman, so far as sulphur on the public domain in New Mexico is concerned to-day, the Government can not grant any permit and can get no return from the operation of these sulphur mines.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was under the impression—I wish some of the gentlemen from the Western States were here to confirm my impression—that the mineral laws that were passed some years ago when Mr. Scott Ferris was chairman of the Committee on Agriculture included sulphur as a mineral.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I am positive that law does not include it, because people have tried to get permits for that purpose from the Secretary of the Interior and have been unable to do so.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. May I ask the gentleman this—and this is the same question I have asked in all these prospecting bills—Are the permits to prospect limited solely to individuals?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I shall read that section of the 1926 act to the gentleman.

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to grant to any qualified applicant a prospecting permit, which shall give the exclusive right to prospect for sulphur in lands belonging to the United States located in the State of Louisiana.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is all right. I understand exactly what the gentleman is trying to do—to extend the same benefits to the State of New Mexico—but prospecting is always associated with individual efforts, rather than to allow some eastern chemical company to go into the gentleman's State and through several of its employees obtain the permit. It seems to me that under our laws permission to prospect should be limited to individuals.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Of course, I believe I understand what the gentleman from New York has in mind, but it does not appear quite right to me that any applicant should be refused the privilege of applying. I feel like the gentleman from New York feels, that individuals should be allowed to apply, but under certain circumstances a company should have that right. Of course, I do not believe they have that in mind here, because it is limited to 640 acres, and that would probably only apply to an individual. So I do not believe anything the gentleman from New York has in mind would come about.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, where is there anything that limits this permit to two years?

Mr. CHAVEZ. The first section of the act of 1926 provides for a period of not exceeding two years. That is in the authorizing clause, the one that authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to grant permits.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where does the gentleman find that?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I am reading from page 2 of the report, chapter 158 of the laws. This limits the area that can be allowed under the permit.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under this law all the Secretary of the Interior could exact as a royalty would be 5 per cent of the gross value of the output of sulphur.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is all the Secretary of the Interior could exact, and, as I understand, there have been very fine results as far as Louisiana is concerned, and I think it will bring results from our State.

Mr. STAFFORD. Have you many sulphur deposits in your State, and are they all compact in one district or are they scattered generally throughout the State?

Mr. CHAVEZ. They are scattered; but I know that in some particular districts they are very compact. However, the geologists and the people who investigate these particular things feel deposits will be found throughout the State.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the House as to what percentage of the sulphur consumed in this country is mined in Louisiana?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I could not tell the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are there importations from abroad as far as sulphur is concerned?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I could not tell the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was under the impression that Louisiana and Texas mined all the sulphur used in this country.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I should not be surprised but what that is correct, and we want to get in the same position. We believe we can help the country by having this authority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to promote the production of sulphur upon the public domain within the State of Louisiana," approved April 17, 1926, is amended by striking out the words "State of Louisiana" wherever they appear in such act and inserting in lieu thereof "States of Louisiana and New Mexico."

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word, and I shall be brief. I merely rise at this time to ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of H. R. 10017, the O'Connor beer bill, introduced by that sterling Democrat Mr. O'CONNOR, so we can follow the immediate pledge of the Democratic convention, change the Volstead Act, get some revenue into the Treasury, and furnish employment before Congress adjourns. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not recognize the gentleman for the purpose of making that request.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But the gentleman has made it.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SCHAFER. When will a Member of the House, an humble Member, be permitted to propound that unanimous-consent request?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He will not be permitted to do it now, the Chair will state.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF THE JUDICIAL CODE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4624, to amend the Judicial Code by adding a new section to be numbered 274 D.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WAIVER OF PROSECUTION BY INDICTMENT IN CERTAIN CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2655, providing for waiver of prosecution by indictment in certain criminal proceedings.

Mr. LAGUARDIA and Mr. BLACK objected.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, may I point out to the membership of the House in connection with this bill that there is a minority report signed by 11 members of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Is the gentleman included?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

ADJUSTMENT OF CLAIMS TO OLMSTEAD LANDS IN THE STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10271, to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to adjust claims to so-called Olmstead lands in the State of North Carolina.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

OSAGE NATION OF INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2352, amending the act entitled "An act to authorize the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment in the civilization fund claim of the Osage Nation of Indians against the United States, approved February 6, 1921 (41 Stat. 1097)."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DEDICATION OF GEORGE F. HIGHWAY

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a copy of a speech I made at the dedication of the George F. Highway, at Endicott, N. Y., last Saturday. I consider this one of the ablest statements on government I have ever made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech made by me at the dedication of the George F. Highway, at Endicott, N. Y., last Saturday:

It is a priceless privilege to be allowed to join in this dedication of the George F. Highway to-day. Last summer I attended the celebration of George F.'s coming into this valley 50 years ago, the greatest personal tribute I ever saw paid one man. That celebration was filled with heart throbs, good will, and friendship.

Both George F. and I are now in training for the 100-year celebration, for we don't intend to let John D. Rockefeller put over anything on us. John D. is only 93 or 94 and going strong.

At that 50-year celebration I pointed out that the difference between a dill pickle and George F. was that the pickle shrinks and shrivels on the outside and gets sour and salty on the inside, while George F. (God bless him) reflects the sweetness that is on the inside, for on the outside he is our "Sunshine Kid."

Did you ever stop to think that it took real parents to produce a pair of kids like these Johnson boys—George F. and C. Fred—and as grandparents they are a real success, too, for this new crop of Johnsons is coming along and carrying on the best traditions of both parents and grandparents.

The more you study the Johnson boy (George F.) the more you find to admire. His life is like this highway we dedicate to-day—it starts from somewhere and gets somewhere. Definiteness of purpose from the time he walked into the front office and told the "boss" he could lead that busted business out of the slough of despond—a real objective realized—a dream come true—farms have given way to factories, waste places to homes, schools, churches, hospitals, playgrounds, swimming pools, and a multitude of things that add in helpfulness and happiness to thousands of lives because a man who dreamed a dream and dared came into the valley of opportunity.

This is the week of our Nation's birthday, and I want to address you briefly on Our Representative Government.

Our Government is being tested as never before, times are hard, millions are out of employment, the very form of our Government is being severely criticized and challenged, taxes are almost breaking the backs of all of us, with the whole world upset and governments tottering and tumbling in the backwash of the World War.

I do not intend discussing the governments of the rest of the world, either their form, their duty, or anything concerning them—primarily that is the job of their people, and I am an old-fashioned Presbyterian home missionary, believing our nose doesn't belong in somebody else's business. We have a man-sized job in tending to our own big job of getting our people at work at a fair day's pay, reducing taxes, and strengthening our Government.

Our American citizens need a restatement of a few fundamentals regarding their Government.

Government is civilization's handmaiden.

Government is the prerequisite for the progress of civilization.

Our form of government is representative (republic).

Good government and good citizenship are synonymous.

Bad government thrives most where good citizenship thrives least.

Good government is sometimes expensive but never extravagant.

Good government depends on the kind of representatives we choose.

Almost everyone is "knocking" Government—National, State, and local.

You are either well represented or misrepresented in your Government—local, State, National—and you, Mr. and Mrs. Citizen, are responsible for that selection.

Good representatives are men and women of character, ability, integrity, and industry, who understand the true functions of government, and without fear or favor fight for same. Patriots before they are partisans.

Miss-representatives are what too many kick about and yet actively or passively permit to get into office.

Miss-representatives are usually slivers in the body politic, elected on 1-plank platforms, with one idea—seeking, in a Government dedicated to equality, to put over inequality.

Miss-representative government is usually extravagant and usually results in favors for the organized minority that sends its favorites into office—and favors cost money, hence more taxes.

Almost every legislative body has many of those miss-representatives, primarily representing "organized minorities," and they come high to the taxpayers. Let me prove it to you in the two legislative bodies I know (and what is true in Washington is true in almost every other legislative body—State or local).

At the opening of this session of the House and Senate bills calling for appropriations totaling practically $29,000,000,000 were introduced. Senator X headed the list with bills calling for expenditures of $5,750,000,000 (that Senator was elected as a Republican, yet is usually antagonizing the principles of the party he chooses to belong to). Up and down the line you will find Republicans and Democrats introducing such bills to provide pork and popularity to assure reelection at the expense of the taxpayers. Small States with a small population, yet equal representation in the United States Senate, have outstanding spenders of some one else's money.

What created such conditions? Careless, thoughtless citizenship. Tinkers tinkering with the Constitution, the direct primary, popular selection of United States Senators, have broken down party government, and the demands of the "home folks" for pork has helped create, in the mind of trick politicians, the necessity of their miss-representatives to "bring home the bacon" so the national motive in action is displaced by the local motive.

No one knows but what will admit that I helped fight for a tariff on shoes, and no one knows but what will admit that it took long hours, long-distance telephones, telegrams galore, with active personal effort and ability to plead the cause of the shoe workers, because I know what being a worker means; and if they are going to protect one American product, all are entitled to protection.

George F. can bear witness to the special trips I took to consult with him and his lieutenants and they, in turn, can also bear witness that others in their own shoe industry tried to double-deck us, but we won our battle for the shoe workers and while the shoe workers are not as prosperous as they should be, or will be again, they at least have some work, some pay, but you should go home and thank the Lord for the farsightedness of our beloved George F., and do not forget that the tariff plus George F. have made your condition better than millions in our country.

Go home and rededicate yourselves to patriotic, active citizenship, to the selection of those representatives who keep their word, who have the necessary character, stability, and spinal column to stand up and strengthen government, and not bow to the will of any organized minority because it is the easy political way.

These are difficult times in our Nation's Capitol; politics has too much abounded. It has not been easy for me to loyally follow our President in some few instances, but I deferred my judgment to our chosen leader's judgment, not being willing to follow either political expediency or political adventurers, self-appointed leaders, for I believe our chosen leader should have his hands upheld, his Government and ours strengthened, and be he Republican or Democrat, I shall be willing to continue to follow the leadership of the one chosen by our people and keep my conscience clear so I can come back again and look you all in the face, having kept the faith.

Friends, I am happy to be here, happy to meet my constituents face to face. I have done the best I could for you as I have for our country, and as I have for our beloved George F., your captain and mine. May this George F. Highway see the return to better days, an intelligent, active patriotism that will help to perpetuate this Government of ours and strengthen all its cherished institutions.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11270, to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HIRE OF VEHICLES FROM POSTAL EMPLOYEES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9555, to authorize the Postmaster General to hire vehicles from postal employees.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

CŒUR D'ALENE AND ST. JOE NATIONAL FORESTS, IDAHO

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6659, for the inclusion of certain lands in the Cœur d'Alene and St. Joe National Forests, State of Idaho, and for other purposes.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF SETTLEMENT OF WAR CLAIMS ACT OF 1928

The Clerk called the next joint resolution, House Joint Resolution 416, to extend the time for filing claims under the settlement of war claims act of 1928, and for other purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the right to object, at the request of the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his objection. This is a joint resolution that has been approved by the Secretary of State. It will not cost the United States one cent and is simply a case where these claims, provided the German Government assents, may be submitted and approved. They can only be considered on their merits and there are a lot of women and children who are being denied their rights because they did not file their claims in time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I take exception to the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina that this bill has the approval of the Secretary of State. Far be it that the Secretary of State approves of this bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON. He says he has no objection to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The fact is there has been a continuous effort on the part of certain claimants to extend the time of the treaties providing for the consideration of these claims. The German Government has refused to assent to any extension of the time for the presentation of these claims. Many of these claims are for the benefit of claim agents who have large percentage fees in case the claims are allowed. This would impose an obligation of many hundreds of thousands of dollars upon the German Government and the German Government has signified very positively in times past that it is not willing to open up the treaty dates. What is the use of harassing them with this kind of legislation?

Mr. DOUGHTON. The Secretary of State has stated that he has no objection to the form or the substance of this resolution.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

THE SEMINOLE NATION OR TRIBE OF INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5846, authorizing the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Oklahoma to hear and determine certain claims of the Seminole Nation or Tribe of Indians.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RESTORATION OF HOMESTEAD RIGHTS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 4029, to restore homestead rights in certain cases.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE OTOE AND MISSOURIA TRIBES OF INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10927, conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to adjudicate the rights of the Otoe and Missouria Tribes of Indians to compensation on a basis of guardian and ward.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS LAKE CHAMPLAIN FROM EAST ALBURG, VT., TO WEST SWANTON, VT.

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, S. 1980, an act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Lake Champlain from East Alburg, Vt., to West Swanton, Vt.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, under the recommendation of the Bureau of Roads, the Department of Agriculture, I object.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill may pass over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 9642) entitled "An act to authorize supplemental appropriations for emergency highway construction, with a view to increasing employment," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. NORBECK, Mr. BROOKHART, Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH, Mr. GLASS, and Mr. WAGNER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOME LOAN BANK BILL

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 4940. An act to provide temporary aid to agriculture for the relief of the existing national economic emergency.

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair make a statement in regard to the situation. The Chair's information is that the Rules Committee, in view of the report which has been made by the Senate, are ready to bring in a rule for the consideration of the home loan bank bill. The Chair said a while ago that it depended on the action of the Senate.

If the House will stay in session for the next 10 minutes until the rule can be prepared and reported by the Rules Committee, it can be considered to-morrow.

Mr. MAPES. Will the Speaker allow me? Can not the same object be accomplished by giving unanimous consent for the Rules Committee to file their report at any time before 12 o'clock to-night?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania would withdraw his objection, unanimous consent might be given at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was stating his information about the probable action of the Rules Committee. Of course, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania would withdraw his objection, it could be sent to conference now, and the House could adjourn.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 12280, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. STEAGALL, Mr. STEVENSON, Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH, Mr. MCFADDEN, and Mr. STRONG of Kansas.

Mr. SNELL. Will the Chair allow me to make a short statement? The other day the Speaker took the opportunity to suggest that the responsibility for naming minority conferees was on the minority leader. He said if the minority leader had any real backbone he would take that responsibility. I told the Speaker at that time that whenever the responsibility came my way I would take it.

At this time I thought it was coming my way, and I requested the Speaker this morning to appoint as minority conferees two men who were on the Banking and Currency Committee and drafted this bill. I would like to know why the Speaker did not follow out the suggestion that he made the other day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say that he did not have any conversation with the minority leader concerning that matter. The minority leader did not give the Chair a list.

The Chair wants it understood that in a partisan matter he thinks the policy of the House is to leave it to the minority party to suggest conferees, but where there is a difference in the minority, and the Chair believes there is a difference in the minority at this time, as to the conferees, the Chair suggests that the better method would be to leave it to the House of Representatives. The Chair thinks that is a better policy where there is a division on the Republican side or on the Democratic side as the case may be. If the gentleman from New York desires to do so, he may make an issue as to whether the conferees representing the minority shall be Mr. MCFADDEN and Mr. STRONG or Mr. LUCE and Mr. CAMPBELL, and as the Chair understands from the Parliamentarian those are the names the gentleman sent up.

Mr. SNELL. Those are the names I sent up and desire to have appointed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will remember that he did not have any conference with the Chair about it. If the minority leader desires to make an issue as to who the conferees shall be on the Republican side as between Mr. MCFADDEN and Mr. STRONG or Mr. LUCE and Mr. CAMPBELL, the Chair is willing in this instance to submit it to the House of Representatives.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate it is entirely within the responsibility of the Speaker to appoint conferees; but in accordance with the statement the Speaker made the other day I respectfully request that he appoint the conferees I suggested. It is up to the Chair to do as he sees fit.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has the responsibility and he thinks ordinarily it would be his duty to carry out the request of the minority leader speaking for the Republican side of the House; but the Chair is pretty well informed that in a contest between those two gentlemen in the House of Representatives the House of Representatives must take the ordinary course and appoint the ranking members on the Banking and Currency Committee. The Chair takes the responsibility of appointing the conferees.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 3400. An act to amend an act of Congress approved June 18, 1898, entitled "An act to regulate plumbing and gas fitting in the District of Columbia"; and

S. 4741. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Wellsburg, W. Va.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 1260. An act for the relief of James E. Fraser;

H. R. 2010. An act for the relief of Malcolm Allen;

H. R. 2650. An act for the relief of George H. Holman;

H. R. 3460. An act for the relief of Caughman-Kaminer Co.;

H. R. 3467. An act for the relief of David C. Jeffcoat;

H. R. 4160. An act for the relief of Raymond D. Woods;

H. R. 5211. An act for the relief the heirs of Samuel B. Inman;

H. R. 5276. An act for the relief of Hilda Barnard;

H. R. 5513. An act to permit the United States to be made a party defendant in certain cases;

H. R. 7309. An act for the relief of Frank R. Scott;

H. R. 7499. An act to amend act No. 3 of the Isthmian Canal Commission, relating to the suppression of lotteries in the Canal Zone, enacted August 22, 1904;

H. R. 9590. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the collection and publication of statistics of tobacco by the Department of Agriculture," approved January 14, 1929; and

H. R. 12251. An act to provide for the conveyance of the Portage Entry Lighthouse Reservation and buildings to the State of Michigan for public-park purposes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

TARIFF

Mr. EVANS of California. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I hereby submit the substance of a letter written by myself to one of my constituents on June 28, 1932, on the subject of the protective tariff and especially with reference to the rate schedules set up in the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill as enacted by Congress on June 28, 1930:

I received your letter of June 13 further referring to the application of our tariff rates as commented upon in a letter from Mr. V. Andrews, of New Zealand, to you, copy of which you transmitted to me in a previous letter.

I feel that I can not permit to go unchallenged the thought conveyed in your letter of June 13, wherein you bring an indictment of a more or less serious nature against our present tariff law, without at least giving you a little more definitely my views regarding the matter.

In substance, you state that one of the chief causes of the present depression is the extremely and unnecessarily high tariff wall which we have erected in the United States and that if the countries in Europe are to pay their debts to us it is necessary that they sell us goods. It is further stated that if our tariff wall represented more common sense, the tariff walls of other countries, including Australia and New Zealand, would not be so prohibitive, since the higher we build our tariff walls, the higher they build theirs, and it hurts us just in proportion to what our trade balance has been over a period of time. You also call attention to the fact that many of our large corporations are building factories in Canada and other countries for the reason that such corporations may trade with those countries and not be compelled to stand the high tariff that is directed against the United States.

It seems to be the opinion of the most astute students of economics that our present tariff has neither caused the depression nor can it cure our present ills. The economic conditions with which we are faced exist in a greater or less degree in every civilized country of the world. These countries, as well as our own, now have, and have always had, protective tariffs, and upon examination you will find that in many instances some of these countries now have rates, and have had in the past, much higher than those in our own law.

For example, France now has a rate of 83 cents a bushel on wheat imported into that country. Our present rate, and that for the past 10 years, is 42 cents a bushel. Wheat in France is now selling at about $1.50 a bushel and in this country around 40 cents a bushel.

While rates on some of the commodities in the dutiable schedules of the present tariff act have been increased over those found in preceding tariffs, it is sufficient to note that notwithstanding such increases domestic industries engaged in the production of similar commodities are receiving little or no protection. Likewise, the so-called high rates have not resulted in decreasing the foreign commerce of this country; but, on the contrary, the volume of imports in many instances has materially increased. This increase in volume, of course, has been appreciably offset by abnormal decreases in unit value.

For instance, the records of the Customs Bureau show that during the first quarter of the present calendar year importations from Sweden on unbleached sulphate increased 84 per cent, whereas unit value decreased 20 per cent; imports of flat wire and steel strips increased 79 per cent, unit value suffering a decrease of 20 per cent; imports of cattle hides increased 80 per cent, unit value decreasing 71 per cent.

In the case of importations from Japan, volume of imports of natural crude camphor increased 176 per cent and unit value declined 20 per cent; the volume of straw hats, not blocked or trimmed, imported increased 90 per cent, unit value decreasing 53 per cent; the volume of electric lamps increased 164 per cent, the value decreasing 38 per cent.

In the case of importations from the United Kingdom for the same period, we find that imports of cotton velvets and velveteens increased 1,034 per cent, whereas the unit value decreased 46 per cent; broad silks (not Jacquard), the volume increased 236 per cent, value decreased 48 per cent.

Maple sugar and sirup imported from Canada during the same period increased to the almost incredible figure of 98,457 per cent, as compared with the insignificant increase in value of only 8 per cent; pork, ham, etc., from that country increased 85 per cent in volume, as compared with a decrease in unit value of 37 per cent.

These figures, with the exception of the items relating to maple sugar and sirup from Canada, are by no means outstanding, as similar conditions exist respecting importations from every country that has abandoned the gold standard.

At the present time, more than 20 foreign countries are off the gold standard; and when it is considered that approximately one-half of the foreign merchandise shipped into this country is exported from these countries, excluding China, the effect of such conditions upon our present tariff rates is immediately apparent.

As you know, these countries have abandoned the gold standard for the purpose of deflating their currency and to increase commodity prices. While a decrease in monetary value is usually accompanied by a similar increase in commodity prices, it should be noted that prices have not proportionately increased as currency values have depreciated. As a matter of fact, currency values, in some instances, have depreciated from 30 to 40 per cent, whereas commodity prices have increased only from 5 to 10 per cent.

It is perfectly apparent that by going off the gold standard and thereby depreciating the value of their currency these foreign countries have practically abrogated the effect of our present tariff rates.

The Hawley-Smoot tariff went into effect June 18, 1930, in the midst of the current world depression, and it is, therefore, obviously impossible at this early date to pass a safe judgment concerning its influence on our foreign trade. The year 1931 witnessed a decline in the foreign trade of the whole world, the United States included.

The average rate of duty collectible on all imports, however, was not raised greatly by the tariff of 1930, and, according to the estimates of our United States Tariff Commission, was much lower than the average rate of our preceding six tariff laws beginning with the McKinley Act of 1890; the average for the 1930 tariff being 15.87 per cent, that of the 1922 tariff at 13.8 per cent, and that of the six tariffs ending with that of 1922, at 19.6 per cent.

The proportion of imports coming into the United States free of all duty is larger than that of most of the leading countries of the world. About two-thirds of our total imports during the 15 years ending 1930 entered free of all duty. While the rates of duty on many classes of goods for these years were high, the average rate of duty on all imports for consumption for the 10 years ending 1930 was only about 14 per cent. In fact, the average ad valorem equivalent of duties collected on imports into the United States is substantially lower than in most countries. Doubtless one reason for the large percentage of our imports that come in free and for the low average duties on all imports is the fact that the importation of goods bearing high duties is greatly curtailed. In other words, it is the free goods and the goods bearing low duties that come in. Still, it is significant to note that, despite our tariff, our imports averaged 17 per cent higher for the five years ending 1930 than for the preceding 5-year period. Furthermore, our percentage of the world's total imports increased from 8.3 in 1913 to 12.4 in 1929; while for some years now our American import trade has been the largest of any country in the world, except Great Britain.

As stated in the foregoing, the present economic depression is not limited to the United States but is world-wide. While many opponents of protective tariff have blamed present conditions in our country upon the Smoot-Hawley law, it is definitely certain that our present tariff rates have not caused this condition. As a matter of fact, various factors are involved in this situation.

At this point it is pertinent to note that we are living in the so-called machine age. Is it not possible that this is one contributing element to present conditions? The total number of workers and their families in the three greatest mechanized industries—farming, manufacturing, and railways—in 1919 comprised 60 per cent of the total population of the United States. In 1929, at the peak of prosperity, this percentage had already fallen to 40 per cent from 60 per cent. It has now fallen farther, due to the depression, to probably 36 per cent, although the volume of production in 1931 exceeds that of 1919.

The machine has ceased to be the servant of man and has become the competitor of man's own right to perform work.

The development and extensive use of machinery throughout the entire world have, I believe, been a leading factor in overproduction. Overproduction has also contributed in no small measure to our depression. The seriousness of and effects attendant upon overproduction can readily be visualized when it is considered that Brazil during the past year, in an effort to stabilize the price of coffee, destroyed 7,103,000 bags of that commodity valued at approximately $30,000,000.

During the hearings on the Fordney-McCumber tariff, many of its opponents claimed that if enacted into law its high rates would wreck the foreign trade of this country. Notwithstanding these assertions, our country enjoyed its greatest era of prosperity while the tariff act of 1922 was in effect. It is obvious, therefore, that if those factors responsible for the world-wide depression were not present at this time, a similar era of prosperity would be enjoyed under the present tariff.

I can not agree with your statement that many of our large corporations are building factories in foreign countries for the sole purpose of avoiding high tariffs which are alleged to be directed against the United States. As a matter of fact, American firms which have located in foreign countries have been able to obtain unusual concessions and secure cheap labor which are not available in this country.

There are two groups of interests in this country which will probably never fully agree with the policies or efficacies of our tariff system, namely, the importer and those primarily interested in building up foreign trade, or in other words, those engaged in reciprocal export trade. The primary purpose of our tariff is to protect our home producer from low-cost competitive production and to protect our home market (which is 90 per cent to 91 per cent of the whole) from being invaded and exploited by foreign goods produced at low cost.

The interests of the importer and the builder of the foreign market lie in another direction, and I fear that this is the source of the major part of the criticism of the present tariff law. It should not require extensive argument to convince the unbiased mind that it is more important to protect and preserve the home market which consumes 90 per cent to 91 per cent of our products than to permit this market to be broken down in an effort to foster a market for the remaining 9 per cent or 10 per cent.

If our system of protection is abandoned, we will lose both the right to manufacture goods for this market and to supply it with the goods so manufactured.

Very sincerely,

W. E. EVANS.

FARM RELIEF—ADJOURNMENT—THE BONUS

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I read from an editorial in the New York Times of July 8:

Is the Iowa hog leading us out of the sandy fields of depression back to the acorn-strewn plains of prosperity? According to dispatches from Chicago, the meat-packing industry is inclined to believe that this is so. Ever since the peak of the hog crop receded at the end of May, the prices of pigs and cattle have risen in more than a seasonal curve. Swine are selling at $5.35 a hundredweight which sold for $3.30 in May. Cattle fetch $8.75 and may go to $9. One packer declares that "if anything can pull us out of the depression, it will be hogs and cattle."

This is but another evidence of appreciation of the important place agriculture holds in the economic life of our Nation and gives hope that Congress and the people of our Nation will realize and give weight to the importance of carrying out party-platform promises as pledged in the 1924 platform of the Republican Party:

We pledge the party to take the necessary steps to bring back a balanced condition between agriculture, industry, and labor—

And in 1928 it pledged itself to—the enactment of measures which will place the agricultural industry on a basis of economic equality with other industries to insure its prosperity and success.

The Democratic platform of 1924 pledged the party:

The establishment of an export-marketing corporation or commission in order that the exportable surplus may not establish the price of the whole crop.

And in its platform of 1928 it states:

There is need of supplemental legislation for the control and orderly handling of agricultural surpluses, in order that the price of the surplus may not determine the price of the whole crop * * * farm relief must rest on the basis of an economic equality of agriculture with other industries.

The platforms of the two parties recently adopted at the national conventions are strong in their manifestations of friendship for the farmer and in their appreciation of the important place agriculture holds in the economic life of the Nation.

Yes; recent experience has demonstrated with absolute finality that the stability and the growth and greatness of our Nation depend upon agriculture.

All wealth springs from mother earth. The only way to create wealth is by the slow process of applying labor and energy to raw material. Agriculture is the foundation and basis of our economic life.

All seem to agree that it is unjust for the farmer to continue to buy on the domestic market, made artificially high by the tariff, and sell his products in competition with the lowest markets of the world and products produced under lower standards of living, and that so long as the surplus is sold on the world market the price obtained for the surplus establishes the price obtained from the whole crop; and hence, unless the surplus is segregated and disposed of, and losses, if any, on the exports prorated on the entire production, the farmer receives no benefit of the tariff, and all seem to be agreed that there is nothing unreasonable about the farmers operating under the high standards of living, sharing in the benefits of protection against the products produced under the lowest standards of the world.

If there is any doubt about the surplus establishing the price of whole production, I refer you to the grape growers of California, the Farm Board in its operations in wheat and cotton, the millers in their operations, and organized industry for years have demonstrated beyond a doubt that by removing the surplus from the domestic market makes it possible to establish an American price level, protected against the world price by the tariff from commodities produced at cheaper cost and under lower standards of living.

The Federal Farm Board, under the subsidy plan, by pegging the price and removing the surplus from the domestic market in January and February, 1931, maintained the price of wheat 18 to 20½ cents a bushel above the world price level. In fact, in January, 1931, the Chicago price went almost 33 cents above the world parity; but after the donation of 40,000,000 bushels of surplus wheat this session to the Red Cross, and later another 45,000,000 bushels for domestic consumption, the domestic price immediately dropped to 3½ cents below the Liverpool price, which, of course, resulted in losses to the Federal Treasury. The board, operating under the subsidy plan, buying and storing for speculation instead of merchandising in the usual way, sustained heavy losses. As, for instance, wheat bought in the months of January and February, 1931, at the Chicago price of 77 cents, with storage and insurance at the rate of 1½ cents per month for 18 months, making the cost $1.04, and selling it on July 12 at the Chicago price of 46½ cents, entailed a dead loss of 57½ cents on each bushel so handled to the Federal Treasury. Had the board succeeded in effecting 100 per cent cooperation and control, and applied the equalization fee, and sold the surplus instead of holding, the gain to the producers would have been over 30 cents a bushel, without cost to the Federal Government or to the producers, as compared with 18 to 20 cents a bushel under the subsidy plan, all at the expense of the Federal Treasury. As indicated, the board failed in its efforts to effect 100 per cent cooperation and control to give the producers the benefit of the tariff—in other words, to carry into effect the declared policy as contained in the act, "to maintain advantageous domestic markets and to prevent the surplus from unduly depressing the price of the whole production." The board failed, as any other agency under like conditions would have failed, in the absence of definite authority to compel 100 per cent cooperation or control essential in carrying out the declared policy to "make the tariff effective to agricultural products."

With the board's experience and failure and the heavy losses incurred under the impracticable and expensive plan, as pointed out from the start, why continue the impracticable plan and the heavy drain on the Treasury, rather than adopt a tried out and proven successful self-supporting plan, the equalization-fee plan, or the allotment plan, allowing greater benefits to the producers without cost to either the producer or the Federal Government?

The Committees on Agriculture of the House and Senate have drafted and reported bills at this session backed up by the representatives of the three national farm organizations, with 4,000,000 members, representing more than 6,000,000 people, who have been here pleading night and day for the much-needed relief. Will the Democratic-controlled House accede to their pleas? Or will it adjourn without one moment's thought or consideration by Congress, as a whole, to real agricultural relief?

It would seem with these sleepless nights and the untiring efforts put forth by Congress in the many creditable and worth-while measures enacted to relieve commerce, industry, and labor at least one day might be set aside for the consideration of agriculture, the foundation of not only every worthy and legitimate enterprise but the progress and prosperity and even the welfare of all the people. I have no criticism to offer about what has been done for others, but it is needless to say in the construction of any structure, be it commerce, industry, or a building of any kind, the foundation is all important.

In calling attention to the economic conditions and the importance that Congress do not adjourn until farm relief is enacted, I shall quote from official sources and read from a telegram from Hon. Dan Turner, Governor of Iowa, in which it is stated:

> Economic conditions and public sentiment in the Middle West * * * demands action by Congress before adjournment on credit facilities * * * foreclosures are taking homes of stable citizens; if relief is not forthcoming country faced with individual and governmental bankruptcy and complete economic collapse, including banks, agriculture, and industry * * * strongly urge continuous session * * * absolutely essential to raise commodity prices to meet unemployment problem. Delegations of farmers, laborers, business men, and bankers constantly urge this to my attention.

With conditions as pointed out in Governor Turner's telegram, and as we note from the Attorney General's report, that with more than 60,322 cases in bankruptcy during the year 1931, 4,026 cases were classed as farmers, and with existing farm-mortgage indebtedness increased from $3,320,470,000 in 1910 to $9,468,526,000 in 1928, with a drop in farm-land values from $66,316,002,602 in 1920 to $44,145,210,966 in 1931, a decline of $22,170,791,636; with the purchasing power reduced 49.1 per cent, and the index number of farm tax increased from 100 in 1914 to 266 in 1930, while farm income dropped from approximately $16,000,000,000 in 1919, to less than $7,000,000,000 this year. With the index of prices received by farmers, which averaged 136 per cent in 1926 of pre-war, and 139 per cent in 1928, and which dropped to 56 per cent in 1932; and the value of farm products, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, dropping from 52.9 per cent since July, 1929; whereas farm implements have fallen only 13.4 per cent, with 682,850 farms transferred as a result of foreclosures and delinquent taxes during the years 1926 to 1932, can it be possible that this Democratic-controlled House will turn a deaf ear to the millions of people in dire need and to what seems to be a universal demand? Shall Congress continue to fiddle while Rome is burning?

According to President Hoover's statement in an address to the governors of the various States recently, Federal expenditures increased from $700,000,000 in 1913 to $4,200,000,000 in 1932, of which approximately $2,000,000,000 is the result of the indebtedness incurred during the World War, and a reduction of approximately $5,000,000,000 from the national debt. The State indebtedness increased from $4,000,000,000 in 1913 to $7,500,000,000 in 1932, an increase of $3,500,000,000. In the period 1924 to 1930, the State indebtedness increased $700,000,000, and local and municipal debt increased $4,000,000,000, a total increase for State, local, and municipal debt of $4,700,000,000, whereas during the same period the Federal debt was decreased approximately $5,000,000,000. According to the Statistical Abstract, 1931, the Iowa gross debt increased from $50,000 in 1902 to $17,619,000 in 1929, the per capita indebtedness increased from 2 cents in 1902 to $7.15 in 1929. The Iowa combined debt, including State, municipal, county, village, township, and other civil divisions increased from $17,440,000 in 1902 to $151,614,000 in 1922, the per capita debt increasing from $7.84 in 1902 to $62.11 in 1922 (the latest year statistics are available in comparative form).

Now, after years have been given to running our Government into debt and near destitution, the cause of which is generally acknowledged, first the cost of the World War of more than $50,000,000,000, and the many obligations incurred, which can never be paid in dollars and cents, but which together with the depreciation in values will exceed the fifty billions many times over, and second, in an effort to bring prosperity around the corner, and to give employment, a most elaborate construction program was embarked upon—millions were expended for public buildings and roads, aid by way of loans to banks, financial institutions, railroads, and so forth, and notwithstanding all was done for a good purpose, particularly to give employment, unemployment increased from six to nine million people, hence, in the last three years, instead of reducing our Federal indebtedness, we have a deficit of $903,000,000 in 1931 and $2,885,000,000 in 1932.

As a result of the large expenditures, undoubtedly much of it well expended, and undoubtedly much might have been avoided, which is the case of not only the Federal, but State and municipal governments as well, we have the heavy burden of Federal expenditures, estimated at $4,827,000,000 for the year 1931–32, of which amount it is estimated that 90 per cent are war taxes, and 10 per cent for other purposes. Much is said about retrenchment in expenditures, and reduction in salaries. The salary roll of this Government for Army and Navy is $259,000,000, for civilian activities $1,056,000,000, which includes the salaries of the legislative branch—Senate and House—which is only one-half of 1 per cent of the total cost cost of the Government; the total for all salaries being $1,315,000,000. It is estimated that the new tax provisions will bring in $1,118,500,000, which will be supplemented with $2,143,000,000 accruing under the 1928 measure, or total revenue of $3,261,500,000, and even if all salaries were eliminated there will be a shortage of $1,570,000,000, to be made up from other sources.

Of course, considering the plight we are in, salaries should be cut and without a murmur, and the needless boards, commissions, and bureaus about as useful as the fifth wheel to a wagon, should be discontinued, and unnecessary printing and binding of bulletins and pamphlets, and the franking privilege should be curtailed, which is less than 3 per cent of the total expense of Government for carrying all kinds and classes of postage-free mail, or only $1 out of every $276 of the postal deficit, and only $1 out of every $8,000 cost for carrying franked mail; and even if all the franked mail of Senators and Members of Congress postage free, $530,298.50; franked mail other than Members of Congress, $98,680; mail carried free in county, newspapers, and so forth, $8,425,242.11; mail for the blind of $106,932.85; and free mail for other departments and branches of the Government, $8,643,300.46; or a total of $17,804,453.95, had been cut out, it would only have been a drop in the bucket in reducing the $146,000,000 post-office deficit for the fiscal year 1931.

It has been suggested that bulletins and pamphlets be discontinued so as to avoid expense of printing and distribution—but why expend millions of dollars in experimentation and research if it is to be bottled up in the departments and not printed and distributed and made available to the public who pays the expense?

In an effort to balance the Budget everything in sight has been taxed and strenuous economy measures invoked, with the cutting and slashing of salaries and expenditures in all Government activities, and still we shall be in the red at the end of the year, all of which could have been avoided had Congress given weight to the pleas of the millions of men and women in all walks of life for farm relief. Yes; and that serious and favorable consideration had been given to the pleas of the able and estimable old gentleman, Mr. Edgar Wallace, representing the American Federation of Labor, before the Committee on Agriculture in urging passage of the McNary-Haugen bill, when he said:

> The farmers are our customers—when they have no money we can not work. We are the farmers' customers. Hence I think it is to the interest of all the workers. What does it profit us if we can get meat for 10 cents a pound if we haven't the 10 cents?

Members of the committee will recall the earnest and heartfelt appeal made by Mr. Wallace later on, when he had this to say with regard to the lowering of the standard of living:

> I am convinced that our conditions have risen. I believe that we have the highest standard of living to-day. * * * I believe our standard of living is higher than that of any country in the world—higher than it has been anywhere. But it is not enough, because our per capita production has appreciated faster than our added income, and hence we have these periods of stagnation when nobody can work because the other fellow can not buy the product of his work.

The unemployed can now buy meat for 10 cents a pound, but unfortunately they have not the 10 cents. No, as was said here a few days ago, in New York thousands are being fed by the charitable gentleman at 5 cents a meal. To-day there are more men out of work than there were under arms in the World War. Shall the policy of feeding millions of starving people by the Red Cross and other charities continue, or shall they be given an opportunity to work?

If so, take Edgar Wallace's advice, and redeem party-platform pledges to place agriculture on equality with others. Restore the purchasing price of the farmer's dollar, now less than 50 cents, to a full 100 cents; and if so, not only will labor, as before the deflation of the prices of agricultural commodities, be in demand, but also there will be a market for the products of industry, idle money will come out of hiding and again seek investment and go into circulation, confidence will be restored, and all join in the grand march onward and upward.

Commerce and industry resting on insecure foundations, are always in danger of falling. Agriculture is the only available foundation. One might as well undertake to build up industry and commerce in the desert or on the mountain top as to build up industry and commerce without the support of agriculture.

No, recent experience has demonstrated with absolute finality that the stability, the growth and greatness of our Nation, the progress and prosperity of our people, depend upon the progress and prosperity of the tillers of the soil.

Every year the farmer by his efforts affords an opportunity for the sun, the rain, and the soil to bring into existence the essentials of our lives—the food we eat and the clothes we wear. I repeat, the only way to get wealth is to create it by the slow process of applying labor and energy to the raw material.

In the absence of prosperity on the farm, industry and commerce crumble, railroads rust from idleness, and labor is out of employment—skyscrapers are untenanted, the professions inactive; schools and churches closing and teachers and preachers without pay. What will Congress do about it?

The history of our Nation is well known. Its history is one of progress, prosperity, and happiness to American people. It has always stood for honor, dignity, enlightenment, equal rights, and opportunities. The one thing above all that has made it a mighty power for the uplift and benefit of humanity is the fact that its people have had the courage and wisdom to stand for that which is eternally right, rather than that which might be gainful and temporarily popular, though fundamentally wrong. Under its principles and policies we have advanced along the line of accumulation of wealth, furnishing employment to our people, and everything that makes opportunities and advantages to our people.

All take a just and pardonable pride in the men and women who have reared our homes, our villages, our towns and cities, who have constructed our vast systems of public schools, colleges, universities, temples of worship, and charitable institutions, many in sickness, in reverses, privations, and sorrow, others in health, wealth, joy, and prosperity, sympathizing with each other's woes and sharing each other's joys, step by step advancing along the lines of refinement, culture, and wealth, until we to-day boast that we rank among the most successful, practical, and intelligent people on earth.

After all, had it not been for the sunshine and rain, and the industry and intelligence applied to the rich and productive soil, producing the bread—our staff of life—sufficient for not only our own one hundred and twenty-two millions of people, but a surplus sufficient for millions in foreign lands—a fair question, Would we have all these large structures of industry and commerce, and our grand and glorious Government with its splendid and magnificent institutions, which we point to with so much pride? No; do not take more chances and delay further, but consider the suggestion of the New York Times—"Lead the Iowa hog out of the sandy fields of depression, back to the acorn-strewn plains of prosperity," and he will lead our one hundred and twenty-two millions to the trough of plenty as he did in the days before the deflation of the hog and agricultural commodity prices. All will agree that a $2 rise in the price of hogs has given more encouragement, and been more stimulating than all the billions and millions of dollars made available for various purposes through Congress. Why not complete the job?

Under leave to extend my remarks, I include herewith my reply to an editorial appearing in the Mason City Globe Gazette on May 20, 1932, under the heading, "Bonus Insincerity."

> I note that in the May 20 issue of the Mason City Globe Gazette there appears editorial comment under the heading, "Bonus Insincerity," which states that it has no quarrel with those who are conscientiously for an immediate payment of the soldier's adjusted-compensation certificates, but for the Representatives or Senator who cast a vote for immediate payment for political effect and in full confidence that the proposal would be stopped by the President, we confess a low estimate. Reference is made to Mr. GILCHRIST having been a vigorous and effective critic of Federal extravagance, and if there was any other motive than vote-getting in his vote or that of any of his colleagues the Globe Gazette would be pleased to give space for a presentation of the case. This invitation is especially tendered to Mr. HAUGEN.
> Yes; I voted for it, as I have for every measure which in a degree would compensate the men and women who have certainly unselfishly sacrificed themselves by answering their country's call in time of our Nation's need.
>
> All acknowledge the contract entered into, to in a degree compensate them for the sacrifices made and heroic service rendered. All acknowledge the many obligations incurred to the men and women who answered their country's call in the hour of conflict, obligations which can never be fully paid in dollars and cents.
>
> Recognizing the services rendered and the sacrifices made, our country has not only manifested its appreciation for the services rendered in our days of need but has made liberal appropriations for preparedness against future invasion that might deprive us of our liberty and constitutional rights, and as evidence of its appreciation has always stood for proper recognition of the services rendered by the men and women who have answered their country's call, for liberal provisions by pensions for the survivors, their widows, orphans, and dependents.
> Millions of men and women volunteered and other millions were ushered into the service by the draft, at a dollar a day, and they were ordered to the front and it is generally conceded that by their entering at the time they did, the war was quickly ended with victory. Many were needed at home, stayed, and drew good salaries at from $5 to $10 per day for common labor, and from $5 to $20 per day for skilled labor, while leaders in industry and commerce added millions to their accumulations.

The question was, What could be done about it? Many contended that owing to the continued depressed conditions and scarcity of funds and an unbalanced Budget, it could not be done at that time. In the short space of time that Congress has been in session it organized the Federal Reconstruction Finance Corporation and dug up $2,000,000,000 to be loaned to help banks, credit corporations, and other financial institutions, and the railroads; and hundreds of millions of dollars have been loaned to bankers, building and loan associations, the railroads, and the farmers; and $125,000,000 was raised for loan to the Federal land banks; there was enacted the Glass-Steagall bill increasing the latitude of reserve banks, thereby extending aid to 7,600 member banks, and recently passed the home loan bank bill, all of which are for a good purpose and which will afford much relief. But, after relief has been so generously afforded to others, the question was, notwithstanding the depressed conditions, and although the adjusted-service certificates did not become due and payable until 1945, Should the most sacred obligation of all be set aside?

It is needless to say that notwithstanding the present adverse economic conditions, if this Nation is to maintian the confidence and good will of the men and women who answered their country's call in the day of the World War, it must, as in the past, continue to manifest its just appreciation and gratitude for their unselfish service; in other words, to extend immediate aid to the service men and women in dire need, to in a degree compensate them for services and sacrifices rendered.

THE COUNTRY WILL KNOW THE TRUTH IF THE DEMOCRATIC CONTROL OF THE HOUSE ADJOURNS WITHOUT ENACTING THE REVISIONARY ANTIMONOPOLY LEGISLATION PROMISED BY THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, in my address before the House on July 8, I made the statement that the Democratic majority of this House could not possibly permit an adjournment of this Congress, without enacting the revisionary antimonopoly legislation promised in the Democratic platform, and at the same time fool the people by leading them to believe that the present Democratic membership of this House is in good faith in its pledge of fidelity to that plank in the Democratic platform.

I said that it would be impossible to do so because W. K. Henderson, owner and operator of radio station KWKH, had the courage and the disposition to tell the people the truth about this matter. I also said that KWKH furnished him the facilities with which to convey this truth to the people. Apparently the Democratic majority in this House is going headlong and forcing an adjournment without keeping this antimonopoly plank of the Democratic platform, believing that the people will never obtain the truth pertaining to their conduct or that the people obtaining the truth will not believe it.

Again, I want to warn the Democratic membership of this House that it can not adjourn this House, failing to enact this antimonopoly legislation without the people knowing the truth. I have a telegram of July 13 from Mr. Henderson in which he pledges that irrespective of party he will convey the truth to the people and that KWKH shall be used for the exclusive purpose of rendering the public service of carrying the truth to the homes and firesides which are within the reception range of KWKH. The reception range of KWKH is every Southern State, every State in the Mississippi Valley from Canada to the Gulf, and, in short, every State with the possible exception of two or three States on the Pacific and some of the Northeastern States.

This telegram from Mr. Henderson is as follows:

I am in receipt of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which contains your speech on the floor of the House of the 8th together with your expressions of the attitude of this radio station as applied to the present economic conditions. I regard the granting by the Government of a radio channel as a trust for the truthful dissemination of facts without regard to the operators' personal views or interest. In so far as this radio station is able to reach the public it will without regard to party or individuals undertake to give to the public the unvarnished uncolored truth without regard to whether this party or that party, this individual or that individual, might be affected. Such purpose on the part of this radio station may not be popular with the leadership of either of the parties, who are representing but a fractional minority of our common countrymen, and it may be impossible to drive the truth home to the great bulk of the Nation's inhabitants, but that in no sense lessens this station's responsibility in its efforts to aid the floundering people on to a righteous and firm footing.

W. K. HENDERSON.

Again, I plead with the Democratic majority not to permit an adjournment of this House without enacting the antimonopoly revisionary legislation promised in the Democratic platform. I commend the Democratic Party for this platform pledge. I shall commend this Democratic House for its loyalty and faithfulness if it will keep this platform pledge by enacting revisionary antimonopoly legislation for the benefit of labor, the small packer, and distributor. I am eager for the opportunity to join with the Democrats and vote for such legislation. I appeal to the Democratic control of this House to bring such legislation to the floor of the House. The Democratic membership of this House is in the majority. This Congress can not adjourn without the approval of the majority vote of the House of Representatives. This means that this Congress can not possibly adjourn except that the Democratic majority votes and directs that it shall adjourn. I appeal to the Democratic membership of this House not to adjourn and go back to their people with full knowledge on their part and full knowledge on the part of the people that they have failed, refused, and neglected immediately to keep faith with the Democratic platform promising revisionary legislation of the antimonopoly laws for the benefit of labor, the small packer, and distributor.

Due to the nation-wide distress in this country, the American people can not wait for some future Congress to give to them the measure of relief promised by the Democratic Party in its platform, which pledges revisionary legislation of the antimonopoly laws for the benefit of labor, the small packer, and the distributor.

The Democratic Party is to be commended for this pledge. Let the Democratic majority in this House stay in session until this pledge is kept, and thereby let it be commended as keeping faith with the American people and its platform. Let not the Democratic majority of this House adjourn this House by deliberately deserting its post of duty and refusing to keep this pledge to the American people which the party promised and which they must have now.

ANDREW MELLON'S LIKELY MISSION TO EUROPE

Mr. LARRABEE. Mr. Speaker, Andrew Mellon's mission here, for the present at least, has been accomplished. He hastens away to foreign fields, there to attempt to complete the great task that he and his Wall Street money-mad associates have designed. He hastens away, fearful that further delay might be disastrous.

The moratorium on foreign debts has been granted. It assures Wall Street that, for the present at least, there will be no grave danger that her private debtors, the so-called impoverished foreign nations, will repudiate their private debts to this "blessed" set of money-mad gamblers. That was one of Mr. Mellon's great gifts to his associates.

The $2,000,000,000 Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, conceded by all who even think they know to have been designed only to replenish the coffers of private interests "temporarily embarassed by their bad loans to foreign nations and foreign interests, and their gambling in the stock market," has also been passed and has been given the official signature of the President. Millions have been loaned out to big corporations and big banks as its result. That was but another of Mr. Mellon's gifts to his Wall Street associates.

To the thousands of jobless laborers, to the thousands of impoverished farmers, to the thousands of bankrupt store and shopkeepers in every State of the Union it would seem that Mellon and his administration had done quite well by those they have chosen to aid with their "$2,000,000,000 dole," and the exceedingly dangerous debt holiday for European debtors.

But now the entire Nation stands shocked as it surveys Mr. Mellon's removal to Europe. The public understands quite well the purpose of his trip abroad. At least they have a well-founded suspicion. They recall having heard that old axiom, "History is certain to repeat." Applied to Mr. Mellon's trip it would seem a sarcastic prophecy that Mr. Mellon had gone to Europe to further aid the recipients of special privilege, the money monarchs of Wall Street, the wealthy financiers who have loaned their many millions to European nations. It is shocking enough to learn that this Government has taken upon itself the roll of international constable, attempting to force payment of bad private debts to the unwary Wall Street lenders. But of greater interest to the American citizen is his own knowledge, through sad past experience and observation, that Mr. Mellon's activities in behalf of the Wall Street banker invariably result in detriment to the big majority of the American people.

In this instance the plan of activity of Mr. Mellon is plain. He must now collect the principal, if possible, and make certain of the payments of the interest in full on all private loans made by his money associates to Europe.

Europe already has made plain her plan. She is willing to pay her private debts providing she does not have to pay her war debt.

European statesmen have told us that fact in no uncertain terms and with considerable emphasis and startling frequency. They demand cancellation of the war debt.

Throughout the East the rumblings of the "why" of Mr. Mellon's visit to Europe, by way of the Court of St. James, have become clearly audible. In fact, these rumblings are being heard around the world. These rumblings of ominous nature foretell the storm that is gathering.

The storm is about to break with the unleashing of public disapproval. The American people strenuously oppose "the Mellon plan."

The American people are bitter at the thought of the so-called cancellation of war debts. If it in fact was but a cancellation of obligations caused by the Great War, American people, whose charity has never been in doubt, would not long or loudly object.

But it happens that the American people understand full well that there can be no cancellation of war debts. Any movement in that direction is in fact a move to heap the burden of the cost of the Great War upon the shoulders of the American public. Alleged cancellation of war debts can do nothing other than remove the burden from those to whom it belongs and shift it to those to whom it does not belong.

Annual payments on the war debt to this country, if payments are made, would amount to $252,000,000. These debts do not represent reparations or damages to us as the outgrowth of the World War, either. They represent actually the money loaned to the foreign nations, including Great Britain, France, and Italy, since the armistice to help those nations recover from the effects of the war.

Are we expected to entirely rehabilitate Europe before we can begin to look after our starving thousands and impoverished millions at home?

Italy's Mussolini has declared his nation to be in sound economic condition. France is known to be amassing a gigantic hoard of gold and to be spending gigantic sums for armaments. Great Britain was ready with her debt payment a year ago when granted a moratorium.

The public well knows the great difficulty this Nation has had in attempting to balance the National Budget and has been forced to resort to bitter and burdensome additional taxation to do so.

Yet, Mussolini, speaking for the whole of Europe, has declared that America must consent to the cancellation of the debts owing to her. France is declared to be in the best financial condition of any nation in Europe, and there seems to be no doubt now but that she is in far better condition than our own coutry. She at least has no trouble finding the millions she spends for armaments.

These are sound facts of record. The American people generally know that they are facts.

It is easy to understand why Wall Street, why the monarchs of American finance, rejoiced openly when Mellon left for Europe. He has already done for them at home what no other Cabinet member in any administration ever dared attempt to do. The sons of special privilege have seen in his removal to Europe "to conduct negotiations over war-debt revision" the possibility that he may be able to complete there the constabulary duty of collecting the rest of their private bad loans to European nations and interests.

It was convenient for Mr. Mellon to leave at this time, to withdraw from first-person control of the United States Treasury, which he left suffering with the staggering deficit of nearly $3,000,000,000. He has carefully trained his successor, who has served him faithfully as Under Secretary, to carry on. It was also convenient, in part, because the ire of public opinion has been aroused against his control of the Treasury by the Patman resolution of inquiry into the charge that Mr. Mellon's presence in the Treasury was a violation of law which was designed to protect the weak and the poor from the domination by the rich and powerful, and the threatened inquiry into the oil concession in South America, which looms as scandalous as the famous Teapot Dome case of the Harding administration.

Elevated to the Cabinet 11 years ago, Mellon was placed there only to protect and advance the interests of money powers and power trusts. He went there to continue the policy of his party to dole out special privilege to the powerful minority.

But the dawn of a new day is breaking. The people have been thoroughly aroused. The promise is in the next election, when a government for all the people, as government was intended, will be delegated to Washington with the mandate that those who have violated the trust with which they have been invested must go and that in their places will be seated those who will govern for the benefit and protection of all the people and not a special few.

When this is done the reckless money investors will no longer be so hasty in their efforts to extend loans across the seas. They will know that they can not expect the agencies of government to be used as a collecting agency for their private speculation.

Their money, if it works for them, will be put to work here in this Nation, where its benefits will become public benefits to our own people.

There will be no further careless extension of Federal credits abroad in order that private credits may be protected.

Mr. Mellon will be returned to private life where he belongs, there to toy with his millions at his own pleasure, but powerless to oppress the poor for the gain of the rich.

He will be returned to private life before he can realize his ambition to complete the negotiations for war-debt revision.

Such negotiations, if any, will be delegated to men and women who will consider the interests and welfare of the American people.

"THESE LAST FOUR YEARS"

Mr. SUTPHIN. Mr. Speaker, the four years of the Hoover administration will go down in history as the era of the complete disillusionment of the American people. Ushered into power in 1928 by the high priests and medicine men of the Republican Party amid blatant and exaggerated promises of a "bigger and better than ever" period for these United States, it is languishing out its few remaining hours of power completely discredited, a victim of its own empty boasts, and inability to meet the problems of the Nation.

FALSE PROSPERITY PROPAGANDA

The last four years have shown the people of the United States that when the Republican leaders claimed they were the sole custodians of the Nation's prosperity they were deliberately falsifying, and again perpetrating the fraud upon the American people which carried them into power on many previous occasions. Their great "master minds" remained great only so long as there was no crisis to require the brilliance of these master minds—and their great financiers remained great only so long as there was nothing to do but take in the money and count it.

FALSE TARIFF THEORIES

These last four years have shown the American people that the famous panacea of the Republican Party, a tariff of the Hawley-Smoot variety, instead of being a boon to the American manufacturers and American workman, has been a boomerang; that a tariff bill conceived and executed for the purpose of repaying the grasping and selfish corporations which had contributed to the Republican campaign chests, destroyed our foreign markets, forced many of our manufacturers to locate outside the country and thereby greatly increased our unemployment and our economic distress.

FALSE AGRICULTURAL THEORIES

These last four years have shown the American people that the Hoover administration's handling of the agricultural problem has been stupid beyond words and a colossal failure from every standpoint. In a futile attempt to defy the basic law of supply and demand the Republican administration poured $500,000,000 into the laps of the Federal Farm Board, a "Hoover creation," for the purpose of "stabilizing" the market. When the Federal bureau started to help the farmer his wheat was selling at $1.60 a bushel, and when this bureau finished its program the farmer was selling his wheat at 25 cents a bushel and less and this tremendous sum of money was gone.

There seems to be a lot of truth in the saying that the difference between an ordinary bureau and a Government bureau is that an ordinary bureau is one into which you can put your money and it will be there when you want it, while a Government bureau is one where you can put your money and never find it again.

FALSE UNEMPLOYMENT THEORIES

These last four years have shown the American people that the Republican Party, after contributing largely to the factors that resulted in millions of our citizens being thrown out of employment, were unable to meet the problem or to remedy it. While there has been an abundance of Republican orators ready and willing to discuss this and other great national questions, there has been a remarkable scarcity of Republican leaders able to answer these questions. The public is tired of hearing about national questions; what they want is answers. Mr. Hoover's principal contribution to the relief of the unemployed seems to have been the "appointment of a committee, which named three committees to get themselves employed." Is it any wonder that the army of Republican officeholders are not half as worried about present unemployment as they are about future unemployment among their own ranks immediately after election?

FALSE ECONOMY PROPAGANDA

These last four years have shown the American public that so-called "governmental economy" was a much a myth as "Republican prosperity." They find that Mr. Coolidge, the patron saint of economy, had approved increases in governmental costs of over $650,000,000 during his term of office. They have seen governmental costs increase during the last four years under Mr. Hoover by almost a billion dollars, while the public income has decreased correspondingly.

If the National Budget was unbalanced, who unbalanced it, if not the Republican administration with its orgy of boards and commissions and their expenditures?

The Republican leaders have been running the Government not only beyond the Government's income but beyond the taxpayers' income as well, probably under the theory that "there's a taxpayer born every minute." It was this wild orgy of spending that necessitated the tremendous tax bill of this year, in which almost everything is taxed except the taxpayers' painful squeal, and which has caused many taxpayers to wonder if it would not be better to let the Government have their income and let them keep the tax.

Economy can only be effected and the tax burden lightened by drastically reducing the cost of government. The public has had enough of Mr. Hoover's so-called fact-finders; what they want is some fact-facers.

THE HOPE OF THE FUTURE

The last four years have convinced the American people that the Republican leaders, who have been proclaiming from the housetops that they "are the only ones fit to rule," stand indicted and convicted before the Nation as unfit to rule. By their record during the last four years they have forfeited any right to further public confidence. The breach of campaign promises is equally as reprehensible as the breach of any other valid and binding promise, and so the public is turning in their hour of need to the Democratic Party—the party which has ever stood for that sacred principle that "a public office is a public trust." The future welfare and prosperity of our country lie in the fulfillment of this great Democratic doctrine through the election of a Democratic President and Congress.

IN EXPLANATION OF H. R. 11499, A BILL "RESTORING AND MAINTAINING THE PURCHASING POWER OF THE DOLLAR"

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted I submit the following copy of a letter written by myself to Hon. JAMES M. MEAD, Member of the House of Representatives from the State of New York:

JUNE 16, 1932.

Hon. JAS. M. MEAD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MEAD: I have given your letter of June 9 a great deal of consideration and reached the conclusion that I can not comment on H. R. 11499, a bill "For restoring and maintaining the purchasing power of the dollar," any more accurately within the scope of a letter than I did in the report on the bill, the substance of which is as follows:

Within the scope of a committee report it is not possible to discuss in detail the technical economic principles involved in H. R. 11499, but it is possible to determine the anticipated workings of the action of the principle if it is crystallized into legislation.

The bill has two features, an emergency feature and a permanent feature. The emergency feature contemplates a rise in the general commodity-price level to the average existing between 1921 and 1929, inclusive, and the substantial maintenance of that price level.

As to the emergency feature, all authorities agree, first, that it is impossible for the debts of the country to be paid at the present price level, and that unless the price level is raised the business of the country is headed for inevitable bankruptcy; and, second, that the present price level is unjust to debtors.

Speaking roughly, but with substantial accuracy, the dollar will purchase about 1.60 more of commodities than in the 1921–1929 period and about 1.56 more of commodities than it would purchase between the period of 1918–1931 and the first quarter of 1932, inclusive. It would purchase now what it would have taken $1.25 to purchase about a year ago, which means that the producer—that is, the debtor—is being confronted with an ever-increasing burden. His debts, principal and interest, remain fixed. The commodities he sells, and which would have purchased a given number of dollars when he borrowed them, have decreased in their purchasing power.

To go one step farther, unemployment is constantly increasing, because on a constantly declining market business can not go on. It is impossible to produce below the cost of production.

The Committee on Banking and Currency, after a most painstaking and careful investigation by a subcommittee, reached two conclusions: First, that the average price level from 1921 to 1929 would reestablish substantial justice between debtor and creditor; and, second, that a rise to the price level of 1921–1929 would make lower standards of living unnecessary, would justify salaries and wages at the predepression level; in short, would make unnecessary the process of painful economic readjustment, which will have to be consummated if the price level is not raised.

The committee also reached the conclusion that unless the price level were raised substantially to the point above indicated, the burden of debt would not only seriously hamper production and destroy the producing class as now constituted, but that the creditor class, being unable to collect their fixed obligations, would also go down in the crash.

Then the question arose as to what could be done.

The Federal reserve system, under the leadership of Benjamin Strong, former governor of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, measurably stabilized for several years the price level by open-market operations and by adjustment of the rediscount rates of the Federal reserve banks. The Federal reserve system has been accumulating gold at the average rate of $200,000,000 a year for about six years, and is now in a much stronger position than it was at the time of the open-market operations just referred to.

It is in a position to put into the market $4,000,000,000 in Federal reserve notes and still maintain its 40 per cent reserve requirements. By utilizing its power to lower reserve requirements of the Federal reserve banks the system could put into the market nearly $9,000,000,000 of reserve notes. Either sum, if the country knew that because of a congressional mandate the Federal reserve system was going to raise the price level to the point indicated, would be much more than sufficient to raise it, because as soon as the country understood what the policy of the Federal reserve system, as provided by law, was, confidence among the banks and business men would be restored, bank loans would expand, the retailer would buy from the wholesaler, the wholesaler would buy from the manufacturer, the manufacturer from the producer of raw materials, and the masses of the people would find employment, so that through buying of securities by the Federal reserve banks and through the restoration of confidence as above indicated the normal business activity of the country would very speedily be reestablished.

Even more important than its emergency feature the committee deems the stabilizing feature of the bill. It would be the duty of the Federal reserve system under the bill, if enacted into legislation, to control the credit and currency of the country in a manner to satisfy the legitimate needs of business and prevent unwholesome and unjustified expansion. If unjustified and unwholesome expansion were controlled, periods of inflation and depression would also be controlled, because periods of deflation and depression always follow periods of unwholesome overexpansion and speculation.

I think it would be interesting also for me to call attention to the fact that the bill was indorsed, among others, by Edward A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation; Charles R. White, president of the New York Farm Bureau Federation; Frederick Brenckman, Washington representative, National Grange; by the Farmers' Union; and by the American Federation of Labor.

The bill was exhaustively discussed and indorsed by George F. Warren, professor of agricultural economics, Cornell University; by Willford I. King, professor of economics, New York University; by Irving Fisher, professor of economics, Yale University; and by several very distinguished Members of Congress, both Democratic and Republican.

I am inclosing copy of speech made by me on May 2 at the time of the passage of the bill, and also copy of speech made by me on June 8. Should any of your constituents desire to look into the matter more fully, the hearings before the House Committee on Banking and Currency and before the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency constitute, I think, the most valuable single textbook in the world on the subject.

With many thanks for writing me, and with kind regards, I am,

Very sincerely yours,

T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH.

WORLD WAR VETERANS' RELIEF

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, while many of us who for the past several years have been successful in sponsoring and guiding needy and beneficial legislation for the Veterans of the World War, carefully protecting their best interests at all times, sincerely felt that to-day we would at least have been given an opportunity by the Democratic majority, responsible for all legislation in the present Congress, to have my bill (H. R. 11987), which specifically metes out relief of a permanent nature to the unemployed war veterans of the country, included as a part of the general relief bill; but due to the selfish, self-centered, one-sided tactics practiced by the Democrats in the House, I was denied the right to offer this much-desired measure as an amendment or a rider to the bill under consideration, H. R. 12946, due to the fact that the Democratic gag rule, which permitted the consideration of the relief bill, also specifically provided that no amendments or riders could be offered; and, therefore, during the consideration of the relief legislation the Speaker refused to recognize anyone on the floor of the House for the purpose of offering amendments thereto.

There is no proposition that takes preference over the obligation of caring for the unemployed and destitute veterans and their families. Of the different groups and classes involved in our present crisis, there are none more worthy of individual consideration than the thousands of World War veterans, who by their unforgettable patriotism were obliged after the war and their peace-time jobs had been taken by others to flounder about for years attempting to regain their inherent and God-given right to work and provide a living for themselves and their dependents.

Adequate emergency relief, of a permanent and lasting nature, will be received by hundreds of thousands if the Congress will accept my amendment to the relief bill which provides an appropriation of $100,000,000 for the purpose of paying the balance due on their adjusted-service certificates to unemployed veterans who will agree and contract with the United States Government to engage in farming for at least three years.

My plan will afford the means of permanently rehabilitating hundreds of thousands and fits in with the President's economy program, meeting his objections to nonproductive public works programs that are not of a meritorious and lasting nature.

It is strictly relief legislation of first importance and does not interfere with either pending or future legislation calling for full payment of the bonus. The object of my bill is not to place the veterans in competition with farmers by adding to the supply of farm products but to enable these people to sustain themselves by raising their own food, thereby eliminating the necessity for a dole, to increase their self-respect by making them independent, and at the same time pave the way to a healthy, happy, and well-balanced life.

In our present unemployment crisis my plan is the only emergency measure so far suggested that will provide large-scale relief of a lasting nature. It will put hundreds of thousands on the road to permanent independence by making them self-sustaining. Furthermore, it is the only major relief plan suggested that will not require the appropriating of the necessary funds as a gift, for my bill calls for the immediate discharge of an obligation, that must in any event be met in the not far-distant future.

The practicability of my plan has actually been demonstrated with the greatest success both in this country and in Canada. In Canada the Department of Immigration and Colonization started in the fall of 1930 to make farming opportunities available to the unemployed. Since that time 45,000 needy city dwellers have been changed to self-sustaining farmers. Over a year ago the United States Department of Labor and the Red Cross, working together, took a number of destitute families from city bread lines, and at a cost of but $120 a family put them on small farms and supplied them with the meager necessities of life until they could raise food for their own consumption. All of these families are now self-supporting.

With our Department of Labor accomplishing the most satisfactory results with an expenditure of but $120 a family, it is apparent at a glance that the veterans, who will receive an average amount of $500 each from their certificates, will be able to start with far greater advantages. I have definite figures to show that for $160 the veteran can properly and adequately equip his farm with all necessary implements and livestock. In other words, for $160 the veteran can purchase a horse for $55, a cow for $40, hogs at $7 apiece, sheep at $3.40 apiece, and a small flock of chickens for $10. One of the leading firms in the country has advised that they would be able to supply all necessary tools and implements for $34, consisting of a plow for $5; harrow, $6; planter, $5; cultivator, $3; fertilizer distributor, $6; hand tools, $4; and harness for one horse for $5. After paying out $160 for equipping his farm, he will have $340 left, sufficient capital, if carefully and deliberately handled, to tide him through the first winter, and, of course, from that time, if serious and sincere, his own efforts will be sufficient to enable him to carry on.

The veteran will be assisted in his new vocation at every possible angle by the Government. For the sole purpose of assisting farmers in crop production, dairying, animal husbandry, and horticulture, the Department of Agriculture maintains a most efficient Extension Service in which are employed over 4,800 trained and skilled workers. Conferences with farmers and demonstrations of best methods to pursue have been largely supplemented by bulletins, tours, and campaigns. The report of the Director of Extension Service for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1930, shows something of the magnitude of the work. There were 1,546,677 personal visits made by agricultural agents to 793,688 farms; 423,600 news articles were written by agents and sent to the press; over 800,000 field meetings were held; 6,345,488 pieces of literature were distributed; and 3,403,028 calls by farmers were made at the offices of the agricultural agents.

As a further means of encouragement and assistance to these veterans, the Government may distribute as much of the surplus wheat as may be necessary to insure these families and their livestock having sufficient food for one year.

Being true Americans, our veterans do not want a dole; our citizens are well aware of its demoralizing effects, both on the individual and the Nation, and such a scheme is repugnant to them. All they want and ask for is an opportunity to exercise their inherent and God-given right to work and earn their livelihood. This right, which is being denied them at present through no fault of their own, will be restored them by the immediate passage of my bill; and if it is not enacted into law this session of Congress, it most assuredly will when we meet in December. It will enable them to set themselves up in business for themselves as farmers; they will quickly become self-sustaining and independent; the pride of achievement will be instilled, their self-respect increased, and the way will be opened to a healthier and happier life.

That there is more than sufficient fertile farm land available to carry out my plan can not be doubted. There are 177,000,000 acres of public land which may be obtained free under the homestead act, a large number of which are suitable for cultivation. The 12 Federal land banks alone have advised me that they have acquired 1,812,033 acres of land through foreclosures. Thousands of acres of fertile land have reverted to unwilling owners because of nonpayment of mortgages, and so forth; and with farm land in the United States at but 89 per cent of its pre-war value, there can be no doubt that veterans will be able to secure small tracts at nominal cost. Many letters have reached me from patriotic citizens offering to sell anywhere from 17,000 to 40,000 acres of good farm land to veterans in small tracts for as low as $2 an acre.

Statistics compiled and published by the United States Department of Agriculture show that a small plot of ground can be made to give a surprisingly large yield of crops. Farmers' Bulletin No. 1673, issued in October, 1931, by the Department of Agriculture, advises that "A half-acre garden, if properly cared for, will supply vegetables having a market value of at least $100 to $150, sufficient for a family of five or six." The Director of Extension Service, in his report to the Secretary of Agriculture for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1930, advised that "complete records were kept on 231 gardens averaging half an acre in size, which produced crops sufficient to feed 1,297 people, to serve 207,592 times, and to can 33,780 quarts, and yet to leave a surplus which sold for $21,354.37." In these half-acre gardens the cost of seeds would be approximately $1.36 per garden, at the rate paid for the Red Cross packages. I find that 2,500 sweetpotato plants, sufficient to plant one-fourth of an acre, can be purchased for about $3.75. Seed white potatoes for one-fourth of an acre would cost about $5.

We have reached the greatest economic crisis in the history of our Nation. Already, our overburdened welfare organizations have begun to give under the severe strain on their heavily overtaxed resources, and in at least one of our States funds for relief work have been entirely exhausted. People are beginning to realize that not even the next five years will see the absorption by industry of the majority of our unemployed, and it is vitally necessary to our national well-being that jobs be found for our unemployed without delay. It is self-evident that the transferring of this great number of veterans from overcrowded industrial centers and setting them up in business for themselves in rural communities would exert a most profound and far-reaching beneficial effect on employment conditions throughout the entire country by greatly increasing the chances for employment of those who could not take advantage of this opportunity.

My bill will provide the solution to our twofold need—immediate and lasting unemployment relief and ultimate business recovery—by furnishing productive employment to hundreds of thousands. It will absorb countless acres of arable land now idle; help the grain market and the farmer by elimination of the surplus wheat; stimulate trade in livestock, poultry, farming tools and implements; and will aid our automobile industry by creating an increased demand for used cars. Every taxpayer in every section of the country would benefit by reduced contribution to public-welfare agencies. In addition, the creation of this great class of home builders will so greatly add to the strength of our economic structure that its benefits can not be overestimated.

To achieve the maximum results possible under this most productive reconstruction plan, it is absolutely essential that my bill be passed without delay. By making this great opportunity available now, these people will be enabled to start their farming activities in time to produce sufficient crops for consumption this summer and leave a surplus for canning and preserving for next winter. With farm lands obtainable free or at but small cost, free wheat for themselves and their livestock, with sufficient capital to adequately equip their farms and maintain themselves until self-sustaining, my plan for assisting the veterans on the road to independence is the most logical and effective solution to provide work for a major portion of our jobless and would be a most decisive factor in hastening our economic recovery.

OUR VANISHING FOREIGN TRADE

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, economists and business leaders generally are all but unanimous in the opinion that nothing has contributed more to the commercial chaos, the industrial paralysis, and the woeful unemployment and misery from which the American people have suffered for more than two and one-half years than the foolish, indefensible, and outrageous tariff policy of the Hoover administration, as exemplified in the Hawley-Smoot tariff act.

The whole world is engaged in a suicidal tariff war that has well-nigh wrecked world trade, and the Hoover administration's tariff policy started that war. In some respects, it has been as devastating as the World War itself. In factories that have been stilled, in commercial establishments that have been thrown into bankruptcy, and in the number of toilers who have been deprived of their jobs and forced into the ever-lengthening bread and soup lines which have formed in every industrial city in America, there has not in the entire economic history of the world been an occurrence as devastating as the enactment of the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act. And it remains to-day the single most serious obstacle to economic recovery, not only in America, but throughout all the world.

I lay down the following propositions which, to me, are almost self-evident, and which I believe can not be successfully controverted:

For more than a decade, the tariff policy of the last three Republican administrations has been dragging American agriculture deeper and deeper into the pit of penury and despair.

The Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act, apologetically approved by President Hoover, and which piled protection upon protection already much too high, has gained for America the enmity of the remainder of the world and precipitated a war of retaliation that has all but closed foreign markets to surplus American products.

The Hawley-Smoot tariff has shut down thousands of mills and mines, closed thousands upon thousands of commercial establishments, tied up fleet after fleet of steamships, and done more to reduce the tonnage of the railroads than any other single act in our governmental history.

It has driven hundreds of plants, representing hundreds of millions of dollars of capital, to foreign countries, some of them probably never to return.

And it has been the direct cause of throwing millions of American workers out of employment, destroying their purchasing power, with all that means in its effect upon such other industries as may not have been directly affected by the tariff.

I doubt if in the history of any government there was ever an economic happening more unwise, more uncalled for, or more dishonest than the enactment of the Hawley-Smoot tariff law. It was dishonest because it was professedly done in the name of protection for American workers, to protect American wage standards, when, in fact, its effect has been to throw millions out of jobs, thus destroying their means of livelihood rather than protecting their wage scales. It was unwise because it piled superprotection upon the protection already afforded by the Fordney-McCumber Act and raised American tariff walls to the highest point ever attained by the tariffs of any country. The average equivalent of ad valorem rates under the Fordney-McCumber Act was 41.57 per cent, but under the Hawley-Smoot bill this average was raised to 50.9 per cent, and even this figure does not tell the whole story, because in some instances the rates are so high as to be prohibitive, shutting out commodities entirely and thus not entering into the calculations upon which the average rate of duties is arrived at.

In fact, in a great many instances the Hawley-Smoot tariff is an embargo, a Chinese wall, erected in the name of protection, which would bring the blush of shame to such protectionists of the past as the late President McKinley, who, after all, recognized that if we are to sell anything at all we must buy something from other countries, and that there must therefore be at least a limited flow of international commerce.

President McKinley recognized the danger of tariff wars and the necessity for the flow of international commerce, giving expression to a vital principle in these words uttered in his last speech, at Buffalo, just prior to his assassination:

> We must not repose in fancied security that we can forever sell everything and buy little or nothing. * * * The period of exclusiveness is past. The expansion of our trade and commerce is the pressing problem. Commercial wars are unprofitable. * * * Reciprocity treaties are in harmony with the spirit of the times; measures of retaliation are not.

Nor can those who fastened this criminal economic tariff policy upon American industry, American commerce, and American labor plead that they were not warned. Neither can they deny that that which they were told would happen has happened in the loss of trade, in unemployment, in silent looms, motionless machinery, and in millions of dollars worth of shipping, tied up at our docks, to dry and decay.

Enactment of the Hawley-Smoot tariff was a violation of the pledge President Hoover gave to the country when, shortly after his inauguration, he called the Republican Seventy-first Congress into special session to do two things—to provide relief for decaying agriculture and to make a "limited revision" of the tariff. In his message to Congress, in which he made this pledge of a "limited revision," he said:

> The test of necessity for revision is in the main whether there has been a substantial slackening of activity in an industry during the past few years and a consequential decrease of employment due to insurmountable competition in the products of that industry. It is not as if we were setting up a new basis of protective duties. We did that seven years ago. What we need to remedy now is whatever substantial loss of employment may have resulted from shifts from that time.

Here was a definite promise of limited revision, affecting only industries in which employment existed by reason of competitive imports. What did we get? Instead of a limited, we got unlimited revision, affecting approximately 1,100 items in the tariff bill, most of them upward, put there through the usual back-slapping, logrolling tactics of protective tariffs, after the spectacle of the descent of a swarm of lobbyists of the special interests demanding tariff favors in return for their contributions to the Hoover campaign fund in 1928, and getting them.

The bill which finally emerged from the Republican Congress was so bad that when the President signed it he issued a statement amounting to an apology therefor. He said in effect that it was better to let a bad bill become a law than keep business in further suspense about the sort of a bill it was to have.

The President and Congress were warned of the effect the tariff bill would have, and the warnings are now proven to have been sound. Leaders in industry, like Henry Ford, Alfred E. Sloan, president of General Motors, both supporters of President Hoover, and even Gen. W. W. Atterbury, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad and former Republican national committeeman from Pennsylvania, denounced this tariff policy, but no attention was paid to them. The bill was passed and signed by the President in the face of the opposition of two-thirds of the press and over the protest of substantially every economist of repute in the entire country, 1,078 of whom signed a petition to the President protesting against the bill and specifically pointing out the baneful effects that might be expected to follow.

They warned:

That it would be of no benefit to the majority of farmers; that it would injure American export trade; that it would provoke retaliation by other countries; that it would weaken the security of American investments abroad; that it would not relieve unemployment; that it would inject bitterness into our international relations; and that it would endanger world peace by sowing the seeds of a tariff war.

All of these warnings proved sound; all that these economists said would happen has happened, yet in the face of these warnings President Hoover signed the tariff bill, with the result that our foreign trade is rapidly approaching the vanishing point, millions upon millions are out of jobs, and the whole world is engaged in a tariff war the end of which no one can foresee.

FOREIGN-TRADE DECLINE

It is in its effect upon America's foreign trade, in the migration of American capital and industry to foreign lands, and in the appalling unemployment extending now into almost every home in the land that the Hoover administration's foolish tariff policy is most clearly to be seen. A few figures, by way of comparison, are most illuminating.

In 1929, the first year of the Hoover administration, and the last year prior to the enactment of the Hawley-Smoot tariff, American exports amounted to $5,240,995,000, according to official Department of Commerce reports.

For 1931, our exports were only $2,424,000,000, a decrease in two years of $2,816,995,000, or more than 50 per cent.

In 1929, our imports were $4,399,361,000. For 1931, they were only $2,090,107,000, a decrease of $2,219,254,000 in the two years, also more than 50 per cent.

Thus, combined, for 1929, our total trade, both exports and imports, amounted to $9,640,356,000, while for 1931, the total volume of this commerce was only $4,514,107,000, a decrease of $5,126,249,000.

But that is not the worst of the picture. It grows darker and darker; and if our foreign trade continues to diminish during the remainder of 1932 as it did during the first six months of the year, our foreign commerce for the year will be considerably less than one-third what it was in 1929. This is indicated by Department of Commerce export and import figures for the first six months of 1932.

For the first six months of 1932, ending with June, our exports to the rest of the world fell to $842,168,000, as compared with $2,623,088,000 during the same six months of 1929, a decrease of $1,780,920,000. For the same six months of 1932, our imports dropped to $757,801,000 as compared with $2,286,375,000 for the same six months of 1929. These figures are official and final in all respects except that the June, 1932, export and import figures included are preliminary, subject to slight revision.

So that, for the first six months of 1932, our total foreign trade totaled only $1,599,968,000, as compared with $4,909,463,000 for the first six months of 1929, a loss of $3,409,495,000. If the same rate of shrinkage is continued throughout the year, our foreign commerce loss for 1932 as compared with 1929 will be more than $6,800,000,000, or about 70 per cent of the 1929 volume, the last year prior to the enactment of the Hawley-Smoot tariff.

Of course, President Hoover and others who defend, even though apologetically, the tariff policy of the administration will say, and will often repeat it during the political campaign, that while it is true that America's foreign commerce has suffered a heavy blow, that it is also true that the commerce of other countries has suffered, and that our condition is due largely to world conditions.

In the first place, the paralysis that has overtaken world commerce is due in large part to the world-wide tariff war, which the Hoover administration started. It is also true that while other countries have suffered heavily in the loss in foreign commerce, their loss has not been as great as America's. We had most at stake, we had most to lose, and we have lost most.

Recently the financial committee of the League of Nations made public some very interesting figures on world commerce. These figures showed that from 1929 to 1931, the value of Germany's foreign commerce had decreased by 49 per cent, that of France by 51 per cent, that of Italy by 46 per cent, and that of Great Britain by only 45 per cent. Meanwhile, the value of America's foreign commerce declined during those two years by 64 per cent. Early reports on 1932 indicated that for the entire world, the loss in commerce under 1929 would amount to about 50 per cent, while Department of Commerce figures on this country's trade for 1932 show that at the end of this year we will have lost between 66 and 70 per cent of our foreign commerce, as compared with 1929.

Tragic as is the story of this terrific loss in foreign trade, built up so carefully during and immediately following the World War, it is not the darkest part of the picture. That is represented in the enormous unemployment which this shrinking volume of commerce has directly caused, and by the large number of industrial plants which have been driven to Canada and other foreign lands, there to manufacture out of foreign raw materials, with foreign man power, the commodities that were formerly made in America, with our own raw materials, and by our own workers, for export purposes. Some of our lost foreign commerce may be recaptured, when and if we revise our tariff policy, but many, in fact, most of the American plants which have been driven abroad are gone never to return.

Before giving you the figures with respect to this migration of American capital and American industry to foreign countries, driven there by the Hoover-Smoot-Hawley tariff, let me direct your attention to the enormous contribution to our grave and nation-wide unemployment situation for which this shrinkage in our foreign commerce has been responsible, and in doing so, I shall use only the yardstick employed by no less an authority than President Hoover himself.

In his campaign speeches in 1928, Mr. Hoover, who had just resigned as Secretary of Commerce, was inclined to boast of the extent and value of America's foreign commerce and to appropriate to himself and the department over which he had presided for nearly eight years the major portion of the credit for the building up of this commerce. In a campaign speech at Newark, N. J., on September 17, 1928, Candidate Hoover said:

> More than 2,000,000 families in the United States earn their living to-day by producing goods for export, and another million families earn their living in the manufacture of raw materials. This means more than statistics. It means higher standards of living—more jobs make more wages. Foreign trade is no artificial stimulant to employment. Its development is a vital contribution to the welfare of the American workman, the American merchant, and the American farmer. I propose that we shall continue this service to our people.

If in 1928, as Mr. Hoover said, 3,000,000 families—families, mind you not individuals—earned their living by employment in the processes of our foreign commerce, then it must follow that in 1932, when two-thirds of that commerce has vanished, two-thirds of those 3,000,000 families that earned their livelihood in that way are now deprived of that livelihood. This is a very serious, a very staggering contribution, and a direct contribution, to the prevailing unemployment which President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, recently estimated at ten and one-half million persons in the United States.

But, as President Hoover pointed out in 1928, the baneful effects of this loss of foreign trade do not cease with the direct result. The unemployment, the loss of buying power, and so forth, do not stop with those directly employed in our foreign commerce. In the same Newark speech Mr. Hoover said of this indirect effect:

> Cease exporting automobiles to South America or Europe and automobile workers are thrown out of employment in Michigan. The suffering does not stop there. It only begins. Steel mills slacken in Pennsylvania and Indiana. The mines employ fewer workers at Lake Superior. And every farmer in the United States suffers from the diminished purchasing power and enforced stringency in thousands of homes.

Mr. Hoover's observations of 1928 are just as pertinent to-day, except that we are looking at the other side of the picture. Where there was employment, and happiness, and prosperity in 1928 and 1929 there is unemployment, and want, and suffering in 1932, and the Hoover-Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act is the most important single factor contributing to this loss of commerce and resultant unemployment and misery.

There is another, and possibly even more serious angle to the situation, and that is in the driving of hundreds of American plants, representing an investment of hundreds of millions of dollars to foreign countries to manufacture commodities for foreign markets that were formerly made in the United States for those same markets.

Since the Hawley-Smoot tariff was enacted, approximately 50 nations, including every important trade nation in the world, has raised tariff barriers against the United States, and in a great many instances the barriers are insurmountable. They were driven to do it by our tariff policy. They said in effect that since we would not permit their goods to enter our ports they would close their ports to our commodities.

At the close of 1929, according to figures furnished the United States Senate by the American Secretary of Commerce, there were 467 American-owned branch or subsidiary plants in Canada, representing an investment value of $513,864,000.

On September 17, 1931, according to figures given out at the Canadian capital, Ottawa, and carried in a dispatch by the Canadian Press Association, the number of such American-owned plants in Canada had increased to 1,071, and their investment value to $1,189,590,000. In other words, the number of American plants across our northern border more than doubled, as did their capitalization, in a little more than one year following the enactment of the Hawley-Smoot tariff, and they are still moving there at a steady rate. On December 2, 1931, the general manager of the Toronto Industrial Commission, in a statement given to an American press association, said that up to that time more than 300 United States manufacturers had established branch plants in the Toronto area alone, and that numerous others were then "on the ground making plans to manufacture their products here."

Among the American corporations which have established plants in Canada in the last two years are the United States Steel Corporation, which built a $60,000,000 plant at Windsor, and the Aluminum Co. of America, owned by the Mellon family, which has located near Quebec a plant capable of producing 400,000,000 pounds of aluminum annually, probably the largest aluminum plant in the world.

The story of what is happening in respect to these and other corporations, which have profited from the tariff favors of the recent Republican administrations, is a tragic one for American consumers and American workers. These industries are enjoying tariff bounties at home which make them practically immune from outside competition. They formerly did a huge export business. But when Canada and other governments retaliated against our tariff policy, they merely took a part of the profits they had made from their American investments, profits which were swollen by the tariff, set up branch plants in Canada to manufacture for that and other foreign markets which had been closed to their American plants by retaliatory tariff enactments, the commodities which they had formerly made in their American plants. This was a terrific blow to American workers, for these concerns did not take their American labor abroad with them, but only their capital. And in Canada, in Europe, and elsewhere whereto these plants have gone, they are making out of the raw materials of those countries, with the labor of those countries, the commodities for their export trade which they formerly made in the United States out of American raw materials, and by the hand of American workers.

What is true of the migration of American industry and capital to Canada is true of Europe. When European countries raised a tariff wall against American automobiles in retaliation for our Hawley-Smoot tariff barriers against their products substantially every important American automobile concern established a branch either in Canada or in Europe, in an effort to hold the foreign markets for American cars, made by American workmen. I am told that there is not an important tire manufacturer in the United States that does not have a branch plant in Europe; and every automobile, every tire, every other article of manufacture, now being made by these plants in Canada or in Europe for the foreign market, is being made by foreign labor, in large part of foreign raw materials, whereas it was formerly made by American workers and in large part of American raw materials; and for every foreigner one of these plants in Canada or in Europe has put to work, there is an idle American walking the streets or the highways vainly searching for a job, in order that he and his family may subsist outside of public charity. The responsibility for this condition, for this unemployment, this flight to foreign shores of American capital and industry, probably never to return, lies with the Republican administration, which fastened upon our country the iniquitous Hawley-Smoot tariff policy, a suicidal, war-breeding tariff, the revision of which is a first essential to any substantial economic recovery.

"SHALL WE CRIPPLE THE CONSTITUTION TO REMOVE LAME DUCKS"?

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, during the last 10 years there has been a growing popular sentiment that there are two defects in the organization of our legislative and executive departments which carry within them the germs of possible governmental weakness:

First. Newly elected Congressmen do not assume office until four months after election in November.

Second. There is no provision in the Constitution for replacing the President elect or the Vice President elect, should he die or become incapacitated between the dates of election and inauguration.

To cure these two evils, in the last six Congresses there have been introduced so-called "lame duck" amendments to the Constitution of the United States. The last one which obtained the necessary two-thirds majority of the two Houses and is now before the States for ratification, reads as follows:

SECTION 1. The terms of the President and Vice President shall end at noon on the 24th day of January, and the terms of Senators and Representatives at noon on the 4th day of January, of the years in which such terms would have ended if this article had not been ratified; and the terms of their successors shall then begin.

SEC. 2. The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall begin at noon on the 4th day of January, unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

SEC. 3. If the President elect dies, then the Vice President elect shall become President. If a President is not chosen before the time fixed for the beginning of his term, or if the President elect fails to qualify, then the Vice President elect shall act as President until a President has qualified; and the Congress may by law provide for the case where neither a President elect nor a Vice President elect has qualified, declaring who shall then act as President, or the manner in which a qualified person shall be selected, and such person shall act accordingly until a President or Vice President has qualified.

SEC. 4. The Congress may by law provide for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the House of Representatives may choose a President whenever the right of choice devolves upon them, and for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the Senate may choose a Vice President whenever the right of choice devolves upon them.

SEC. 5. Sections 1 and 2 shall take effect on the 30th day of November of the year following the year in which this article is ratified.

The question which three-fourths of the States are now to decide is—

First. Shall the evils complained of be cured by constitutional amendment?

Second. Will this amendment cure the evils?

Third. If so, will the therapeutic effects of its adoption exceed the harmful effects?

When this amendment was before Congress, there was a universal and well-crystallized sentiment desiring a vote on this subject, and I felt it my obligation to cast my vote in favor of a submission of the question to the States even though I felt that the proposed amendment was not necessary, so far as part of its purpose is concerned, that the evils we are experiencing are practically all imaginary, that the constitutional amendment will not really cure those imaginary evils, and that if it does cure these evils it will create difficulties more serious than those it attempts to cure.

Having fulfilled what I consider to be my duty by voting to submit this proposition to the people of the States, I now feel it an obligation upon me to present the reasons why I deem it inadvisable for the people to adopt that amendment.

First. I submit that the evils are very largely imaginary so far as they pertain to the election and terms of Members of Congress. Complaint is made that the Members of Congress elected in November do not actually begin to legislate until December of the following year, or 13 months after election. At the present time this is unquestionably true, but section 4 of Article I of our Constitution now provides:

The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meetings shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

It will be seen that under our present Constitution, if Congress is dissatisfied with the first Monday in December, it has full authority by law to change its annual meeting date to any day in the year. It could choose January 4, as in the proposed constitutional amendment, or March 4. In fact, in times past Congress has chosen many different dates to start its session. It has met in October, November, and for three sessions of Congress immediately following the Civil War it selected March 4 as the date of the annual meeting. This date was selected because at that time it was at least assumed that President Johnson, who was in office, could not be trusted to run the Government without having Congress in session.

May it be said parenthetically that during this time Congress enacted some of the most putrid legislation ever passed by an American Congress. After three terms of this experiment Congress returned to its constitutional date, the first Monday in December, and has since so continued.

During all of the 10 years that this matter has been agitated in Congress, it could have at any time changed the date of its annual meeting to January 4, just as is provided in section 2 of the proposed amendment. We may then strike that section out as absolutely needless.

But section 1 provides that the terms of the newly elected Congressmen shall start on January 4, and it is claimed that this is advisable because it will make a session between election day in November and January 4 unnecessary and that therefore those Congressmen defeated in November elections will not be called upon in their legislative office, and that the "lame duck" will be eliminated.

I am wondering just how many of us have given the question of the "lame duck" Congressman the benefit of our clear, unbiased thinking and on the other hand how many of us have indulged in picture thinking, controlled by the cartoon of a one-legged duck walking with a crutch under a wing, seeking appointment to some governmental position. After all it is so much easier to look at a picture and repeat the slogans handed to us by others than it is to do thinking of our own. To illustrate the contention that even those in high office sometimes show a tendency to talk and act and let the thinking be done by others:

Two years ago a "lame-duck" amendment passed the Senate of the United States without a dissenting vote. It was submitted to the proper committee in the House of Representatives, and after ponderous discussion was approved by that committee. Undoubtedly it would have gone through the House of Representatives with the same momentum it went through the Senate, had it not been discovered by one of our Congressmen, who prefers to think for himself, that while the date of the incoming executive and legislative branches had been advanced the term of the outgoing had not been shortened, and had this amendment passed from January 4 to March 4 this Government would have been blessed by two Presidents and two complete legislative establishments. From the speech of one of the men who talked the most in favor of this amendment before the last House, it developed that he was under the impression that the defeated Congressman, instead of giving up office in March of the year following defeat, held office until December of the year following defeat.

I give these two illustrations that we might thoughtfully reexamine the question as to whether or not, after all, it is such an evil for us to have Congressmen, defeated at the election, to hold their office for three legislative months.

In the first place, may I say that for the last 30 years, the greatest turnover that has ever occurred in any Congress has been 14 per cent of the Members. In 1930, when we thought we had almost upset the Government, there was a turnover of 9 per cent of the Congressmen.

Now, if we assume that those Congressmen who had been defeated in the November election were disqualified and no longer fit for public confidence, at no time have they been in sufficient numbers seriously to affect legislation, demanding the approval of a Congress of 435 Members. But I say to you, both from the observation that I have made and from the reports of Members of long standing in Congress, that it is only too often the case that these so-called "lame ducks" are the men who have been men of high purpose and conscientious motives, who have been unwilling to vote against their convictions at the whim of some group in control of their district. These men, in the great majority of cases, have no intention of retiring from public life. They intend to return at some future day and are just as much impelled by a desire to serve their constituency as at any time before their defeat.

William McKinley, Abraham Lincoln, and Champ Clark are just three of the men who have served their communities as "lame ducks" in Congress. This district, prior to the last session, had been represented in Congress for 10 years by a man who had rendered conscientious service to his district. Would anyone say that during the three months following the last election he did not continue to represent this district to the best of his ability?

If we assume that it is an unmixed evil for Congressmen to represent their district for four months after their defeat, the proposed constitutional amendment by no means cures that evil. All that it does is to cut that period in half, and in the meantime what shall we say of the "lame-duck" President who under the proposed amendment will continue to serve his country almost three months after his defeat, and what shall we also say of that very large group of "lame ducks" who are defeated in the primaries? Many of them serving from 8 to 10 months after their defeat are scarcely affected at all by this amendment.

In a great many States in the South a Democratic nomination is equivalent to election, and in a great many States of the North the same may be said of a Republican nomination, so that this amendment does not affect a great part of the disease at all and is only a very small palliative where it does operate.

At the time of the adoption of our Constitution a period of four months was allowed to elapse between the election and the inauguration. First, to permit travel to Washington and, second, to afford an opportunity for the Congress already elected and organized to elect a President and Vice President in the event the Electoral College failed to present a majority. Of course it is no longer necessary to allow four months to get to Washington, but modern governmental requirements in their complexity and the many multiplied burdens that the last 140 years have added to a Congressman's duties have made this breathing space of four months of greater value now to effective legislation than it was at the time of its adoption.

In the early days of our history a Congressman's principal function was to deliver profound addresses on the floor of the House on the comparatively simple questions that confronted the Government in his day. He was not blessed with instantaneous communication with his home folks through telephone, telegraph, and air mail. He did not have to acquaint himself with all the ramifications of 10 executive departments, nor to look after the details of veritable migrations of tourists going to and from Europe and the Orient. He did not have a Veterans' Bureau raising questions of law, fact, and medicine that almost has one dizzy, nor a veritable army of home folks urging his assistance in getting on the Federal pay roll; nor did he have on an average of 100 letters per day to look after and innumerable errands and telephone conversations to perform.

All of these multiple functions require considerable preparatory education. The governmental departments all have to be learned, the necessary contacts have to be established, and I say to you as one speaking with authority, that four months' time is all too short to permit any Congressman to prepare himself to render real service to his community.

It is also a fact that most Congressmen are men of standing in their communities, who have considerable business or professional activity to adjust before starting in on their duties and this all must be done if a public official is to give his whole attention to his work.

Now, if we add to the already unlimited work expected of a new Congressman during his first four months the responsibility of attending sessions of Congress and trying to perform necessary committee duties, we are simply expecting the impossible, and the new Congressman instead of equipping himself properly to represent his district will neither be able to do that necessary work nor will he have opportunity to prepare himself for his legislative duties.

The proposed amendment also cuts 38 days off of the period for preparation for the Executive, and everything that has been said about the necessity for proper preparation for the legislator applies in double force to the Executive. He has the responsibility of acquainting himself with the duties of the Executive, appointing his Executive family, and winding up his own affairs. He is expected in 10 weeks to forget his partisanship, fanned to a burning flame during a long political campaign, and become a President of the whole people, unmoved by partisan consideration, a thing humanly impossible.

However, if we grant that all of this argument has no merit, there certainly remains the second proposition that was in the minds of the framers of the Constitution—that the old Congress should be allowed to sit long enough to elect an Executive if the Electoral College failed to achieve this end.

But I hear some one say: Ah! there is the evil. Why should a Congress, a part of whom has just been repudiated, assist in the election of the new Executive that is to function with the new Congress? May I again call your attention to the fact that in our most revolutionary election it is seldom that we have had any turnover sufficient to make a difference. When the election is conducted in the House of Representatives we must remember that the votes are cast by the States voting as States, and the individuals do not vote as individuals, consequently the change of 9 or even 14 per cent in the individual membership would in all probability make a very much smaller change in the complexion of the vote when taken by the State units.

In our 140 years' experience two Presidents have been elected by Congress, a "lame-duck" Congress, if you will. One of these was Thomas Jefferson and the other John Quincy Adams.

We must look to some place other than history to find any danger to the Republic from such choices.

What will be the result if an election is thrown into the House of Representatives under the new law? Congress will meet on January 4. You will bear in mind that we have just had an election in which there has been a number of candidates, otherwise the Electoral College would deliver a majority. The country is divided up into three or possibly four political parties, and consequently the newly elected Congress will almost inevitably be divided into these three or four blocs. It will be unusually difficult to organize Congress and to elect a Speaker.

No doubt there will in such an election be a great many contested congressional elections, and if these votes are of any importance in the selection of a President, there will no doubt be coalitions to compel their determination before the President can be elected, and yet this new Congress, split up as it inevitably must be, must meet, organize, appoint its committees, possibly decide election contests and elect a President, all in 20 days. It now takes 10 days, on an average, to accomplish this organization when all things are favorable.

Our forefathers in their wisdom, thought that such a task, done by a Congress of experienced Members, already organized, with nothing else to do than to select the President in proper form, ought to have from the first Wednesday in January until the fourth of March for this purpose.

If the modern Congress is unable to perform in 20 days a task that the forefathers considered properly to be done in 60, we will have the problem of a presidential incumbent with no successor elected, and the difficulties which were raised at the time of the Tilden-Hayes controversy might not terminate so fortunately a second time.

The greatest possible evil that can happen by allowing a Congress, which is already elected and organized, to choose the next President of the United States, is that possibly the will of the majority will not be expressed in the choice. Under our present system, on at least two or three occasions, we have elected Presidents of the United States who have had less than a majority of the popular vote, and yet this Government has continued to function.

The fact of the matter is that in our entire history our candidates for President have been of such uniformly high quality and the checks and balances of this Government so perfectly designed to allow the majority to speak and yet to protect the minority from oppression, that it is not going to bring any serious consequences to this country if we do have a minority President once in a generation.

Let us examine for a moment the effect of the abolition of the short term of Congress upon the practical workings of the Government. Since 1921 our Government has been operating under a Budget system with very good results. During the summer the President calls together the heads of the executive departments, together with the Director of the Budget. He prepares estimates of the departmental needs, and they are sent to Congress immediately upon their convening in December. This is the second session, and Congress is already organized and functioning. By January 4, the date which Congress would convene under the proposed regulations, under present conditions, the consideration of all the supply bills is well under way. The Cabinet members appear before the Appropriations Committee and defend their Budget. Before March 4, the date of the adjournment of Congress, all the supply bills and necessary appropriations are passed. The old Congress and the old President go out of office and the new President assumes office with the new Congress on the 4th of March, and thus details of governmental routine, which only experience can give, are cared for in advance so that the new President can make out his policy of government unhampered.

Now, let us look at the conditions as they would exist under the proposed amendment. The old President and his Cabinet must make up the Budget as before, but can not submit it until January 4, when it goes before a new, inexperienced Congress, not yet organized, without committees, and possibly with a presidential contest on its hands and the "lame-duck President" holds on, powerless for the remaining 20 days in which nothing is done.

On the 24th of January the new President comes in, with inexperienced Cabinet members, to appear before inexperienced committees and out of that conglomeration we are told to expect efficient action. There is only one human result possible and that is that the new President and the inexperienced Cabinet will have to take the word of his predecessor on faith and the committees will not have the benefit of experienced testimony in drawing the necessary bills.

These are all some of the practical phases of the new legislation which the cartoonist, in drawing his lame duck walking on a crutch, does not consider.

Again, under our present system, Congress in convening at its second session in December, automatically is adjourned on the fourth day of the following March and the country almost invariably has a breathing spell from the 4th of March to the following December without any Congress proposing drastic changes in the tariff or taxation laws. This respite from congressional action saves the Government a great deal of money, makes for stability of business conditions, and, in our experience, has been altogether desirable.

Now, under the proposed system, Congress will be convened every year on January 4; there is nothing to compel an adjournment of that Congress until the advent of January 4, two years hence, and just as occurred in the administration of President Johnson, when March 4 was taken as the convening date, we will have Congress in constant session, the country in constant political turmoil, business disturbed, and the expense of operating the Government greatly increased. If the cartoonist who draws the picture of the lame duck could draw a picture of the United States Government operating under such conditions, our picture thinkers would probably get another view of this question.

However, there is one phase of the proposed resolution that has merit and needs consideration. If it were not tied up with the measure changing the date for the beginning of the congressional and presidential terms, I believe we would all agree that it should be immediately accepted by the people. That is the provision allowing Congress to provide for the executive succession in the event the President elect and Vice President elect should both be killed or become incapacitated between the meeting of the Electoral College, which now convenes on the first Wednesday in January, and the convening of Congress on the 4th of March. Under present conditions, the House of Representatives, in the event that the Electoral College fails to elect, must choose the new President from the three candidates receiving the highest electoral votes. For example, in 1924 if the Electoral College had failed to choose the President, as many thought would happen, Congress would have been called upon to choose between Vice President Coolidge, Mr. John W. Davis, and Senator La Follette. If one of those had died prior to the meeting of the Electoral College on the first Wednesday in January, the members of the Electoral College could have selected someone else. However, if, after they had cast their votes this candidate had died, there is no method provided by the Constitution for selecting his successor, and the House of Representatives would have, of necessity, made a choice between the other two.

Let us suppose that Mr. Coolidge had been the unfortunate one. Then the Republican Members of Congress would have had their choice limited absolutely to selecting either Mr. Davis or Senator La Follette. There would have been no chance for the Republican Party to select their own.

This is an unfortunate condition which has not occurred in 140 years and might not occur for a century again, but nevertheless, it should be provided for.

That is the purpose of section 3 of the proposed amendment. It is a commendable purpose, but when it is indissolubly fixed to another amendment which says that the Congress, to make this selection, shall have only 20 days to act, the benefits of the amendment will be destroyed by the limitations, and it would be far better for us to have another amendment submitted, setting forth clause 3 of the proposed amendment without unfortunate complications.

To summarize the proposed amendment, it will result in the probability of Congress remaining constantly in session. It will take from the President and from Members of Congress valuable time for the proper preparation for their respective functions and without proper preparation the first year of their public service will be of little value to their constituents. It will very seriously impair, if not destroy, the operation of our present Budget system, and finally, it will make the selection of a President and Vice President, in the event this selection is thrown into Congress, a very precarious proceeding, dangerous to the peace of the Republic.

Mr. George Rothwell Brown, a very able writer for one of the Washington papers, summarized and characterized the proposed amendment as a "quack remedy for a disease of the Constitution that it does not have."

In my years in the practice of law and of service in the National Legislature I have come to have a veneration for the Constitution of the United States that is difficult to describe or exceed. It is a matter of constant wonder to me how, in a frontier country having a population just about equal to the Province of Quebec of the present date, a galaxy of such able men should gather together to prepare our charter of government. It has weathered a century and a half of storm. If we do not weaken it by hasty amendments, it will serve us just as well in the future.

This is no time to consider some of the amendments that we have added to that Constitution. Suffice it that some of our experiences in tampering with that instrument have not been so happy.

I urge you as citizens who are called upon to pass on this revolutionary amendment to study it thoroughly and not let our picture draftsmen have too much influence.

READJUSTMENT OF THE SERVICE COMPENSATION OR BONUS OF WORLD WAR VETERANS AT THE PRESENT TIME

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, in 1917 and 1918 there were examined and accepted as physically and mentally qualified to serve their country in the military and naval forces in the Great World War about four and a half million of the young men of the United States.

At that time the average age of the group from which these young men were selected was about 25 years. At the present time this group is about 40 years of age on the average.

At the time of the war these veterans represented the very flower of the young men of our Nation. I believe they still represent the very flower of the men of their average age—40 years. These men now are sustaining their country in her peace-time pursuits and hazards with the same ability and patriotic willingness to make sacrifices to uphold the United States and their Government in spite of all efforts, internal and external, to imperil the great principles under which this Republic has so long prospered. At the very time this great group of civilians entered military service, in order better to compensate the soldiers of the war-time Army and to improve their morale by relieving them of some of the worries with regard to their wives and families, the pay of the private soldier was immediately doubled and in addition all soldiers with dependents were paid extra allowances. The war risk insurance act also was passed, permitting all soldiers and officers to insure dependents from $1,000 to $10,000 at a practically nominal premium in the event of their loss of life.

To guard soldiers further against loss of health or limb various disability compensation laws have been passed paying from $8 per month to $250 per month for disability due to injury or disease resulting from war service. Free medical and surgical treatment also has been provided for diseases or injuries suffered as a result of military service.

At the end of the war each soldier upon discharge was given a bonus of $60 with which to purchase civilian clothing, and this $60 has been paid to the dependents of those who died during service. There also has been provided subsequently free hospital treatment for veterans for any disease or injury, even those contracted in their ordinary civil occupations or recreations; and besides all this they may be paid, and about 400,000 are being paid, from $12 to $40 per month if permanently disabled from any cause whatever, and are entitled to continue their war insurance against all diseases or injuries. In fact, the insurance allowed at very low premium rates is much more liberal now than it was during the war.

The compensation thus allowed by the United States to her soldiers and sailors is many times more than the compensation allowed to the war-time military forces of any other country in the world, and the compensation and benefits allowed our veterans of the World War have been a great deal more than the benefits granted to our own veterans of all previous wars.

We are now paying over $860,000,000 a year to our World War men. That is practically as much as England, France, Germany, Italy, and Canada, all combined, pay to all of their World War men. We mobilized 4,750,000 men. They mobilized 34,240,000 men. On the basis of our total mobilized men, we are now paying $180 per capita per year to our veterans. On the basis of our battle casualties, killed and wounded, we are now annually paying $2,663 per capita to our veterans. That is ten times as much as Canada pays, and Canada pays four times as much as England pays. These figures do not include loans and payment on the adjusted-service certificates. We have cared for our veterans more liberally and more completely than any other nation in the world has ever done.

The United States has already paid the World War veterans almost $6,000,000,000. Our total payments to all of the veterans of all of our other wars is $8,000,000,000.

The United States is now paying almost $9 per capita per year in veterans' payments. That is the equivalent of a charge of 75 cents a month against every man, woman, and child in the United States.

I am a service man. We can not set the service men over, separate, and apart from the rest of our citizenship. Our greatest loyalty is not to ourselves, but to this Nation.

Study the above figures, and I believe you will agree with me that we must call a halt to increasing veterans' expenditures. The veterans themselves must take the lead. Twice in the history of this Nation the American people have rebelled and insisted on a reduction of veterans' expenditures, and they will do it again if these expenditures are not kept within reasonable limits.

In the year 1920 the subject of adjusting the compensation of our World War veterans was seriously considered. The principal reason for advocating such an act was that the soldier suffered a financial disadvantage by being in service during the war-time period when very high wages were paid by certain war industries and by the ordinary civil industries who because of this competition were required to pay higher wages. Besides this the war veteran, after his discharge from service, suffered a period of unemployment while seeking a job and while readjusting himself to an acceptable peace-time occupation.

The adjustment of this compensation was a just obligation, as I saw it. There was general disagreement from 1920 to 1924 among the veterans themselves and the representatives of veterans' organizations as to the form the adjusted compensation should assume. It was shown that any large cash payments would be out of the question, the condition of the Treasury being such that any large expenditures would be impossible. In addition to the necessary expenses of running the Government there was outstanding obligations of $25,000,000,000 in short-term certificates and long-term bonds, and Congress was strongly averse to providing funds by additional taxation or by adding to this extremely large national debt by the issue of more bonds.

The cost of payment of adjusted compensation was variously estimated at that time to be from one to two billion dollars.

Realizing thoroughly the impracticability of a cash adjusted-compensation settlement the American Legion passed the following resolution at their national convention at Cleveland, September 27, 28, and 29, 1920, after full discussion of the subject on the convention floor:

Resolved, That the American Legion in national convention here assembled gives its unqualified approval of House bill No. 14157, which passed the House of Representatives by a vote of 289 to 92 May 29, 1920, and which is now pending before the Senate, and which provides for the optional plan of either—

1. Adjusted-service pay, based on length of service.
2. Adjusted-service certificates maturing in 20 years, based on length of service.
3. Vocational training.
4. Farm or home aid.
5. Land settlement, for which 31 States have already made, through their State legislatures, provision for cooperation.

The Veterans of Foreign Wars, an organization not representative entirely of World War veterans, which now is strongly agitating for full cash payment of the adjusted-service certificates, stated before the House Ways and Means Committee that an adjustment at that time amounting to $30 per month for each month or fraction would be equitable. The following is quoted from a statement by Mr. Hale, chairman of the subcommittee of the legislative committee of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, on March 3, 1920, Sixty-sixth Congress, second session, before the House Ways and Means Committee:

> It is our thought that if Congress will enact a law granting $30 per month for each month or fractional part of a month served by the ex-service men and women it will be accepted by them as an expression of the country's appreciation and will at the same time not strain the Nation's resources. In reaching this conclusion the Veterans of Foreign Wars have endeavored to establish a figure which will equitably represent the average monthly earnings which each ex-service man and woman should have been able to effect if they had been permitted to continue in civil life.

From this it will be seen that there was little or no question as to the amount that would be considered as full adjustment of the soldiers' service compensation at the time the subject was first considered, and it appears that practically all veterans were at that time and up to the past year or more satisfied with this adjustment.

Before the adjusted compensation act of 1924 was finally drafted and passed the alternative adjustments, providing for vocational training aid, farm or home aid, and land settlement aid were withdrawn for a number of substantial reasons.

The law as enacted in May, 1924, provided for additional compensation of $1 per day for home service and $1.25 per day for oversea service rendered by each honorably discharged veteran below the grade of major in the Army or lieutenant commander in the Navy, to be paid for each day of service not already adjusted by payment of the $60 bonus. A maximum of $500 for men having only home service and $625 for men rendering oversea service was fixed. Certain exceptions were made, such as veterans on road work and others whose compensation already was in excess of the regular amounts paid line soldiers.

This adjusted compensation was payable in cash to all veterans entitled to $50 or less and to the dependents of those veterans who died before making application for the adjusted compensation.

The law provided that each veteran whose adjusted service credit of $1 and $1.25 per day amounted to more than $50 should be issued an adjusted-service certificate, the amount of which would be the same as a 20-year endowment insurance policy that could be purchased, not for the amount of his adjusted-service credit only, but for the amount of the adjusted-service credit plus 25 per cent additional.

This adjusted-service certificate, or 20-year endowment insurance policy is payable 20 years after its effective date, or, in the event of the veteran's death, it is payable to some person designated by the veteran, or to his estate. Adjusted-service certificates were given a loan value and national banks and trust companies as well as the Government were authorized to make loans to such veterans as desired them.

The maturity value of each adjusted-service certificate is more than two and one-half times the amount of the adjusted-service credit to which a veteran is entitled at the specified rate of $1 per day of home service, and $1.25 per day of oversea service. For example, the average veteran, whose adjusted-service credit amounted to only $397, received an adjusted-service certificate for $1,000. Had the decision been to pay him cash, then he would have received not $1,000, but $397. The balance of $603 is made up of the 25 per cent for deferred payment and 4 per cent compound interest for 20 years. It follows, therefore, that the Government does not owe $1,000 on these certificates now, for included in the $1,000 certificate is 13 years unaccrued interest.

I am advised that the present value of the certificates is about 55 cents on the dollar. Or that for every dollar represented by the certificate as payable in 1945, 55 cents is now an accrued obligation of the Government; 45 cents is an unaccrued obligation and an unearned obligation. It necessarily follows that if the certificates are to be paid now that the only amount that could be equitably claimed would be 55 per cent of the 1945 value. I believe that to be a fair and just statement. I would favor the amendment of the existing law so that whenever any service man desires to surrender his certificate and accept payment that he should be paid its present value. Then whenever a man wants what the Government is actually obligated to pay him, whether it be now or any time between now and 1945, he could get his money. Those who prefer to allow their money to accumulate may do so and also have their insurance protection. Personally, I believe that such an amendment of the law would be fair to the men and the Government. But beyond that I do not believe the Congress should go.

I am advised that the maturity value of these certificates is approximately $3,530,000,000, and that their present value as of January 1 of this year was $1,880,000,000. That $1,880,000,000 was the Government's obligation as of January 1, last, on these certificates. That is what the Government now owes. To pay the 1945 value now would mean not only the payment of the adjusted compensation promised when the act was passed but the payment in addition thereto of $1,650,000,000 over and above every promise that the Government has made.

I do not believe that the service men of America will want that money. They ask only for that which the Government has promised them. If the Patman bill should become a law, the holder of a $1,000 certificate would be paid about $550 now accrued thereon. He would be paid in addition thereto $450 of unaccrued and unearned interest—$450 more than the Government promised when the certificate was issued. Assume that the holder of a certificate for $1,000 was paid that amount under the Patman plan. He could reinvest that money at 4 per cent, and by allowing it to compound for 13 years, or until 1945, it would then be worth $1,665. That increase of $665 represents what it would cost the Government for the payment of each $1,000 certificate now over and above the existing obligation.

As above indicated, this adjustment was considered by the great majority of veterans and the representatives of veterans' organizations as perfectly satisfactory. Practically no agitation for further adjustment was heard until the year 1930, five years later, at which time, due to general conditions common to the whole United States, a number of veterans found themselves unemployed and there was a movement initiated among the veterans' organizations to obtain some of the value represented by these adjusted-service certificates in the form of immediate cash payment.

Congress, recognizing the force of the economic pressure on the veterans themselves, and believing from the statements of a number of economic authorities that the expenditure of additional amounts by veterans might aid in the rehabilitation of the country's business and industry, enacted the emergency adjusted compensation act of 1931. This act increased the loan value of adjusted-service certificates to 50 per cent of their face value. This action was made possible by Congress because the amount in the adjusted-service certificate fund from appropriations of prior years, although not adequate to pay the whole of this loan value, was believed to be sufficient if the appropriation of a reasonable amount in addition could be made. It was felt that this could be afforded without jeopardizing the financial transactions of the Government and since the amount was being paid as a loan the United States Government life-insurance fund and the banks would make loans to an extent where the resources of the Government would not be strained to the breaking point. It was necessary to appropriate and make available $312,000,000 to supplement this fund. Another factor entering into the adjustment was that the loan value of 50 per cent of the face value represented what was practically the cash value of the certificates at that time.

Congress might have provided that veterans could surrender their adjusted-service certificates and receive only the then value of such certificates, which amounted to about $510 instead of $500, a minor difference. It was desired, however, to continue the insurance feature of these adjusted-service certificates; therefore, what Congress has done is to pay not only substantially the cash value of the certificates but to continue the insurance for the balance of the face value at practically no expense to the certificate holders.

What was considered a fair, equitable, and just additional compensation of $397 in the year 1925 when the World War adjusted compensation act became effective has as a matter of fact been fully discharged by payment of $500 six years later, computed on the basis of a fair interest rate and without considering the number of men who died during this period whose beneficiaries received the full face value of their certificates.

In spite of the obviously fair adjustment of compensation that already has been made we are now confronted with a strong agitation upon the part of certain nonveterans, veterans, and certain veterans' organizations to pay the full face value of the adjusted-service certificates in cash immediately. It is believed that this agitation which is joined not only by some of the veterans who are affected but by many of their friends and some representatives of special interests is due in a large part to ignorance of the facts set forth above.

This ignorance is regrettable but it is believed to be the result of the widely circulated slogan of the proponents for immediate payment. This has appeared in various forms and presents as true what will be seen obviously to be untrue; that is, that the money is due the veterans, or owing to them, therefore, it should be paid immediately.

It is unfair to the veterans themselves and to the public in general to circulate any such ideas, because it builds up false hopes in the minds of the veterans and the false idea in the mind of the public that the United States is avoiding a just debt and is refusing to take care of veterans in their moments of hardship. Such ideas are entirely false and any means taken to overcome them will not be wasted.

Everyone professing to favor immediate cash payment of adjusted-service certificates, including the strongest proponents of such payment in Congress and in the Senate, admit that it would not be practicable to attempt to raise the necessary amount for this purpose by the ordinary means at the disposal of the Treasury at this time. The great financial authorities of the country have asserted that while raising the amount that would be required probably would not be disastrous to the country's finances it would be extremely dangerous and could not be attempted without endangering future refinancing operations which will be absolutely necessary for the Government during the next 10 years or more.

The cash payment of the adjusted-compensation certificates would cost about $2,400,000,000. There are 120,000,000 people in this Nation. That means a cost of $20 per capita. In order to pay an average of $600 each to 4,000,000 service men in the United States I would have to vote a present charge against 120,000,000 people equivalent to $20 per capita. I will not do it. I do not believe that our people want that added charge and burden.

The increased taxes this Congress passed will be burdensome—repugnant, some of them—so much so that I voted against the bill on final passage as a protest against some of them. The cost of paying the adjusted-compensation certificates is $20 per capita. The annual cost of the new tax bill is $10 per capita. One can not be for the immediate payment of these certificates and against increased taxes at the same time. Let me put it this way. If every cent collected by the new tax bill were segregated in one fund and used to pay the adjusted-compensation certificates, it would take all of the increased taxes for two years to pay them. Surely, the service men themselves, when they understand that, will not ask that that burden be placed upon our people.

To give some idea of what a stupendous sum $2,400,000,000 is, consider that if $2.36 were set aside at the beginning of the Christian era and another $2.36 added to that amount each minute from that time to the present day the amount would not yet be quite sufficient to equal this sum. The sum of $3,400 a day set aside for every day of the Christian era would not equal the cost of the payment of these certificates to-day.

One of the principal arguments advanced by the proponents of this proposed legislation is that the money, if expended by the veterans, would be of material assistance in the rehabilitation of business and industry, and would thereby furnish employment to a large number of people, including the veterans themselves. The number of unemployed veterans, as compared to the number of unemployed in the civil population as a whole, is very small. In fact, the proportion of unemployed to employed veterans is much smaller than the proportion of unemployed to the employed in the rest of the population. It will be readily seen from this that the benefits will largely accrue not to the veterans themselves, who admittedly will use a large proportion of the money received to pay debts and for other proper purposes, but to the general population, and the testimony at the hearings on this subject before the House Ways and Means Committee tends to show that any benefits to the general population that might accrue would be more than overbalanced by further decline in commodity prices and the increased burden of taxation that it would be necessary to impose.

When it is considered that during the past year and two months over $1,300,000,000 has been placed in the hands of veterans as adjusted compensation, and this has had very little, if any, effect on the general economic conditions, it must be admitted that, to say the very best in favor of this argument, its effects would be extremely uncertain.

There are veterans in desperate need. I know it. There are many nonveterans in that same desperate need. We know that also. There are veterans that are not in need. We know that, too. Why tax all of the people now to make payments not yet due to veterans, rich and poor alike? I am reliably informed that several of the leaders of the "bonus army" now in Washington, living upon public contributions otherwise sorely needed, are not only not in want but have not taken advantage of the loan features of their compensation certificates. They have not asked the money now available to them, yet they are leading in the agitation for these increased benefits.

I believe that a fair perusal of the above by every veteran would stop immediately any further agitation for immediate cash payment of adjusted-service certificates. Certainly presentation of these facts to the people of the country will result in their reaching that conclusion.

It has been alleged and inferred by those advocating immediate cash payment of the face value of adjusted-service certificates that the so-called Patman bill (H. R. 7726), which is the legislation advanced by the principal proponents, would not impose any additional cost to the people of the United States. It is obvious that this bill, which provides for 3½ per cent bonds to be placed in the hands of Federal reserve banks for the issuance of currency, would impose additional cost on the taxpayers of precisely the amount of 3½ per cent interest compounded annually on the $2,400,000,000 that would be required, which in 13 years would be over $1,350,000,000. This amount would represent profit to the Federal reserve banks from which the veterans would receive no return whatever.

In connection with this subject it certainly would not be practical nor would it be advisable to involve in legislation on this subject other matters which obviously should stand upon their own merits. Thus the proposed tax on beer and the proposal to inflate the currency are matters which must be considered on their own merits, free from other influences both for and against the veterans and the proposed adjusted-compensation legislation.

We often hear the statement that the country has "got to have more money," an inflation or a "reflation" of the currency, as some choose to call it. For the past several weeks currency in circulation has been increased at the rate of $100,000,000 a week. We have $900,000,000 more currency outstanding now than we had in 1929, when prices were high. During the last quarter of 1931 and the first quarter of 1932 the money in circulation per capita was $45. In the corresponding period of 1928–29 it was $41 and $39 per capita. During the corresponding period of 1925–26 it was $44 to $42 per capita. The fourth quarter of 1923 had a per capita circulation of $45, but with that exception you have to go back to 1921 to find as much or more money in circulation as there is now.

This seems to point to the fact that what is needed is not so much "more money in circulation," but more speed to the circulation, for during the time that the money in circulation has increased, prices, bank deposits, and production have not increased. Prices and production will increase when the speed of business increases, and that will come when our people regain confidence. Certainly adding $2,400,000,000 to the present obligation of the Treasury will not aid in restoring that confidence.

The veteran who is affected is one of our most substantial citizens. He is a man with a family, and a taxpayer. His patriotic and civic spirit can not be excelled by any group of citizens. He has offered himself for his country in the past and will not hesitate again to do so. His position in the community is the same with regard to the general economic conditions as that of all other citizens. His compensation for service rendered already has been adjusted and readjusted, and in addition he has been assured against dependency on others when disease, accident, age, and infirmity shall take their natural toll. He is unwilling to impose for his own selfish ends a burden upon all his fellow citizens which may endanger the economic structure of the country. In short, he is a citizen of the United States; he can not be set over separate and apart from all others; his first loyalty is not to himself but to this Nation.

EMERGENCY RELIEF LEGISLATION

Mr. ERK. Mr. Speaker, I desire briefly to discuss some of the outstanding measures enacted during the session about to close, the first session of the Seventy-second Congress, particularly emergency relief legislation.

Over a year ago I gave expression to much of the subject matter herein contained. Subsequently, however, all of the following suggestions and recommendations accompanied the resolution which I introduced several months ago with the purpose in view of enacting a general omnibus bill for the restoration of business and industry and employment. My resolution and plan were introduced prior to the introduction, in either the House or Senate, of the recently enacted relief measure. The essentials of my proposal are in the relief bill, while many of the other recommendations here enumerated were introduced separately and have since become laws (see Nos. 1 to 19—compare them).

Because there is urgent need, perhaps more urgent than ever before in the history of our country, for immediate, constructive, and definitely planned action for the relief of business and industry and for the restoration of labor to profitable employment, I have prepared and introduced a concurrent resolution providing for the establishment of a joint congressional committee to be known as the joint committee on industrial and business restoration, whose duty it shall be to devise ways and means to accomplish expeditiously these desired ends.

The resolution stipulates that this committee shall consist of 54 members, of whom 26 shall be appointed by the President of the Senate, one member of the majority party and one member of the minority party, from the several standing committees of the Senate, as enumerated; and 28 Members of the House of Representatives to be named by the Speaker, one member of the majority party and one member of the minority party, from the standing committees of the House, as indicated in the resolution.

It is proposed that this committee shall direct its attention solely and exclusively to the problem of to-day as it affects business and industry and unemployment and the revival of confidence of both employer and employee, to the end that it may make speedy recommendation of a program to be acted upon during the present session of Congress for the restoration of business and industry and employment.

America is at war even though there is no roar of musketry, no dropping of bombs from the clouds, and no bloodshed. It is at war on idleness and unemployment and starvation, and because these are cruel and harsh-sounding words we use the milder term of business depression. It is none the less warfare and the Nation has been found unprepared to cope with it. The cries that we hear are not from those who are physically wounded and maimed, and who need succor, but rather the despair of those who are without jobs and who must have work.

When the Lusitania was sunk with its rich cargo a Nation arose in its wrath and demanded redress. Since the so-called business depression began the potential value of a fleet of Lusitanias has been lost to America every week through lack of opportunity and failure to produce the wealth and treasure of which our people are capable, and through falling prices and the shrinking of securities. When it was said to be necessary to fight to make the world safe for democracy there was an unprecedented outpouring of men and money, but in making America safe for prosperity, we have been notably remiss.

Eight million men walking our streets in search of employment are a greater menace to civilization than were the legions of Germany marching through Belgium.

It is true that in this emergency we have sought measures of relief, but they have not brought the restoration desired. These are abnormal and perilous times, and the problem before us is an extraordinary one, calling for heroic methods in its solution. What we have done up to the present time is more or less patchwork, worthy and commendable in many respects, but inadequate to meet the distressing situation.

We have developed financial groups, relief organizations, a committee to enforce economic administration of Government, a Reconstruction Finance Corporation to aid in liquidating the frozen assets of banking institutions and to assist transportation companies; we have formed farm bodies to promote agriculture, and supplied means to stimulate cooperative marketing; we have provided Government funds for road construction and the erection of public buildings and other improvements, but the broad foundation of our wealth-producing agency has not received its proper share of consideration. We have specialized in our relief endeavors and in doing so the great body of business and industry and of labor has been neglected. Commercial enterprise is the shuttle which moving back and forth in the warp of American life produces the fabric of our prosperity. If it is estopped, halted, or interrupted, the product is seriously impaired.

The time has come when we should center our attention upon ways and means to revive business and industry, that line of activities which produces goods and provides employment for the masses, for the skilled artisan and for the common laborer. Business, as we have come to speak of our everyday pursuits, is the proverbial "goose that lays the golden egg"; banks and financial institutions are but the depositories wherein the golden eggs are packed and stored—frequently cold-storaged. The "goose" should be nurtured and encouraged; it should be fed and cared for. It should not be frightened and made timid. Business should not be handicapped by needless restrictions; it should not be circumscribed by unnecessary and obnoxious limitations. It should be encouraged in its undertakings rather than frowned upon, distrusted, and suspected. Its genius and enterprise should be stimulated rather than stifled. The obstacles in its way should be removed, and removed without further delay.

Our statutes contain too many "don'ts" and too many restrictions that are directed at business. "Thou shalt not" has come to be the command to which business is obliged to listen. We talk of the necessity of establishing confidence, yet we refuse confidence to those whom we are asking to restore prosperity by increasing their activities and thus extending the opportunities for employment. American business honor has come to be the world's model of integrity in all commercial dealings, yet many of our laws tend to impede the development of business under that standard.

PURPOSES OF THE JOINT CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE ON BUSINESS AND INDUSTRIAL RESTORATION

The President, in his annual messages to Congress, has twice called attention to the condition of affairs resulting from our antitrust laws, and has urged that an inquiry be instituted into some aspects of the economic workings of these laws. He would not repeal the Sherman Act, nor would I, for the prevention of monopolies is of the most vital importance. He has pointed out that competition is not only the basis of protection to the consumer but is the incentive to progress, yet he has also cited the fact that interpretation of these laws by the courts, and the changes in business, especially in the economic effect upon those enterprises closely allied to the use of our natural resources, make such an inquiry desirable.

If we would restore normal conditions of general prosperity, we must restore business and industry to normal, natural conditions. If we would restore a feeling of confidence, we must ourselves place confidence in the integrity of business. We must free business from its shackles. We must give it opportunity for progress and development. We must not retain laws that hamstring business and then expect business to succeed and provide employment for labor. When there is general business prosperity the Government experiences no difficulty in balancing its financial Budget and labor has no difficulty in finding remunerative employment.

Taxes for the support of government can no more be produced from stagnant business than bountiful harvests can be produced from barren fields. The brakes upon the wheels of industry must be lifted, and the mechanism must be oiled in order that the machinery of production may be put into motion and that labor now demanding relief may be placed at work.

When conditions produce the necessity it is as well for a nation to economize as for an individual, and in many respects economies should be practiced in times of prosperity as well as in times of adversity. Economy is the natural course when income is curtailed, but it is not so much economy that the nation needs now as it is the necessity to augment its income. The Nation collectively needs the opportunity to go to work, the same as the individual who is out of a job. If we can aid in removing some of the restrictions, the limitations, and the red tape which prevent the country from going back to work and can provide some aid and assistance to that end, it is our duty, it is our obligation to do so.

I therefore propose that there shall be created a joint congressional committee, made up from certain committees of the Senate and House of Representatives whose functions and activities bring them into contact and relationship with, and afford them a knowledge of various phases of the problems that affect the business life of the Nation, to the end that they may be enabled to coordinate the needs of business, industry, and employment, in so far as they may be influenced by legislation or the lack of legislation, intensively and immediately in every way for the desired relief; such a committee to be known as the joint committee on industrial and business restoration. It would consist of 54 members to be appointed as follows:

By the President of the Senate, 26, one member from the majority party and one member from the minority party from each of the following committees of the Senate: Agriculture and Forestry, Appropriations, Banking and Currency, Commerce, Education and Labor, Finance, Immigration, Interstate Commerce, Judiciary, Manufactures, Mines and Mining, Post Offices and Post Roads, and Public Buildings and Grounds; and by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, 28, one member of the majority party and one member of the minority party from each of the following committees of the House of Representatives: Agriculture, Appropriations, Banking and Currency, Flood Control, Immigration and Naturalization, Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Judiciary, Labor, Mines and Mining, the Post Office and Post Roads, Public Buildings and Grounds, Revision of the Laws, Rivers and Harbors, and Ways and Means. Such a committee would cease to exist upon the termination of the present session of Congress.

Its duty should be to devise ways and means to aid in the encouragement and restoration of industry and business and of employment in the United States.

Such a committee should have the authority to use as assistants employees of the Federal Government, to take testimony, to call upon the heads of the various executive departments, bureaus, and commissions, and their employees for information, and be authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate and House of Representatives.

All business of the committee should be solely and only to the end of aiding business and industry, the employment of labor, and the restoration of prosperity. The committee should expedite its work and make its report to Congress with all possible speed. I realize that this is an extraordinary procedure, never before undertaken, but an extraordinary condition exists and must be met and its problems solved by an extraordinary remedy.

A FEW SUBJECTS FOR CONSIDERATION

I would not undertake to suggest in detail what recommendations should be made by this committee nor what its conclusions should be, but I have already alluded to some of the questions it should consider, notably the repeal of some of the drastic antitrust laws. Some of our statutes are as obsolete as the stagecoach and prairie schooner.

Third. More than 2,400 years ago, history tells us, 1,000 Spartans hard pressed by tens of thousands of Persians at the Pass of Thermopylæ knelt and took the Spartan pledge of consecration:

I pledge that I will never desert my comrades in arms.
I pledge that I will fight to death for my fatherland.
I pledge that I will transmit the freedom and democracy of my Greece unmarred and even greater than it was transmitted to me.

OUR PLEDGE OF FAITH

Americans are hard pressed to-day. There are problems on every hand. Her defenders must take, as the Spartans of old, their pledge of faith.

I pledge that I will continue to serve my fellow man.

I pledge that I will do everything in my power to solve the problems of my country to the best interests of all her people.

I pledge that I will transmit the freedom and democracy of my America unmarred and even greater than it was transmitted to me.

When this unavoidable depression came upon us, through the fault of no man and of no party, I proposed a plan of relief which to a degree is now in process of execution. This plan contemplates nation-wide Federal improvement projects that have already been either authorized or approved. It calls for the expenditure of over $2,000,000,000, and in many instances the work is now in progress. In other words, it is a plan to speed up the construction, development, and the building of things we already need in the way of improvements rather than to cover their production over a long term of years and by the slow process of normal times.

BONDS FOR PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS

Let us do our public work now. Instead of waiting from year to year and from one session of Congress to another for sufficient funds to complete Government projects, it would be the wiser and more economical plan to carry the work through to completion during the present emergency. Instead of waiting 10 to 15 years to build a post office (and there are over 300 to be built) it would be better to provide the funds at once to put up the structure in a practical business-like way and with the celerity we observed in commercial enterprises financed by private capital.

Through our system of piecemeal appropriations and the dragging out of public works over a long period of years, good money has been wasted. For example, an improvement is estimated to cost $10,000,000; and the funds are appropriated at the rate of $1,000,000 a year. We are obliged to wait 10 years for its completion, which is out of all proportion to the time normally required. An investment for practically nine years is lost.

A public improvement is a public necessity. If a project has been approved, it is assumed that it is to be a benefit to the public, and any loss of time in its completion is a loss also in dollars and cents. It is unbusinesslike and wasteful.

Now is the time to tackle these jobs and finish them in the truly American way. Now is the time to stop debating and turn our attention to the task—to silence our tongues and pens and take up the pick and shovel. Now is the time to start building the Lake Erie and Ohio River Canal.

PROJECTS EITHER AUTHORIZED OR APPROVED

A few of the items are these:

Public-building program	$634,444,000
Program of good roads	300,000,000
Rivers and harbors	130,000,000
Modernization of battleships	30,000,000
Boulder Dam	165,000,000
Forest highways	30,000,000
Public works, Navy	10,000,000
Construction of military posts	15,000,000
Veterans' hospitals	31,000,000

The immediate consummation of this great plan would put men to work; it would be the means of putting food in the mouths of our people; it would put American labor on its proper dignified footing; it would discount all talk about dole; it would restore confidence—and the world moves on confidence. Money invested for this purpose would reap a golden return, bringing prosperity, contentment, and peace. These are abnormal times and call for abnormal treatment. "A condition confronts us, and not a theory." An emergency exists and must be met by an emergency.

I heartily indorse the sale of bonds for public improvements—municipal, county, State, and National. There is no better investment. The Panama Canal is a notable example. Its bonds were sold in "less than no time," and the operation of this monument to American achievement is a glowing financial success. Other needful projects to-day hold in store the same opportunities for sound financing.

If, in times of war, we can expend billions for destruction, we can assuredly in times of peace likewise spend millions for purposes of construction. In the latter case we have something tangible to show for our expenditure and our efforts. We have an asset. The money is not wasted, but essentially, like a blessing from on high, it would afford work for millions of the unemployed; it is work the country needs; the Republic is as sound as ever, but her people are ill and depressed in want for the proper remedy—a job!

In the conduct of government we have seen how necessary it is to balance our Budget, and this we have made an effort to do. In our private affairs it is also necessary to balance the budget; it is necessary to balance the budget of industry, so that production and consumption shall be as nearly equal as it is possible to make them, to the end that those who produce and those who are willing to produce have their fair share of that which they do produce.

In our complex civilization industry operates in a circle. The man who is profitably employed in one industry by the expenditure of his earnings for his needs provides employment for men in other industries and they in turn reach out in their demands for the products of others, and thus the wheels of commerce are kept in motion—the balance wheels of industry. When, however, there is a stoppage in one line of activity all others are affected, and there have been in this depression so many activities stopped that the entire machinery of production and consumption is vitally disturbed. It is the duty of those who represent the people to reestablish the movement within the circle.

The Government itself can not sustain its Budget unless there is production. Its income is derived from taxes, and it can not obtain this income unless there is produced something upon which a tax can be levied.

WORK IS GOD'S BLESSING TO MANKIND

It is a false faith and a cruel creed which maintains that the Creator placed a curse upon mankind for its sin when in closing the gates of Eden upon our first parents He decreed that man should earn his bread by the sweat of his brow. Instead it was God's blessing. It is the want of work that is the curse. There is nothing in Divine ordinance that contemplates the dole, but rather there is the command to work, and the people are most happy and contented when they have work. Governments are organized among men for the execution of that command. The trinity of our material life is work, work, and more work. It is work that our people want; it is jobs in order that they may maintain themselves.

When people are profitably employed crime is less rampant, and revolt against the established order sinks to a minimum. In providing the means whereby people may profitably employ themselves we must act together. It is only by virtue of unity that we can accomplish that which we seek. "The multitude which does not reduce itself to unity is confusion."

BALANCE OUR INDUSTRIAL BUDGET

Again, I say, we must balance our industrial budget. There is capital, there is money, and employment must be made to balance with it. Confidence is the scale which must balance them. Panics are caused by depressions, and depressions are caused by lack of confidence. Restore confidence. Confidence is faith in your country. It is part of the Spartan pledge. Have confidence. The Government is helping and should continue to help regardless of the cost. Surely this is "Our own, our native land," a "Government of the people, by the people, and for the people."

Fourth. If it becomes necessary to do so for the support and encouragement of business and industry, and to enable it to put men to work where unemployment now exists, there should be given careful consideration to the subject of allowing in certain cases, under such limitations as might be deemed proper, a moratorium to business and industry in the deferring payment of next year's income taxes. Surely if we can be so liberal to foreign countries as to extend to them the time in which they may repay to us their just indebtedness, we can grant a like privilege to our own people, for when all is said and done business and industry constitute the source from which the Government derives its chief source of revenue to balance the Budget.

Fifth. It is right and proper to balance the Nation's Budget, but balanced budgets alone will not make jobs for the unemployed. Let us balance the budget of industry by encouraging and helping it, thereby giving work to the unemployed, and with industry thriving and labor employed we shall easily and quickly balance the Nation's financial Budget.

Sixth. There should be consideration of the proposal for a $5,000,000,000 bond issue to provide for the initiation of a great program of public works. Thus would be created employment for many men on many projects which would likewise call for the production of materials and stimulate business to a return of activity. It would give work to more than 2,000,000 persons now unemployed, and the cost of the service charges on the bond issue would be notably less than the expense of caring for these persons by charity. Such a plan undertakes affirmatively to put men and materials now idle at work and would provide the necessary productive self-liquidating construction.

Seventh. There should be consideration of an amendment to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act to broaden the purpose for which it was created, provide additional appropriations, and allow States and municipalities to borrow from the funds of that corporation to meet relief needs. All loans should be held to a business basis.

Eighth. Other subjects for consideration might include a program to be financed by tax-exempt bonds, the proceeds of which would be expended on self-liquidating and profit-making enterprises, such as tunnels, rivers and harbors, and bridges.

Ninth. The legalization of beer and its consequent taxation as a source of revenue to pay the interest and amortization charges on a bond issue for such a program.

With the legalization of beer I predict that there would be a return of confidence, almost overnight, and result in a revival of business. Prohibition is definitely involved in the present economic situation. It can not be said for prohibition that it has prevented the sale and consumption of alcoholic beverages.

Tenth. Unequivocal opposition to any cancellation or reduction proposal of the war debts owed the United States by foreign governments.

Eleventh. The curbing and reduction of Government extravagance and the safeguarding of the national credit.

Twelfth. The reduction of governmental activities interfering with legitimate business. "Putting more business in government and less government in business."

Thirteenth. Set the machinery in motion to deal directly with unemployment relief.

Fourteenth. Strict enforcement of the statutes dealing with the deportation of undesirable aliens.

Fifteenth. Legislation pertaining to the protection of independent merchants from chain-store competition through resale price legislation.

Sixteenth. Insurance and protection of bank deposits.

Seventeenth. Establishment of home-loan banks, possibly through the Federal reserve banking system, thereby offering encouragement to the home owner, and provision must be made to enable building and loan organizations and the smaller banks to extend credit, giving the home builder and the head of the small enterprise the same privileges of financing that have been offered the larger corporation.

Eighteenth. Widespread adoption of the 5-day week would give work to millions now unemployed, and if working hours were universally reduced to 30 or 35 a week jobs would be created for practically all of those now out of work. The 8,000,000 now unemployed represents a lost buying power of at least $800,000,000 a month, based on average wages. Machines have shortened the work process in industry; less working time is needed to produce what the market demands.

Nineteenth. The Congress should step on the legislative accelerator, provide for a nonpartisan agreement for action, forget that there is a middle aisle on the floor of the House and Senate, and dispose of the billion-dollar tax bill, balance the Budget, enact the appropriation bills, dispose of the economy measure, and provide relief to business and industry and the millions of unemployed prior to any recess or adjournment. This combination of projects will revive the morale of the country.

There are many plans and methods for dealing with widely different aspects of the present situation that are now before different committees. It would seem to be desirable that they be coordinated and considered by a joint committee which would deal with them en bloc rather than by piecemeal and separately, thus avoiding duplicating, overlapping, and working at cross purposes, and enabling speedy and concerted action.

With the conclusion of the consideration of the necessary supply bills Congress can well afford to devote the balance of this session to legislation designed solely for the purpose of aiding in the restoration of business and industry. It can and should close its doors to all other matters. Nothing is so important, nothing is so urgent. There is nothing that is so plainly our duty. The country demands action without further delay. An ounce of action is worth a pound of reflection.

INDUSTRIAL DEPRESSION—CAUSE AND CURE

Economists tell us that what we call business depressions, stagnation in industry, and hard times, recur at more or less regular periods, and in support of their statement they point to a series of such conditions that have come upon us once or twice in each generation since the foundation of the Government. Nor are these unfortunate circumstances peculiar to the United States; they are recognized in every civilized country on the globe, and they are to be found among all peoples as far back as we have recorded history.

The seven years of plenty and the seven years of famine which the Bible tells us occurred in Egypt were but the ancient counterpart of conditions which we have seen again and again in our own and other countries. Fortunate for the people of the land of the Nile there were prophets who foretold of the coming of the period of depression and, fortunate for them too, they were governed by a sort of prime minister or general manager—for Joseph was really that under the Pharaohs—who took warning and was prepared for the eventualities that came.

In the present situation the world has become so closely knitted together and countries have become so interdependent that a condition which seriously affects one of the family of nations is quite likely to be reflected in the others. It is such in the situation to-day. We feel keenly the hard times that are upon us, but we must realize that we alone are not sufferers, and while it is true that dark clouds elsewhere do not afford us any measure of sunshine, yet they do bring us an understanding of the fact that we are only in part responsible for the evils that prevail and that causes, whatever they may be, are world-wide and not necessarily local.

The economists who are so prolific in telling us that these business cataclysms are periodic are by no means united in their assignment of the reason for them. Some tell us that it is the money question, that the bankers, and especially the international bankers, are responsible; others declare that it is capitalism, under which system in the production of wealth too great a portion goes to capital and too little a part to labor, and for this condition there are a few who would substitute a system of socialism, wherein individual initiative is strangled and the state becomes supreme in the most minute details and affairs of human life. Some will tell you that it is the effect of the tariff and others that agriculture is not given the proper encouragement and support.

In this medley of opinion the layman naturally becomes confused and baffled. He only knows that it is mighty hard to make a living and to support his family, and many are not able to do even that much. He is not particularly concerned with theoretical causes and the expounding of argumentative opinions; what he wants is a job, his name on the pay roll, and he is ready and willing to render full measure of service and a substantial return, including a justifiable profit to his employer, for the opportunity.

Without making any claims to professional economics it would seem to me that we need not go far to determine two prime causes for the condition in which we find ourselves at the present time.

The first is that 13 years after the armistice that ended the great World War we are now suffering from the effects of that conflict, not in losses at the cannon's mouth but in losses of the material things that the war destroyed. The world, and we as a part of it, mortgaged ourselves to the extent of billions upon billions to carry on the work of destruction, and now the obligation is upon the world to pay, and, as in the case of individuals when nations can not pay, bankruptcy ensues.

Again, and perhaps it is a more potent reason than the aftermath of the war, we have notably neglected planning our industrial progress and development. We have proceeded throughout our entire existence in a more or less haphazard way, each industry, each business, and each individual seeking its or his own advancement without due consideration of the other fellow. In the future if we are to succeed there must be unified planning of industry. Some of our leading industrialists have seen this necessity, and to a degree have undertaken to put it into operation, but a prolonged campaign of education is essential to its success. Industries like those represented by the Steel Institute have realized the need of future planning and have gone far in that direction. Its great leaders are able to determine the amount that the industry is capable of producing, the cost of production, and the probable consumption in normal times. Because, however, most other industries have not done this, have not given their own business the same sort of careful study and forethought that the steel industry has its business, naturally even the latter has not been able to anticipate all contingencies.

Much as we may discredit the soviets, and as unsympathetic as I am with the reds, I think we can take a page from their book of experience and apply it to our private industries, and that is their system of planning, planning production, planning it so as to meet the demands of consumption; planning its industry by industry collectively. This does not abolish private initiative, instead it gives zest to it. Let us determine by scientific study and investigation, aided by the Government if need be, how much we need, how much we can produce, and then go to it.

And this not only applies to commerce, but it applies with equal force to agriculture. If the farmers of the Northwest raise wheat and the planters of the South grow cotton entirely without planning to meet the requirements of the country and of the world for wheat and cotton, and there is a large surplus, naturally there will be falling prices. When the farmers, who constitute approximately one-third of the buying power of the Nation, have no money with which to buy, industry in the cities and towns is thrown out of the harmony of production and there is disturbance all along the line. We have reached the stage in our development where industry must plan production, and it must not be hampered by restrictive laws in doing so. Instead there must be help and cooperation. When production is so planned that it meets and does not exceed the demands of consumption then there will be employment and satisfactory employment for everyone who wills to work.

We will come out of this depression as the country has emerged from other periods of hard times, although we always feel that the period we are ourselves passing through is the worst. We will come out of it not by any pronouncement or decree, or single action or the enactment of any particular law, but by degrees, perhaps slowly, but safely and securely. It will be necessary to emerge methodically, and in the light of the experience we have had we must systematically strive by the planning process to see that such periods do not recur.

HOOVER RELIEF BILL

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, we have before us a bill called a relief bill. A bill designed as a political chameleon to catch the eye of the people with its changing colors. I grant that it is a relief bill. But I insist that it does not grant any adequate relief to those that are in dire need of assistance.

To-day this Nation needs employment. This bill does not give it. The people cry for work, and under this bill we place their future in the hands of the great banker, Mr. Ogden Mills, Secretary of the Treasury. The farmer asks for a market and money to pay his taxes, and we give more money to the corporation to be loaned for the purpose of paying off bonded indebtedness to the bankers, while the farm is foreclosed.

Under this bill we collect taxes from the farmer, the home owner, the small manufacturer, and the small merchant to create a fund for distribution by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to corporations only. In this bill we submerge the individual for all purposes except paying taxes and place the corporation on a pedestal.

In the State of Indiana the value of all farm lands had decreased a billion dollars in the 10 years prior to April, 1930. The decline has been rapid since then. Yet our President says these people can have no relief. They are not corporations. They are only tax-paying individuals.

Mr. Dawes borrows for his bank in Chicago $80,000,000 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and all the farmers in my State combined, together with all their land as security, could not borrow even indirectly under the terms of this bill $80,000.

I voted against the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and I shall vote against granting it additional money and power. We are attempting to set up in this Nation a super-money power to control the destiny of individuals and Government. Mr. Hoover himself in his comments on the veto of the Garner bill stated that too much power was given to the corporation when it was allowed to make loans to individuals under the terms of the bill. Yet he is willing to give that power to them under his own bill if they divide it with Mr. Ogden Mills, the man who could not make a set of figures on the deficit of the Nation that would last 60 days.

Great things are said by the administration leaders about self-liquidating projects. Are the railroads self-liquidating when they have been going more and more into the red side of the ledger until they come to the taxpayer, hat in hand, to ask aid from the Public Chest? Are the insurance companies self-liquidating that are required, immediately following the greatest period of prosperity in history, to come to the Public Chest for money?

Yet we would by this bill give them more money through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and refuse aid to the man from the grass roots and the business man on Main Street. Our factories stand empty and silent. To operate and expand they must have money. They do not get it.

This bill is a relief bill in name only. It is a legislative hybrid sired by the President of the United States and born of a divided Congress. Like all hybrids, it is developed for one purpose only. The purpose of this bill is to provide more money for specified and pampered business interests at the expense of the Nation at large. It increases the power of that economic monstrosity, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

We all know the prevailing sentiment among the Members. The bill is offensive to many who will vote for it. They do not expect it to bring the cherished results. They want real and general relief. But they know from the "ipse dixit" statements from the White House by the administration leaders that they will not get any general relief. Those Members know where the money provided by this bill will go, and they know that those who must eventually pay are the patient, long-suffering American citizens on the farms and Main Streets of America.

But the cry for relief is everywhere. Anything that is labeled relief will receive attention in a hope that there will be something in it more than the mere words. In this case I feel that the hope is vain. If, as has been stated, we are in a condition worse than war, then heroic methods are demanded. Real relief is demanded. Instead of giving real aid by this bill, Congress is trying to make a rope from twisted sands. It can not be done.

I shall not be inveigled into voting for a bill because it bears a label. It must do more than that. It must be a bill that will bring results for all the people. There should be no class distinction where the depression is concerned. I shall not be a party to a relief bill such as this. I shall not vote for a makeshift relief bill. I shall vote against this bill.

PROHIBITION

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I am addressing my remarks not only to the Members of this House but also to the voters of the United States of America who are anxious to repeal or amend the eighteenth amendment and to repeal or amend the Volstead law.

I will in the beginning quote the prohibition plank in the platform of the Democratic Party which was adopted overwhelmingly by the Democratic convention held in Chicago the week of June 27, 1932. It reads as follows:

We advocate the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. To effect such repeal we demand that the Congress immediately propose a constitutional amendment to truly representative conventions in the States, called to act solely on that proposal. We urge the enactment of such measures by the several States as will actually promote temperance, effectively prevent the return of the saloon, and bring the liquor traffic into the open under complete supervision and control by the States.

We demand that the Federal Government effectively exercise its power to enable the States to protect themselves against importation of intoxicating liquors in violation of their laws.

Pending repeal, we favor immediate modification of the Volstead Act to legalize the manufacture and sale of beer and other beverages of such alcoholic content as is permissible under the Constitution and to provide therefrom a proper and needed revenue.

Since that time, Democratic Members of this Congress, many of whom were present in that convention, have had the opportunity to carry out the will of the Democratic Party as promulgated in their platform, a part of which I repeat again:

Pending repeal, we favor immediate modification of the Volstead Act to legalize the manufacture and sale of beer and other beverages of such alcoholic content as is permissible under the Constitution and to provide therefrom a proper and needed revenue.

Under date of July 11, 1932, Senator BINGHAM introduced in the Senate a bill to modify the Volstead law so as to allow the brewing of beer of 2.75 per cent alcoholic content by weight, which is actually 3.46 per cent alcohol by volume, and I quote what Senator BINGHAM said on that date in his speech:

During the war there was a proclamation of President Wilson, on September 16, 1918, in which, in order to preserve foodstuffs, he gave notice that no person could use sugar, corn, rice, or any other foods or fruits to make any kind of beverage, including near beer. The use of any such foodstuffs for the manufacture of anything for beverage purposes was prohibited under that proclamation.

Then, by proclamation dated January 30, 1919, he said that, whereas the prohibition and use of grain in the manufacture of beverages which were not intoxicating had been found by the President to be no longer necessary in order to secure an adequate and continuous supply of food, he modified the previous proclamation made on the 16th day of September, 1918, to the extent of permitting the use of grain in the manufacture of beverages which were not intoxicating, and that was the time when the brewers were permitted to manufacture 2.75 per cent beer, which was held by the Democratic administration at that time to be a nonintoxicating beverage.

A vote was called for in the Senate and the following Democratic United States Senators, mostly from the Southern States, voted against the modification of the Volstead law to legalize the brewing of a 2.75 per cent beer by weight: ASHURST, BAILEY, BLACK, BRATTON, BYRNES, CARAWAY, CONNALLY, COSTIGAN, DILL, GEORGE, GLASS, GORE, HARRISON, HAYDEN, HULL, KENDRICK, KING, LEWIS, MCGILL, MCKELLAR, SHEPPARD, STEPHENS, and ROBINSON of Arkansas, leader of the Democratic minority in the Senate.

The vote noted above shows distinctively that the 23 Democratic Senators, or one-half of the Democratic Members of that body, have disavowed the platform of the Democratic Party and have no intention of changing the Volstead law to permit the brewing of beer.

Again, I want to call your attention to the vote on 2.75 per cent beer by weight in the House of Representatives on May 23, 1932; 113 Democrats, which is a majority of the Democratic membership of the House, voted against it.

On July 3, 1932, the following petition, signed by 77 Republican Members of the House of Representatives, was presented to the Hon. JOHN N. GARNER, Speaker of the House of Representatives and also candidate for Vice President upon the Democratic ticket:

We, the undersigned, hereby respectfully request that the House of Representatives have an opportunity before the adjournment of the present session of Congress to vote on a bill legalizing the manufacture, transportation, and sale of beer and providing additional revenue for the United States Treasury by taxing such beer.

We are taking this unusual procedure for the reason that we belong to the minority party of the House, while you and your party are in control of all the parliamentary machinery necessary to bring such a bill before the House.

Inasmuch as both parties are now on record for a change in the prohibition policy of the United States Government, and inasmuch as there is no doubt that regardless of the outcome of the next election, the repeal of the eighteenth amendment will be submitted to the States of the Union for their respective ratification, there can be no honest justification for delaying an amendment to existing prohibition enforcement laws, permitting the manufacture, transportation, and sale of alcoholic beverages within the limits of the existing constitutional provisions, thereby reducing the enormous cost of attempted enforcement and also bringing in additional hundreds of millions of dollars revenue to the United States Treasury, now so badly depleted.

When this petition was signed and presented to Speaker GARNER he had, before he had been selected candidate for Vice President on the Democratic ticket and before the Democratic platform had been written, made the announcement that he was in favor of the repeal of the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead law. This being the case, the signers of the petition were hopeful that Speaker GARNER would embrace this opportunity to exercise his great power as Speaker of the House of Representatives and make it possible for the Members to vote upon the proposition of legalizing a nonintoxicating beer of the alcoholic content of 2.75 per cent by weight. However, Speaker GARNER declined this opportunity and simply referred the petition to the Judiciary Committee of the House, which is controlled and made up principally of southern Democrats, there being on this committee nine southern Democrats who are absolutely dry and committed to the dry issue against four northern Democrats who would be considered wet.

This action by Speaker GARNER buried the petition so that it could not and would not come before the House of Representatives for consideration at this session of Congress. Consistency still remains a jewel of the rarest order.

Now for another phase, which shows even more clearly the hypocrisy of the claim that the Democratic Party is a party of all the people and represents the interests of the United States. If there is any one issue upon which the Democrats of Northern States expect to win this year, it is the issue of prohibition. The Democrats from Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Ohio, Michigan, and Illinois are pinning their hopes of victory upon being able to convince the voters of their communities that if they are given control of the Government, they will do away with prohibition. The whole contest within the Democratic Party to-day revolves around that issue. The entire struggle for the election of a Democratic candidate is around that issue. And yet there is not a northern Democrat who promises his people that a Democratic victory means the elimination of prohibition but is falsifying the record. On March 14, in the vote on the motion to discharge the Judiciary Committee of this House, the chairman of which is from Texas, from further consideration of the Linthicum-Beck home rule prohibition resolution, Alabama cast 9 votes against that motion and none for it; the solid delegation of 7 in Arkansas voted against that motion; Florida cast 3 votes against it and none for it; Georgia cast 10 votes against it and none for it; Mississippi cast 6 votes against it and none for it; North Carolina cast 8 votes against it and 1 for it; Oklahoma cast 8 votes against it and none for it; South Carolina cast 6 votes against it and 1 for it; Tennessee cast 9 votes against it and 1 for it; the great State of Texas cast 14 votes against it and only 3 for it; Virginia cast 6 votes against it and 3 for it.

In other words, the solid Democratic South lined up against even giving the people a right to express themselves upon the question of prohibition. Regardless of the merits of the issue of prohibition, no Member dare rise in his seat and seriously contend that there is a single southern Democratic State that would ever vote for a repeal of the prohibition amendment or through its Representatives ever support upon the floor of this House a motion to modify the Volstead Act. Every northern Democrat that faces his constituency and says that his party, no matter what is written in its platform, offers any hope of the abolition of prohibition deliberately misrepresents the facts to his auditors, for he knows that so long as his party is dominated, as it has been for a half century and is to-day by the Democrats from the Southern States, who control 21 of the 34 standing committees and this House organization, just so long will it be absolutely impossible to bring about the slightest modification by national legislation of our Federal prohibition laws.

OUR NATIONAL LIFE

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to discuss in a brief article some things that I believe to be fundamental in our national life. I have a great faith in my country and its ability to work out from under the economic difficulties that now confront us. Much of our difficulty lies in the present state of mind we find prevalent with many of our citizens and especially those in industry. As a new man in Congress, I have been deeply impressed with the sincerity of my colleagues in an honest effort to enact such legislation as would be most helpful to the Nation, and I have supported most of the measures presented to this Congress with the hope that many of the difficulties that now confront us might be remedied by the legislation enacted.

Our people back home have been urging us to reduce the expenses of government and in this we have done well when we realize that about $800,000,000 have been saved the taxpayers in reduced appropriations. It has been my desire to do my full duty in the accomplishment of this, and I have always supported every such economy where I deemed it would be the least harmful. I believe, however, that our most important duty at this time is how best to make our friends back home realize that it is not within the province of Congress to restore prosperity unless we have the cooperation on the part of business, both large and small, in every line of endeavor. This means a call then for greater patriotism than has perhaps ever come to any people during peace times, a call that goes to every shop or place of business, to the farm, the mines; yes, into every home, calling to each citizen to do away with greed and selfishness, which I believe have had more to do with our present economic troubles than anything else. We have been trying to "outstrip" one another and in that great race for supremacy I fear we have gone too far, in that we have put the dollar above the human being. The greatest task before this Nation now is to get men and women back into the ranks of the employed and out of bread lines and I say then, Mr. Speaker, that Congress can not alone accomplish anything unless our people are willing to cooperate in this great effort to take these millions out of the ranks of the unemployed. We have been appropriating billions of dollars here for banks and railroads with the hope of helping the employment situation, but it is evident that we have gone about this matter in the wrong way, for from information coming to me, very little has been accomplished because of the failure of these interests to put people to work and in the failure to loan money to business men who in turn would put people to work.

I voted for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act with this in mind as well as to assist banks through the difficulties that confronted them, but I have been disappointed in learning that many of these that were helped by this superbank used the funds loaned to them to liquidate other obligations and did not use this money for legitimate industry that might put people to work. I have had numbers of small business men write me, complaining that they were not being accommodated in their local communities, advising me that they had good and adequate security to offer and were being denied additional funds that would enable them to do the very thing we aimed at in the establishment of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I repeat then that unless our people back home cooperate and interpret the meaning of Congress in this respect we have failed to accomplish that which we sought. The relief bill that I voted for, known as the Garner bill, and which the President did not approve, would have given the same privileges to the private business man that we have given to the large banks and corporations, and I can not understand why these should not be given the same consideration that has been given to these favored few.

It did not mean the establishment of many banks throughout the Nation, that would compete with other banks, for as I understand this bill, it meant that where an individual or corporation could not be financed in his local community and had adequate security to offer, then he could be helped the same as we have helped the larger organizations. Surely there was nothing unfair about this and I believe it would have been most helpful.

We have already set up the machinery in Government whereby this might have been handled without setting up any additional banks.

We handled it for the farmers and certainly could have done as much for private industry. I do not believe in giving privileges to one group of our people and denying them to the others, and from information given on the floor of the House of Representatives, I am confident that we have many of our people in private industry whose security would have been as good as that which we have accepted from many of our banks.

This country can not be restored to normal conditions with the present prices paid to our farmers for their products. The farmer is the greatest customer to business and if he is not prosperous, then business is not good. When one realizes that more than a million farmers have lost their farms through foreclosures, and that 3 out of every 5 farms to-day are mortgaged above their ability to pay, and that almost an equal number are unable to pay their State and local taxes, it is time that we do something in a permanent way to relieve this situation, because 40,000,000 of our people are those who live on the farms and in smaller communities.

With the low prices farmers now receive for their crops and the high taxes and fertilizer costs and the cost of machinery these of our citizenship are certainly not getting a "square deal." These are problems that must be solved and can be solved if our people are willing to cooperate, both business and Congress. I can not reconcile myself to the great demand for lower wage scales, for I have never known any people to prosper where wages are low. Individuals can not buy unless they receive wages, and the pay envelope alone is the barometer. The wheels of industry will never move in this country to any great extent if our people only receive wages enough to make a living. It is when they are paid more than living wages that we move the wheels of industry, when the wage earner can buy some of the luxuries that go into the modern home, when he can have money for recreation, buy automobiles and run them, buy radios, electric refrigeration, and other conveniences that the Nation has to offer—it is then that we have a happy, contented people; it is then that business men prosper; and not until the wage earner receives an adequate pay envelope that will permit him to enjoy these luxuries can we hope to restore this country to its former era of prosperity; and not until then can business hope to prosper and business pay its obligations to the banks and others. Our people do not want charity; they want jobs. Women and little children suffer most; and it is our duty, at any cost, to see that there be as little suffering as possible.

I believe, as Members of Congress we have lacked courage to attack the cause for much of our present economic ills. Overproduction has caused millions to work part time or not work at all. Overproduction always brings underconsumption. One way to cure much of this evil is by shorter working days and weeks. I know many of our leaders in industry do not want to admit this, but I feel confident in the final analysis they will be compelled to adopt shorter working periods. Maybe mass production and too much labor-saving machinery in industry are the cause for much of our unemployment.

If this be true, then surely we should all have the courage to either discard many of these machines until we have these problems solved or then make the machine contribute to the support of those it has supplanted in industry.

I am afraid our industrial leaders do not realize the danger confronting the Nation and instead of looking toward Washington for help it is their duty to look into their own plants and see what contribution they can make toward putting men and women into industry. It may not be the most popular statement to make, but I am firm in my conviction that we will not emerge from our present difficulty if labor-saving machinery displaces human hands in industry. I am not opposed to labor-saving machinery. I know much of it is indispensable, but what I refer to is that machinery that can be eliminated temporarily until economic conditions will permit its use.

Here in Washington a few days ago, on public construction, I saw a steam shovel doing the work of many men, while those same men were standing on the side lines unemployed and not knowing what to do in order to care for themselves and their families. Let us have courage enough to face the facts and do the wise thing that will put our people to work.

Recently I was visited by a married lady who protested vigorously because in a recent act married women were to be dropped from Government pay rolls in preference to others. I learned that this lady and her husband and daughter were on the Government pay roll. Surely in this period of so much unrest and unemployment arrangements could be carried out to distribute the work not only in the Government but in private business as well.

I was shown the photograph of a family of five—father, mother, and three children—and the oldest girl of 11 was the only bread-winner in that family, and this child was selling paper flowers on the streets of one of our large cities to buy food for the others. This is not an exaggerated illustration of conditions but the true picture in many of our communities to-day, where millions of our people are unemployed and in bread lines.

As a people we are wise to immediately change these conditions, and unless we do change them, God alone knows what we are headed for.

I know we can change these conditions, but it is going to require the cooperation of all our people, and not a few only.

In my own business I found a machine doing the work that would require eight persons to do by hand. I set the machine aside and put the human hands to work. My product cost me a little more by reason of doing this, but I felt it my duty and my own contribution to that community, so that by my example I might urge others to do likewise. I saw one machine in a steel mill that was doing the work that required 36 people before its installation. The gentleman who showed me the machine was proud of that machine. I have since regretted that I did not point out to him the great danger in the elimination of those 36 pairs of hands.

It may be that shorter days and fewer working days per week may solve much of this problem, but if they do not, then let industry do the patriotic, courageous thing and forget the machine for the time being. The Department of Labor predicts that 13,000,000 of our people will be out of work next winter.

I hope they are mistaken; but, Mr. Speaker, if their estimate and prediction should prove correct, then surely I am not out of place or unwise in urging all of us to be deeply interested in an effort to correct many of these problems that now confront us.

I represent a district with almost 400 cigar manufacturers within its borders. These factories employ thousands of people and make their cigars by hand, with but one or two exceptions. Right now these factories are employing all their labor full time. If machines were to take the place of handwork, fully 50 per cent of these people would be unemployed. The manufacturers of cigars using machinery do not report much business, and the truth of the matter is that handmade cigars not only employ more people but are of much finer quality, sell better, and keep this business growing in my district, the only district in the United States to-day that shows an increased sale and demand for their product.

I believe this will apply to many other lines of industry, and I mention it only as evidence to support my previous statements.

We are now considering a relief bill, Mr. Speaker. I shall vote for such a bill because of the statements I hear from my colleagues, but I do not have much faith in its merits. I think it only a mere gesture and a poor palliative for the ills of our Nation. We have practically balanced our National Budget through the passage of the revenue bill, which I trust can be repealed very soon. It can be repealed when we get our people back to work; and while I objected to many of the unfair excise taxes in that bill, I supported it as my patriotic duty in preference to any sentiment I may have had.

Congress should adjourn as speedily as possible and pass no additional legislation that will bring additional burdens of taxation.

Confidence will be greatly restored among our people if we do this, and I sincerely trust that when we come back in December we will have many of our present ills solved.

HOOVER RELIEF BILL

Mr. POLK. Mr. Speaker, it is my belief that for the Government to borrow money to build public works for the sole purpose of providing employment is an economic fallacy. A few individuals will profit and a few people will be employed, but the interest and sinking-fund charges on the borrowed money only add to the tax burden, aggravate the situation, and postpone the return of prosperity.

It seems to me that the weight of taxation will be increased by the passage of this so-called relief bill, H. R. 9642, as amended, which the President has demanded that we pass before we adjourn.

I heartily agree with the provisions of this bill, which provide for the relief of destitution in the various States, and I wish we might have the opportunity of voting for that part of the bill separately from the other two titles.

However, I can not sanction with my vote the provisions of this bill which provide for an additional billion and a half dollars for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The past few months have shown that the funds of the corporation have gone largely to the railroads, the big banks, and other so-called big business interests. For example, it was recently reported that a former Vice President of the United States received $80,000,000 for his bank in Chicago while several smaller banks there were refused any money and consequently failed. Such favoritism is currently reported with reference to other loans, and secrecy has prevailed as to who has received benefits from these funds. I do not approve of the proposition to tax all of our people for the benefit of a few.

The provision in this bill appropriating money for public roads should have been broadened to make this money available for use on the country (dirt) roads. These roads, many of them traversed by rural mail routes, should have been provided for in this legislation. Those living on these unimproved township and county roads pay taxes just the same as do their brethren more fortunately situated. They have just as much right to demand Federal aid for their roads as do any others. Furthermore, work on such country roads could be largely done by hand labor and would provide employment for many who need the work very badly.

No farmer or small business man can get any material relief from this measure. It is practically as objectionable in this regard as was the original Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill. So long as Congress continues to pass such legislation, even though it is at the request and demand of the President, there is no hope of balancing the Federal Budget; there is no hope for lower Federal taxes.

Because this measure will produce an exceedingly heavy drain on the Treasury, with accompanying added tax burdens on all of our people for the benefit of only a few privileged interests, I have voted against it.

REDUCE TAX BURDEN BY COLLECTING EUROPEAN DEBTS AND COLLECTING UNPAID INCOME TAXES

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that two outstanding things should be brought to the attention of the taxpayers of the United States at this time. One thing, if care is not taken and our interests safeguarded, will add an additional $11,000,000,000 loss to the taxpayers of this country. The other concerns taxes running into the billions of dollars which have been refunded to the taxpayer and an additional $1,000,000,000 which is now unpaid. All of these income taxes which have been returned to the taxpayers and those which have not been collected from the taxpayer are almost 100 per cent from the large corporate interests and the special-privilege class of the United States. As I have just said, those two major things seem to be of tremendous importance to the masses of the people of the United States and need to be given careful attention. We should see in the first place that we do not cancel or scale down any of the indebtedness of the European governments to this country. We should see that the income-tax machinery of this country is properly tightened and the loopholes closed. We should see that all the income tax due our Government is collected. Income taxes should be paid just the same as we have to pay taxes on our farms, homes, automobiles, or whatever we happen to own. Both are the law and both should be collected without favor being shown.

WILL EUROPE REPUDIATE HER HONEST DEBTS TO THE UNITED STATES?

The first premise the countries of Europe, namely, the nations called the Allies, borrowed tremendous sums from the United States during and following the World War, all of which they faithfully agreed would be repaid dollar for dollar plus a reasonable rate of interest, the settlement to be made at the close of the hostilities.

However, when the war ended and peace was declared, these European nations were very slow in settling and they trumped up everything that they possibly could, asking for reduction and cancellation of various items. To obtain a peaceable settlement the United States deducted tremendous sums from our honest statements given to them. For instance, $2,000,000,000 worth of material, supplies, foods, clothing, railroad engines, and so forth, all of the highest quality, and could be sold to France only according to treaty. Accordingly, France named her price, which was 20 cents on the dollar, and she settled on this basis; but in settling she only agreed to pay 2⅛ per cent interest per annum and never to pay any of the principal. In fact, our entire account with France was settled on the basis of 50 cents on the dollar.

Other nations even settled more unsatisfactorily to us than France did. For instance, Italy settled at 27 cents on the dollar, paying 1⅛ per cent yearly; but never to pay the principal. All the European settlements were made on a small interest payment, but in no case did the interest amount to what we pay on our bonds, the money for which we loaned to Europe. Besides, the principal is never to be paid.

After all of this generosity by the United States there is yet due us of honest money from the various European nations a total of approximately $11,000,000,000, which they should pay dollar for dollar. I shall never lend my support to the cancellation of a single penny of that amount.

REPARATION VERSUS HONEST INDEBTEDNESS

The nations of Europe are constantly trying to muddy the waters in avoiding paying the money loaned to them. They are trying to set up fictitious reparations they have been collecting from Germany against real money we loaned Europe, and there is positively no connection whatever between the two. The reparations the Allies have been collecting from Germany were arbitrarily imposed by those countries on Germany. At the close of the war England, France, and Italy stripped Germany of her fleets, stripped her of her gold reserve, millions of dollars of her gilt-edge securities, and of her rich coal and ore mines, and so forth. The United States received nothing, neither did they ask for anything. Consequently there is no reason why the United States should cancel or even scale down the indebtedness of Europe.

CHARGES MADE AGAINST EXECUTIVE BRANCH OF GOVERNMENT

Many serious charges have been made against the present executive branch of the Government concerning these foreign debts. Many rumors are afloat in Europe and the United States concerning this. The Secretary of State, Mr. Stimson, and the White House spokesman have made statements recently that there is no authority for the charges that the representatives of our Government have been a party to any of these conferences. They deny that the United States would join in the movements toward cancellation or even scaling down of the indebtedness, and strongly protest that all of these charges are false. I have no right and would not attempt to say that the President or the Secretary of State would be a party to such moves. However, the press has so many times made statements to the effect that our Government would again discuss with Europe a debt settlement, which would mean further scaling down or cancellation, that it makes the people of this country very much concerned about the payments of these debts, which is money which belongs to the taxpayers of the United States. There also has been much concern in this country regarding statements supposed to have been made by the ambassador to the Court of St. James, Mr. Andrew Mellon, or from the White House, or from some member of the executive branch of the Government concerning the ability to pay, and that causes grave apprehension among the people of this country. Such statements, if made by them, should not have been made; and if they have not been made, the press is doing a great injustice to that branch of the Government by making such statements. A question, however, is raised as to why President Hoover, when Congress convened last December, wanted to continue the commission to further consider the European debts due the United States. Everyone knows only one result could follow further discussion of the debts, namely, scaling down or cancellation. Does not the President know that? Does not our ambassador, Mr. Mellon, know that? Sure they know it.

ABILITY TO PAY

The total payments due the United States yearly from Europe amounts to approximately $250,000,000. Those same nations are spending at this time at a rate of approximately $2,000,000,000 a year for preparations for war. By reducing this amount approximately one-eighth, they would save enough each year to pay us the amount due. Why should we be so forbearing with them, when by so doing we add that much additional taxes to our own people?

This Congress has rightfully been asked by the taxpayers of the country to reduce expenses in operating our Government. The taxpayers are right in their request. The expenses of this Government have been reduced approximately $800,000,000 this year, which is a reduction of almost 20 per cent of last year's operating expenses. There is room, at the next session of Congress, to make additional reductions running into hundreds of millions of dollars. If the nations of Europe would have reduced the expenses of their governments even 3 per cent, that reduction would have paid us the $250,000,000 which they owed us this year, and by not reducing, and not having paid us, it has caused that much additional tax to be placed on the taxpayers of this country. Let me ask you why we should be so generous to the nations of Europe, when we have so much distress and suffering in this country? Let us take care of our own hungry, jobless, and suffering people first.

THE PEOPLE SHOULD RISE AGAINST CANCELLATION OR SCALING DOWN

The people of this country should rise en masse against any scaling down whatever and against any cancellation of a single dollar of this indebtedness. When you talk of the ability to pay of the European countries, that is nothing more nor less than subterfuge. They have our money, and they are keeping it. They could pay if they would do as we are doing, by reducing the expenses of their governments, establish a policy of being honest, and making their word good. If they want their credit ruined, if they want to put themselves in a position where they would no longer have credit with the greatest Nation on the earth, the United States, then let them refuse to pay what they owe, and take the stigma. They will not do that on a show-down. They can not afford to. They are jockeying us into a position so that we will be a big-hearted brother to them at the expense of our own people.

SHALL WE HIRE EUROPE TO DISARM?

This talk of hiring Europe to disarm, that we cancel what they owe us if they would disarm, is foolhardy, cowardly, and lacking in statesmanship. It is unreasonable and should not be tolerated by the United States. We tried elimination of armaments at the close of the World War with those nations, and we got the dirty end of it, and that should be a lesson to us. It sounds like giving a child a sugar teat to keep it from crying instead of giving it a good spanking. I am of the opinion that if we made a contract like this with them, it would be like their agreement to disarm or reduce armaments at the close of the World War. We can not trust them, and why should we? Why longer be conciliatory? Why not take a positive stand, tell Europe frankly and plainly to settle their own differences as they choose, but for us there will positively be no further reduction, extension of time, or cancellation.

INTERNATIONAL BANKERS

Neither can we trust the international bankers who, if they had their way, would cancel every dollar of the money that the European countries owe us, so that they could quickly realize on the money they have loaned to European countries. The big interests have already defrauded the people of the United States out of hundreds of millions of dollars by selling them worthless bonds, such as the Kreuger bonds, and $300,000,000 of Chilean bonds which are now worth $15,000,000 or less. Why should we longer be led by those leeches and grafters? It should be seen to, that not one dollar of these European debts are reduced or canceled and that payments should be resumed when the next payment falls due. The dealings of the international bankers, the stock-market shady dealings, the selling of practically worthless securities to the people of the United States, should be thoroughly aired, and whenever and wherever traitors to the citizens and the Government are found they should be properly and summarily dealt with. Those favored special-interest groups are largely responsible for this deflation period which has caused this panic, which resulted in untold suffering and misery. It has also caused millions of people to lose all they have.

SECOND MAJOR ISSUE

The next thing I desire to call your attention to, and in which the taxpayers of this country are particularly interested, and which should be brought to their attention, is the income tax. The income tax is a fair tax, because it is based on the ability to pay. One of the major troubles and one that adds greatly to the distress of the people of our country to-day—the farmer, home owner, small merchant, and, in fact, the great bulk of the common people—is the high taxes which they are compelled to pay. The person of small means, whether he makes a bare living or not, is compelled to pay very high taxes, which is unjust and unfair. The farmer is taxed until he can not make a living and his farm is sold for taxes. The income tax is a fair tax because it is based on the net profits. Its burden falls most heavily on those best able to pay because it takes on a part of the year's accumulations of net profits. The income taxpayers are ones who even in these hard times are adding to their fortunes, while a heavy tax on the masses, particularly in times like these, is taking from them the small bit which they may have accumulated in years gone by to provide a home for themselves and family in their declining years.

CAPITAL NECESSARY

We need capital and must have it, but capital must never be allowed to exploit labor. The farmer must never be permitted to be ground to powder by capital. The chain stores should be so regulated that they would not have any unfair advantages over the small merchant. While capital is needed and is a necessary part of the Government and country, yet it must be regulated. Capital throughout the known world has sought to get the wealth of the people into its hands, and that is what is happening in this country.

There has been the greatest centralization of wealth in the last 10 years in the United States that has ever been known in the history of the world, and this program must be changed if this country is to continue to be a great Nation. The capitalistic class of the country does not like the income tax law. They do not want their large holdings disturbed, and that causes false statements to be made by them and by their proponents—such as "the tax destroys their fortunes" and "is making it impossible for them to give employment to labor"—all of which are misstatements of facts. The great accumulations we now have have been made in the last 10 years by the big interests, while millions are walking the streets and highways hungry and in rags. During this time income-tax rates have been low; so why the unemployment? These big interests would have you believe their statements; however, no one who will give an honest thought to this can believe such misstatements as facts. The only fair thing to do is to relieve the burden of taxation from the masses and place it on those who are able to pay. The history of other nations, a number of which have fallen and have gone into the discard, shows that when the resources of a nation become centralized the big interests start unloading the tax burden onto the masses. That is just what is happening in our country to-day. They would entirely discard the income tax, estate tax, and so forth, and instead they would place a sales tax on the masses which would place an additional burden on the common people, and in doing so would permit the special-privilege class of this country to further enrich themselves. Between the years of 1922 and 1930 the sum of $3,370,000,000 were returned to the big income-tax payers of this country.

ONE BILLION DOLLARS IN INCOME TAX NOW DUE THE UNITED STATES

There is to-day unpaid and due the Government $1,000,000,000 of income tax which is being contested. Two hundred and seventy million dollars of this has finally been determined, assessed to the taxpayers, and should be collected. The Treasury Department up to date has given no reason why these taxes should not be collected. Recently certain charges were made by a Member of Congress of gross irregularities in the Treasury Department of the Government. Accordingly, there were hearings before the Rules Committee. One hearing was held on July 9 and one on July 11, when severe charges were made by a Republican Member of Congress and also by a Democrat Member of Congress. I appeared at this hearing on July 11, and was heard by the committee. I did not make any charges of irregularities, but stated matters of facts concerning the $1,000,000,000 of income tax which is not collected. I put into the RECORD that I had written to the Treasury Department on June 20 and again on July 6 asking for information concerning the progress that was being made toward the collection of this tax, and up to date neither of my letters has been answered, but they will be answered and I will not relent until they do answer me. I stated at the hearing that I wanted to know the facts and I want the people of the country to know why this $1,000,000,000 has not been collected. I set out how other taxpayers are compelled to accompany their tax returns with their check for all of their tax, or one-half of it, or one-fourth of it. And even though the amount is not correct, they must pay promptly on the date due. The people of this country are entitled to know why this money has not been collected, and particularly so when such strenuous efforts have been made for months to balance the Budget, both by a tax bill and by an economy program.

As I stated above, the people have a right to know why this billion dollars in income tax has not been collected. If there is no graft or corruption—and I am not charging that there is any—then the people of the country would be satisfied. If there is graft and corruption, or even favoritism being shown, it should be exposed and corrected.

The Treasury Department, which handles all of the finances of the Federal Government, is never investigated. It seems to me, to clear up the temper and feelings of the country, that the department should welcome an investigation into these matters. It is well that they should welcome such an investigation, because it will be had soon. If the returns of income tax to the big interests of the country are found to be just and honestly due them, I, for one, would want to see every dollar that is due them returned to them. But if this money was illegally returned, then those responsible should suffer the consequences of their misdeeds. On the $1,000,000,000 that is uncollected, the machinery should be speeded up. At the rate they are canvassing these returns it will take six years yet to go over them, and in that time many more hundreds of millions will be accumulated and unpaid.

I have been informed that $10,000,000 a month of those taxes in question were gone over, and at that rate it will take six years yet to go over all the amount in question. An investigation of the department would be a most wholesome thing. It would show conditions as they really are, and not only that but the department would entirely clear itself in the eyes of the people of the country. I consider this matter on the same basis as examining a bank. We do it because it is business, and the examiner does not do his work because he is likely to find fraud, graft, and so forth, but it is done to see that the bank is being properly conducted and to help stop leaks, thus giving the satisfaction to the people which they desire.

There must be nothing left undone to reduce the extremely heavy tax burdens of the people of this country. I will do everything I possibly can to assist.

COME, LET US REASON TOGETHER

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, much is being said these days relative to the depression through which this Nation, in common with the other nations of the world, is passing. Unfortunately, many are attempting to capitalize human misery for political purposes.

The Democratic Party hopes in this campaign to emerge victorious, not because of their constructive program, if any, which they have to offer, but because of the unrest found throughout the Nation. Running true to form, that party is playing the rôle of critic. They are, of course, experts at this, having acquired the habit during the long years they have been out of power.

Times are peculiar. America to-day is in the midst of a great abundance of food, millions of willing and skilled workers, has a great transportation system, and, in fact, everything needed for material prosperity. In the face of these conditions, however, we have unemployment, depression, and lack of confidence. Politically men are inclined to blame all of the economic ills to the party in power. Fortunately many of the leaders of the Democratic Party have stated repeatedly on the floor of the House and Senate that probably no one is to blame for these conditions.

Depressions have occurred many times during the last hundred years in the United States. Our people in the past have met these depressions heroically, just as we will meet this one. I am sure that, notwithstanding the adverse conditions of to-day, this is not the worst depression in all respects through which America has passed.

We need more of the spirit of our pioneer forefathers. The difficulties of their to-days to them were the stepping-stones of success of their to-morrows. They believed in the future. We need to cultivate the idea of optimism, of faith in our country, of belief in our fellow men and trust in the God of nations.

To show how other periods of depression were met let me cite the following. On October 18, 1857, there appeared an article in Harper's Weekly, of which the following is an excerpt:

> It is a solemn moment and no man can feel an indifference (which, happily, no man pretends to feel) in the issue of events. Of our own troubles, no man can see the end. They are, fortunately, as yet mainly commercial; and if we are only to lose money, and by painful poverty to be taught wisdom—the wisdom of honor, of faith. of sympathy and charity—no man need seriously to despair.

Indeed, those were troubled days, seemingly devoid of hope and the future clouded in uncertainty. The pall of depression seemed to obscure every ray of a prospect of better times. And yet the greatest strides in the progress and wealth of this country have been made in the 74 years since that time.

Those words are especially applicable to our day. No single law which Congress can pass will bring this country out of the depression. Courage and determination and ability on the part of the American people to profit by the lessons of the past will be the greatest contributing factor to our recovery.

I am not a follower of the belief that good times will follow the waving of a magic wand. Good times can only come and remain when built upon sound governmental policies based upon fundamental and true economic law. It may be well, therefore, for us to look at some of the political aspects of the situation. I am not afraid that the Hoover administration will be discredited by the thinking people of the United States. They know too well that President Hoover has offered more constructive suggestions in this time of depression than any other President of the United States during similar times. When the economic storm clouds gathered in 1929, with almost prophetic vision, he saw what was coming and immediately began to prepare for the storm. First he called together the captains of industry and asked them to carry on without reducing wages of their employees. He knew well then, and has taken a consistent course since, that prosperity should not be returned at the expense of the workers. A prosperous and happy Nation can only be had when the working classes are happy and prosperous.

The President's next step was to call together the labor leaders. He asked them to carry on without strikes or riots which heretofore have characterized such periods of depression in the United States. Be it said, to their everlasting credit, the labor leaders not only agreed to the proposition but have lived up to that agreement. Never before has this country seen the peace and tranquillity during a period of depression that has been witnessed during the last three years.

The lack of confidence gripped the hearts of the American people. President Hoover saw that the national credit base must be broadened. At his suggestion the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was created. Its work has brought new hope to every section of the United States. Bank failures have almost ceased. It has brought billions of dollars from hiding and this money is being turned into the legitimate channels of trade and commerce. Agriculture and farm loans have been made available and many a farm has been saved to its owner. I need not mention all of the bills for the relief of credit which have been passed. Every field of credit has been strengthened and broadened except that to the States and municipalities. If they, the Democrats, propose to do that they will bankrupt the United States. Are they going to get a chance to do it? The answer is emphatically "no."

We have passed through a bad period, the causes of which can largely be traced to the World War. You can not destroy upward of $200,000,000,000 and millions of lives without paying a terrible penalty for it.

There are still fundamental readjustments which must be made. We must direct our attention to the solution of the basic problems of agriculture, as this is the basis of prosperity in this country and we can never have permanent prosperity until better distribution is worked out. The credit and monetary base of the Nation must be broadened.

My personal belief is that the use of silver to broaden our monetary and credit base is the one of the first logical things to be done. The Republican Party recognizes the silver problem and takes the stand that it must be considered as a money. The Democratic platform deals with silver as a commodity. These two positions are as far apart as the poles. The Republican policy is the correct one. We stand for a sound monetary system. There is no thought of leaving the gold standard, but I do believe that silver is the logical metal to be used in supplementing the gold standard base. I have no doubt that the forthcoming international conference will give silver a monetary status. If it does, it will be one of the greatest economic achievements of the age.

In the working out of these problems great care must be exercised. We appeal to the thoughtful voter in the coming campaign and ask in deep sincerity, if you insist on making a change where will you go?

I ask you to view the record of the present House of Representatives under Democratic leadership. What constructive legislation has been passed or even suggested by the leaders of the Democratic Party? Is it not a fact that every constructive measure put forward for the relief of this country has come from the Republican leadership or the President of the United States? If that is so, will you turn to the Democratic Party? Mr. Worker, where will you turn? Will you turn to the party which declares that all tariffs must be revised downward? They make no distinction. It is only fair to infer that every schedule will be lowered.

The Republicans have repeatedly during this session of Congress tried to get the Democratic leaders to say which rates and what schedules were too high. Their only reply has been that "the tariff rates are too high; we favor a competitive tariff."

That means, Mr. Worker, that the tariff on the items which you produce will be lowered to compel you to compete with foreign laborers.

The Democrats are pledged to a competitive tariff for revenue only. Their concern is not to protect you. It is to levy a tariff for revenue. That is the only logical deduction which can be made from their platform.

Mr. Stockman, if you are inclined to say we need a change and that conditions can not be worse, let me ask you to consider what the change would involve. It would mean the removal of your protection and the placing of your goods in competition with the growers of the world except and in so far as the demands of revenue would require otherwise. I ask you to earnestly consider the question. Do you think it could be worse? Do you want to change now at a time when we are on the upgrade and prices are rising?

Mr. Farmer, do you want the tariff on your products levied only with the idea of revenue? Do you think that it would be better or worse to turn from the party which has made this Nation the greatest in the world just because the aftermath of a World War is upon us, and because we are suffering from an evil from which we could not escape? Where will you turn if you leave? Can you afford to order seasoned generals and soldiers to the rear ranks and leave your future destiny in the hands of either raw recruits or in the hands of those who have been tried and found wanting? It is the Republican Party and its policies which have brought this country to its present high level.

Mr. Manufacturer, where are you going to turn? Are you in favor of a competitive tariff for revenue, whatever that may mean to you? You have been one of the greatest assets this country has ever known. You have brought happiness and contentment to millions of homes in the past. We have relied upon you because your lines of industry embrace the direct benefits of the beneficent policies of the Republican Party. Now, when the war against depression is on and when, in spite of the opposition, the tide of the battle is turning, are you going to desert the general who with fortitude, patience, and yet with courage and with vigor and ability has met the onslaught of the enemy so successfully? If you change, to whom will you go?

Every thinking person in the United States knows that tariff revision is always accompanied by business uncertainty. The Democratic Party is pledged to a revision of the tariff downward. If that party is intrusted again to power, they will be duty bound to immediately carry out this pledge. No sane person would say that this does not mean continued uncertainty and lack of confidence in the business world. The passage of a new tariff bill takes months in both Houses of Congress. Surely the thoughtful citizens of the United States will not vote for such a program when it means ruin and continued depression.

Further, thoughtful men everywhere are alarmed at the prospects of the promised leadership of this Nation if the Democratic Party is victorious. Some of the most radical men in public life to-day assumed the leadership at the Democratic convention in Chicago of the movement to nominate Governor Roosevelt. For three days those men practically supplanted Mr. Farley. They were Governor Roosevelt's spokesmen and managers. Surely no man will argue that these men will not have a large voice in shaping the policies if the Democratic Party is intrusted the power. Does any honest voter to-day believe that economic conditions favor the changing of competent, experienced leaders in Government for men of the type who controlled and directed Governor Roosevelt's campaign in Chicago?

This is not said in personal criticism of those men. It is meant to challenge the attention of thoughtful men and women everywhere to the possibilities of what may follow if Governor Roosevelt is elected President of the United States, and this at a time when economic ills are righting themselves and the Government of the United States safely emerging from one of its greatest economic crises. Mr. Voter, the responsibility of a decision is upon you. No greater civil responsibility can ever come to a free people. "Come, let us reason together." Things can be worse; yes, they will be worse if the Democrats are successful this fall. With consummate skill President Hoover has guided and is guiding this Nation through a perilous period. Let every citizen rally to his support and he will lead us back to peace, prosperity, and good will. I ask you to compare the sane, constructive measures suggested by President Hoover with the fanciful, impractical, and uncharted course suggested by the Speaker and the Democratic leaders in the House of Representatives during the present session of this Congress.

After you have done this, and in the spirit of the patriot who fights to save his beloved country, I ask you to go to the ballot box to perform the highest and most sacred duty that can come to any nation. If you will do this, I feel confident the Republican Party will fare well at your hands.

GENERAL RELIEF AND LOANS TO THE FARM BOARD AND SUBSIDIARIES

Mr. HART. Mr. Speaker, I will be unable to vote for the conference report on H. R. 9642, the so-called relief bill. Under the guise of furnishing relief this bill authorizes the spending of over $6,000,000 at military posts, air ports, and so forth, for construction that otherwise would not take place and which will, in all probability, be little better than wasted. However, my main reason for voting against this bill is that it contains under Title II, section 5, subsection (d), the following language:

> In order that the surpluses of agricultural products which have accumulated in public and private warehouses and elevators may not have a depressing effect upon current prices of such products, the corporation is authorized and directed to make loans under this section, in such amounts as may in its judgment be necessary for the purpose of financing sales of such surpluses in the markets of foreign countries in which such sales can not be financed in the normal course of commerce; but no such sales shall be financed by the corporation if, in its judgment, such sales will affect adversely the world markets for such products.

It is my judgment, and the record will bear me out, that there are no such export markets as are described in this language. The assumption, after reading the above clause providing for the financing of agricultural products for export, is that there is some virgin territory that has not been exploited in the sale of farm products. This is a fallacy. The sale of farm products has already been injured by the discussion of such loans to the Federal Farm Board or to the Secretary of Agriculture. Bills have been introduced by six or seven of our Republican brethren for the purpose of obtaining up to $100,000,000 additional funds for the Federal Farm Board. Some of these bills provide that the fund is for the Secretary of Agriculture, but in the Senate, under questioning, those interested in the bill admitted that the money was intended really for the Federal Farm Board but that its reputation is such they feared the bill would not pass if the money was to be turned over directly to the Farm Board.

That there is no opportunity of exporting grain or cotton on credit without damaging cash markets is a well-known fact to those engaged in the selling of grain and cotton for export. It is also well known to the Federal Farm Board, which is asking for this money. To prove this statement I quote from the testimony of James C. Stone, chairman of the Federal Farm Board, on July 6, 1932, before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations. The testimony is as follows:

> Mr. WOOD. Are you selling any wheat now to foreign countries?
> Mr. STONE. Some. The demand was very good in the export trade during April, May, and June.
> Mr. WOOD. Are we making any special effort to sell our wheat abroad?
> Mr. STONE. It has been unwise, Mr. WOOD, in my opinion, to try to push the sale above the normal demand, but we have been doing everything we could to sell in the normal channels of trade in export and have been quite successful with it.

At the same time Mr. Stone was giving this testimony efforts were being made by administration lobbyists to obtain from forty to one hundred million dollars for the very purpose that Mr. Stone advised this committee it would be unwise to pursue.

If the money provided under Title II of the conference report is not to be used for export of surplus products, the question arises, What is it to be used for? If one were to look at the election returns in the grain States in 1930, when wheat was pegged at Chicago by the Farm Board and their subsidiaries, you can readily appreciate that the administration was aware of the value of putting these prices up temporarily before election. It matters not to them that it costs some millions to the taxpayers to win an election, nor does it matter to them that the after result is disastrous to the farmers themselves.

Further proof that the intention of these who have been endeavoring to obtain this appropriation, under the guise of exporting surpluses, are not sincere, is the fact that they permitted an amendment, without opposition in the Senate, prohibiting the use of the money which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may loan under Title II for the sale of cotton for export. When you take into consideration that the greatest farm surplus we have in this country is cotton and not wheat, this amendment becomes more significant. Farm Board stocks of wheat have been reduced to about 30,000,000 bushels and surely they do not need $100,000,000 that they have asked for to export 30,000,000 bushels of wheat which is worth less than 50 cents a bushel. Just figure it out for yourselves, 30,000,000 bushels at 50 cents is only $15,000,000.

Now, the stabilization program has been declared a failure even by the friends of the Farm Board, and the Farm Board itself has announced they will carry on no more stabilization operations. Therefore, they must work some other scheme, under a different name, to put these prices up before election. I here want to warn my Democratic friends in the grain States that they want to keep their eye on the operations of the Federal Farm Board and their subsidiaries and find out just how much money is loaned them by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation just prior to election.

I predict that they will establish an export bureau under the guise of exporting farm products. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation will loan the Farm Board, or some of its subsidiaries, sufficient money to buy up exportable surpluses of the new-crop wheat, which at present prices would not take to exceed $150,000,000. They will then dump this wheat for worthless paper in Europe and in Asia, which, of course, will bar the exports of other nations because they can not afford to give their wheat away.

It is apparent that those who were responsible for the language in Title II intended that they should sell this wheat and take worthless paper, because that is the only kind of a loan which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to make without adequate security.

Removing this surplus from the market at a cost of $150,000,000 will undoubtedly cause a sharp rise in grain prices and the Farm Board and the administration will take the credit for it, and it is barely possible that the voter will give them credit and support the administration.

This is no permanent relief. If we decide, as a sound farm policy, that we will buy the exportable surplus each year and give it away in Europe, let us do so, but let us not permit a bunch of political buccaneers to fool the public. If one can believe what he reads, the esteemed gentleman in the White House was too smart even for the "wily Chinee," and I warn you, my Democratic friends of the grain States, what this gentleman is preparing for you.

In this connection I want to call your attention to an announcement made in Chicago by Mr. Huff, former small-town Kansas preacher, who is at the head of the Farmers' National Grain Co., that he is funding his debt of $16,000,000 for a 10-year period with the Farm Board.

I want also to call your attention to the fact that the control of this organization is not with the farmers but with four or five gentlemen who sit in the Farmers' National Grain office at Chicago. This corporation is organized under the trust laws of Delaware, and not under the Capper-Volstead Act. Here are five or six adventurers who have succeeded in obtaining $78,000 from farm cooperatives, and with that small nucleus are funding a debt from a Government agency, on a 10-year period, for $16,000,000.

When it is so easy to get money out of the Federal Treasury, why does anyone go into legitimate business? Just look at the picture—paid-in capital, $78,000; loans over a 10-year period, without security, $16,000,000. Did you ever hear of J. Rufus Wallingford? While we are cutting salaries and endeavoring to reduce the expenses of the Government, here we permit a few adventurers to loot the Treasury for $16,000,000.

With the facts as I have stated them staring me in the face, I can not vote for this conference report; therefore, my vote will be "no."

SELFISHNESS

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, more than ever before this country is suffering from the selfishness of the individual and the lack of real patriotism. Entirely too often the individual desires to become a bank director or president, a corporation counsel, or public official, not to serve others but in order to gain money unto himself. Officials and attorneys of corporations and men in public life who use their position to fleece those they represent and the public of thousands of dollars are hailed as astute business men and too often are lauded because of the large amount of money they call theirs instead of condemned for their method of obtaining it.

These men often become strong not only financially but politically, and are elevated to additional positions of trust, where they are further intrusted with the vital affairs of their fellow men. And finally we find in the Nation's Capital entirely too many men in high authority whose first and greatest interest is selfish in the extreme. Their chiefest concern is whether or not they will gain politically, socially, or financially. The welfare of the public is last with many, and is considered only as a means of accomplishing their own selfish purpose.

Let me say just here that it is my firm belief that most Members of Congress and other public officials are honest with themselves and with the public. I am sure this is equally true of people holding positions of trust in private life. Just as the officers of a ship ofttimes sacrifice their own lives in order to save their passengers, so thousands upon thousands of good men have sacrificed their own property, and even their lives, in an effort to save those who have intrusted to them their financial all.

I do criticize, and I am sure the public condemns, those, though, who, occupying a position of either private or public trust, are willing—like pirates of old—for a few shekels of silver to scuttle even the very ship entrusted to their care, and when she goes down—amid the suffering and dying—help plunder the wreckage.

Mr. Speaker, we are in the midst of the most serious problems ever presented to mortal men. We are face to face with the greatest depression the world ever saw, all because of the selfishness of man and the mania of those in authority for more and yet more political and financial power. In times like these let the prayer of our Nation be—

God give us men. The time demands
Strong minds, great hearts, true faith, and ruling hands;
Men whom the lust of office does not kill;
Men whom the spoils of office can not buy;
Men who possess opinions and a will;
Men who have honor; men who will not die;
Men who can stand before a demagogue
And damn his treacherous flatteries without winking;
Tall men, sun crowned, who live above the fog
In public duty and in private thinking!
For while the rabble with their thumb-worn creeds,
Their large professions, and their little deeds
Mingle in selfish strife; Lo! freedom weeps!
Wrong rules the land, and waiting justice sleeps!

SOUND MONEY VERSUS INFLATION

Mr. EVANS of California. Mr. Speaker, the financial crisis which began in the fall of 1929 and was followed by a world economic depression is attributed by many chiefly to alleged defects of the gold standard. A review of the circumstances precedent to and accompanying the several economic depressions through which this country has passed will indicate that on each occasion strong feeling has been built up to the effect that our economic crises have been due largely to an unbalanced condition in our financial structure.

This has been traditionally a sound-money country, based on the gold standard. When economic conditions become disturbed, attendant with the loss of private fortunes, great reductions in private incomes, with unfavorable trade balances with foreign countries, criticism is made of our money system, with urgent demands for more liberality in the direction of inflation of commodity values and reduction or deflation of currency values. In other words, the claim is that there is not enough money in circulation in proportion to our commodity values and that to offset this discrepancy new issues of fiat money must be forced into circulation.

This tendency on the part of our people has, on several occasions, brought us near the point of breaking away from the gold standard. For example, in 1890 this country was at a very low ebb commercially and economically. Prices were low and markets demoralized, factories were closed, and industry was generally paralyzed.

The Republicans in Congress were desirous of enacting a new tariff measure. The bimetallists controlled the Senate and were eager for the reestablishment of the double money standard. Neither a tariff nor a free silver act could be adopted without a compromise being effected between these two contending factions. By compromise they agreed to a proposition that was as close as possible to free silver, with the understanding that the bimetallists would vote for the McKinley tariff bill.

As a result of this compromise both measures were passed. The silver purchasing act became law on July 14, 1890, and authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to buy 4,500,000 ounces of silver bullion per month at the market price and to pay for it in Treasury notes, which were endowed with full legal-tender powers. The Treasury notes were promises of the Government to pay the full face value of the notes on demand in coin—that is, either in gold or silver. The silver purchased monthly was to be minted into dollars and used to redeem the Treasury notes.

Approximately 156,000,000 of Treasury (silver) notes were placed in circulation before the law was repealed in 1893.

The low duties of the McKinley Tariff Act of 1890 impaired the national income of the Government; the silver act compelled the Secretary of the Treasury to pay a considerable sum each year for silver bullion; the Congress increased the appropriations for pensions. The Government thus had to meet an increase of about $100,000,000 in new expenditures with a decreased income. In 1892 affairs began to take on a serious aspect. The United States lost its gold because of an unfavorable balance of trade. Certain countries apprehended that this Nation might go off a gold basis, and this caused them to dump their holdings of securities on our markets. The confidence of the people of the United States had been greatly shaken by the events of the two years immediately preceding, and a panic broke out in June, 1893.

By December of that year 158 national banks, 172 State banks, 177 private banks, 47 savings banks, 13 loan and trust companies, and 6 mortgage companies had failed. In 1893, 15,242 commercial firms became bankrupt. In 1894, 156 railroads went into the hands of receivers; unemployment, distress, and labor troubles were present on all sides.

There were several contributing factors to the depression of 1890 to 1893, but it will probably be conceded that the silver purchasing act, by crippling confidence in our money system, was one of the main causes of the panic, and this was undoubtedly the nearest approach this country has ever made toward going off the gold standard.

The free-silver campaign of 1896 failed because the shades of disaster which had so recently befallen the people as a result of tinkering with the gold standard in 1890 were vividly before them.

This tendency is further very vitally illustrated in the proposed soldier bonus bill that was before the last Congress. Aside from its importance to the holders of the veterans' certificates, that measure involved a far more important principle than the amount of money that it would have taken from the Treasury to meet the demands of the legislation. The sponsors of the bill recognized that there was no money in the United States Treasury with which to meet the payment of $2,423,000,000 to the veterans, but that, on the contrary, there was a present deficit in the Treasury of approximately $2,800,000,000, and that the daily income of the Government at the time the bill was pending before Congress was about $7,500,000 less than the daily expenses of the Government.

The advocates of the bill also recognized that in order to meet this accumulating deficit drastic increases of taxes were necessary and had been enacted by the Congress, and this all in the face of one of the most drastic business and economic depressions that has ever struck the country, when private incomes were tremendously reduced and the income of the Government from all sources was less than one-half of what it is in normal times. But the solution of all these difficulties offered by the sponsors of the bonus bill was to start the printing presses of the Government running to print a sufficient amount of fiat money—paper money with merely the Government stamp upon it—with which to meet the payment of nearly $2,500,000,000.

Their claim is that such issue of currency would have no detrimental effect on our financial structure, would stimulate business by increasing the amount of money in circulation, and at once restore good times. With this view, however, every well-known financial expert of the United States of whose views the Ways and Means Committee was able to avail itself, disagreed. These financial experts of all political shades of opinion unanimously agreed and so advised the committee and Congress that such a wild, irresponsible, and unprecedented example of financial heresy would in all probability undermine our financial structure, shove us off the gold standard, and further cripple our economic conditions to the extent that it would take years for recovery.

The proponents of the legislation urged, as a primary justification for its enactment, that aside from paying the soldiers' bonus, which is not due until 1945, it was a wise and sound means of inflating our currency, and that, regardless of the amount of gold which is held in reserve as a basis of security of currency in circulation, the distribution of $2,500,000,000 would have no tendency to depreciate our money values. In other words, that the Government could go ahead, print, and place in circulation nearly $2,500,000,000 in brand-new money, and that when so placed in circulation each and every one of those new dollars would have the same value as the money that was in circulation before.

Let us revert for a moment to the opinions of our recognized financial experts of the country regarding this suggestion for the sudden inflation of our currency. Prof. Edward Walter Kemmerer, research professor of international finance for Princeton University, author of the financial systems of more than a dozen foreign countries and currency and banking expert for the Dawes commission, testifying before the Ways and Means Committee a few months ago—referring to the bonus bill and the general subject of inflating the currency—said:

> The immediate result of the passage of such a measure, or even of its anticipated passage, would be a blow to the little financial confidence that is left on the part of the people and also of the confidence abroad in America's gold standard. * * * The increased hoarding, the flight of gold and of capital, and the general psychology of fear that such a measure would create would probably soon break down the gold standard through excessive withdrawals of gold, and, when once that standard was broken down, increased paper-money inflation would almost certainly follow, as it has in every such instance I know of in the past. * * * In general, it is my judgment that the enactment at this time of the bill (Patman bonus bill) would be little less than a national calamity. * * * I think that if we issue $2,500,000,000 of currency now it would be almost certain that we would go off the gold standard. * * * If we once go off the gold standard, we will have all the disadvantages of a nonmetallic paper-money currency standard. That is the kind that England now has. * * * However, the minute you break from gold it is very difficult to stop—that is, when you have been on the gold basis and are forced off of it, the power of your resistance is greatly weakened. If you issue $2,500,000,000 and then go off the gold basis, why not issue $2,000,000,000 more for the farmers—for this class and the other class? * * * I was in Germany with the Dawes committee, and the first day I was there I went into the hotel to buy a cigar. I gave them a renten-mark, which was worth 24 cents in American money, and they gave me a 12-cent cigar, and I received as my change 500,000,000,000 marks for the other 12 cents. Now, shortly before that, when they were issuing this paper money so rapidly in Germany, the minute anyone got any money he rushed to the stores to buy; if you held it an hour it would fade in your hands, and when you expected it was going to drop you got rid of it, and you got rid of it for anything you could buy.

Gen. Charles G. Dawes, one of our country's recognized financiers, a man who has had international experience in financial affairs, stated before the same committee on the same subject matter, among other things, as follows:

It would be in effect an issue of fiat currency. Such an issue of currency, in my judgment, would have a disastrous effect upon the country's currency system, upon the credit of the Federal Government, and upon the entire credit structure of our country. The claim is made that the issue of this currency would so augment our money supply as to relieve the existing pressure upon debtors, expand credits, and add to the purchasing power of the people. In my judgment the important and real effect would be to the contrary. * * * One need but recall what happened to Germany through the inflation of the German mark currency in the few years ending in 1924. All the arguments which are now made for this proposed issue of fiat money were made by those who at first advocated the increase in German mark currency which finally prostrated the credit and business of that country by 1924 with untold suffering, privation, and want on the part of all classes of the German people. Always in such experiments the idea at first is that we can go safely a little way in defiance of right economic principle and avoid disastrous penalties by stopping in time. This has proved a delusion. Inflation of currency, once started in a country, seldom stops short of its complete economic ruin.

The same sort of testimony was given before the Committee on Ways and Means by Prof. Irving Fisher, economic adviser and financial expert of Yale University, by Owen D. Young, internationally known financial expert and recognized throughout the leading countries of the world as such, and in fact, as above stated, by every recognized authority of this country.

It is fundamental that the value and integrity of our currency are based on the proportionate amount of gold we have in reserve which, with the credit of the country, is the only guaranty the currency has as to its value. Gold is the basic guaranty of the currency system of every country that stands on the gold standard, and is the major factor of value in those countries which are not strictly on a gold-standard basis. Some 20 European countries have within the past year and a half gone off the gold standard, and the value of their currency has dropped from 25 per cent to 34 per cent by reason of their going off the gold basis. Most of these countries have at other times in the past gone off the gold standard temporarily, and have on each occasion returned to gold and will undoubtedly again return to the gold standard.

The world stock of monetary gold in the hands of central banks and governments is at this time approximately $11,500,000,000. Of this amount we have in this country a little over $4,000,000,000, or about 35 per cent; France has approximately $3,000,000,000, or about 26 per cent; and the rest of the world has the balance, or about 39 per cent of the total. These figures vary slightly from year to year.

The complaint is general that we have not enough money in circulation and that commodity prices are entirely out of harmony with currency values; that money has gone into hiding.

The facts are that with business depression and confidence lacking the funds in many parts of the country have piled up in the banks. Savings deposits and other time deposits are large. Hoarded money is still estimated at high figures. Wholesale commodity prices were 32 per cent lower in March of 1932 than three years before, while the index of the country's physical production was about 25 per cent less, the amount of money officially reported as in circulation was about 15 per cent more and basic deposits were only 16 per cent less.

The trouble is that the people who have the money, the bank deposits, and the bank credits are afraid to use them. Money in circulation is turning over very slowly. The average rate at which our demand bank deposits turned over in 140 leading cities in the United States, exclusive of New York City, declined, in round figures, from 42 for the year 1929, to 29 for the year 1931, a decline of 47 per cent.

Doctor Kemmerer, heretofore referred to and quoted, discussing this particular phase of the economic situation recently said—

Under such circumstances, a complaint that we have not enough money in circulation is analogous to a complaint that a country was suffering from a lack of freight-car facilities at a time when the amount of freight to be carried was something like a fourth less than normal, when the number of freight cars was about a sixth greater than normal, the average speed at which the cars were moving was very much slower than usual and when a large percentage of the cars were being continually parked on the sidings.

Doctor Kemmerer continues his discussion of this feature as follows:

If the world is not experiencing an enduring shortage of monetary gold, and if I am correct in maintaining that the recent heavy decline in the commodity price level is due chiefly to psychological factors and to economic maladjustments of a temporary character, we may expect that, within a short time, the fundamental forces which make for a fairly uniform rate of secular economic growth in the world as a whole will again dominate the situation. In that case, if the world continues to use the gold standard, as I believe it will, the commodity price level will probably rise to something like what it was during the 8½-year period of comparatively stable wholesale prices which ended with the stock-market crash of late 1929. * * * The great fundamental forces which determine the long-time swings in the world's price levels have not been greatly changed during recent years. The world's population and the distribution of this population are practically unchanged. Human tastes, human wants, and human capacity to labor are essentially what they were three years ago. There is no reason to believe that the world's annual rate of increase in the production of basic commodities—a rate of about 3 per cent a year—which has persisted for two generations has suddenly been changed permanently.

Gold production has increased substantially since 1921, and since 1913 the world's supply of monetary gold has increased faster than the world's production of basic commodities, while the efficiency of gold as the basis of our credit structure is being increased continually through improvements in our currency and banking machinery. * * * Moreover, the discontinuance of the gold standard recently by so many countries, with the resulting decline in the demand for gold, will tend to cause gold inflation—in other words, to stimulate a rise in prices in gold-standard countries. If a substantial part of the world should long continue off the gold standard, we may even witness a rise of commodity prices in gold-standard countries to a higher level than that preceding the crisis. * * * Many countries are still on the gold standard, including the United States, France, Belgium, Holland, Italy, Poland, Switzerland, the Union of South Africa, and (with some qualification) Germany; and all these countries declare it to be their firm intention to continue on the gold basis. Wherever the gold standard has been given up during the last three years it has been given up as it was during the World War, under the pressure of a great crisis, and not for the purpose of permanently substituting some other standard in its place. In every country that has suspended gold payments the suspension has been looked upon as an unfortunate but only temporary emergency measure, and in every case the predominant expectation on the part of the governing authorities and of the public is that the gold standard will be reestablished when the present world economic crisis is over. There is little sentiment in the world to-day for any other standard, such as the silver standard, the bimetallic standard, or some form of standard permanently to replace the gold standard. * * * With all, the gold standard, in the judgment of the world, is the best standard with which the world has had extensive experience.

The world, in my judgment, will slowly but surely return to the gold standard after this crisis is over, just as it did after the World War. In a few years' time most of the world will be as sick of managed paper currencies as it was 12 years ago. The main trouble will be that popular ignorance and lethargy, coupled with selfish special interests, economic and political, will, as in so many of the world's paper-money experiences in the past, force politics into the management and management into politics. This will spell inflation and currency breakdown. Politically speaking, the world is yet far from being ready for paper-currency standards.

This lucid statement of Doctor Kemmerer clearly indicates that this country is not suffering from a shortage in gold production.

At this time of crisis, when the people are battling with one of the most crucial economic depressions with which they have been confronted throughout the history of the world, when the very fundamental groundwork of our Government is threatened with wild proposals, untried and unproven theories, panaceas and cure-alls, with a large deficit in our National Treasury, it is important that we use deliberation and measure the consequences before embarking on a course diametrically opposed to our traditional principles and policies.

As a matter of fact there is more money in circulation to-day than there was in 1929. The trouble is there is not sufficient turnover—what we want is sound money with quick turnover. In order to bring about quick turnover and to restore the flow of currency there must be a restoration of confidence in the integrity and soundness of our governmental institutions, and especially in our money system. This can not be accomplished through ill-advised and unwarranted schemes of inflation.

This Government can set its printing presses to the task of printing money for circulation, and it can fill the country with such money and shove us off the gold standard, but before taking such a step it should endeavor to weigh and estimate the consequences. We have many living examples and precedents to guide us away from such a course, the last of which was the new republic of Germany, whose sad experience along this line was such as to shock not only her own people but the civilized world. This country, although she has teetered on the brink of bimetallism on one or two occasions, has never fully embarked on such a course, and if it is left to my vote she never will.

SEPARATION OF FAMILIES THROUGH UNREASONABLE PRESUMPTION THAT ALIEN RELATIVES ARE PERSONS LIKELY TO BECOME PUBLIC CHARGES AND DISCRIMINATIONS AGAINST BONA FIDE FAMILY REUNIONS RESULTING FROM ARBITRARY WITHHOLDING AND REFUSING OF VISAS

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, under the heading of "Immigration Drops to New Low Record," the newspapers all over the country published statements that American consuls have been refusing visas to prospective immigrants upon the ground that they are likely to become public charges, and due to such exclusion immigration has now dropped to the lowest figure since 1862.

There was also a statement from the Department of State dealing with this subject, which shows that the decline of aliens entering this country is continuous and that during the year less than 100,000 will be admitted, so that immigration this year will be 10,000 less than that of 1918, which was the lowest point within recent years. This total sum, however, includes not only immigrants entitled to preferences under our immigration laws, but all kinds of arrivals in the United States, both immigrants and nonimmigrants; quota and nonquota immigrants, transients, and aliens of all kinds, including those who come to this country for brief visits and who will have to return shortly to their countries of origin, so that the number of immigrants of quota classes, which I will discuss presently, will not exceed 10,000 in all.

There is no question but that if this exclusion policy continues indefinitely no immigration of any kind will eventually be permitted into the United States. It is contended that under this policy consuls deny 99 out of every 100 applications on various grounds. The official statement on this point reads:

> A great number are being denied under the contract labor law, which means, in effect, that an alien who discloses previous arrangements for work here is denied admittance. On the other hand, as it usually works out, if the alien admits that he has no work in prospect his application may be denied on the ground that he might become a public charge.

This statement requires a presentation of the true facts as they affect the well-being of American families and I therefore take the liberty of communicating to you what I believe to be the true situation. The act of the consuls in refusing admissions to hundreds and thousands of aliens is purely arbitrary and not in accordance with our immigration laws. The statement made that by doing so conditions of unemployment are helped along is fallacious, since in most of the cases the visas applied for are not for people who have no ties with American families but rather are for fathers and mothers of American citizens, usually between the ages of 60 and 70 years, who are too old to work, and wives and minor children of persons legally in the United States, the children being too young to work.

The term "public charge" is in itself very vague and the manner in which it is applied by our consuls abroad makes it even more indefinite. It was usually understood and was taken for granted, at least under the old immigration law, that where an able-bodied person applied for admission into the United States and there was nothing physically wrong with him and he had about $25 in his pocket he would be admitted into the United States without any question. At the present time we have relatives of American citizens seeking to gain admission to the United States able to show to the consuls family resources amounting to as much as $10,000 to $20,000, but who are nevertheless refused visas and classed as public charges, in spite of the fact that during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1931, the 97,139 aliens admitted for permanent residence brought an average of only $111 each.

It is, therefore, merely a subterfuge of the law which our consuls abroad are invoking for an alleged good purpose—namely, to curtail immigration which may come into competition with American labor—but in truth and in fact it is not people of that type who are being kept out of the United States. No sensible person can be opposed to any policy which denies immigration to prospective competitors with our labor. Our labor must be protected at all costs, and it is the duty of Congress, as well as any other body of American officials, to see to it that no immigration from abroad interfere with the well-being of our own citizens who are entitled to live and work in this country and whose work should be protected. That, however, is not the effect of the present procedure. It is not labor that is being prevented from coming to the United States but the bulk of the prospective immigration which is curtailed by the action of the consuls abroad consists of parents of American citizens; husbands of American wives, and even wives and children of American citizens, and also wives and children of legally admitted aliens are being discriminated against and prohibited from joining their families in the United States. These persons can not under any circumstances compete with American labor, and by refusing visas to them all that is accomplished is that the union of families is destroyed and American citizens are discriminated against, and vast sums of money are sent abroad to support outside of the United States these near relatives who, in all common sense and for the perpetuation of the basic idea of our civilization—namely, the economic entity of the family unit—should be assisted to join the family domicile prepared for them in the United States. The money thus sent out of the United States could better now be used in the United States, since the expenditure here would benefit United States industry rather than benefiting foreign industry when spent to support these near relatives abroad with money sent from the United States.

Owing to the stringency of our immigration laws at the present time all of the persons who can come into the United States are, with few exceptions, related to American citizens or related to aliens residing in the United States after having been lawfully admitted into this country. In this class we find fathers and mothers, wives and husbands, and children of American citizens or residents. It is only these classes that can come in from most of the countries which furnish the bulk of present-day immigration to the United States, and unless one finds himself in the category mentioned one can not enter the United States under any circumstances.

The practical effect of the acts of the consuls in refusing visas to prospective immigrants of the classes mentioned is to prevent the union of families. Thus a father and a mother of an American citizen may be separated from their children; a husband may be separated from his wife, and even children of American citizens are refused admission in many instances. The result of the situation is that families are driven apart from each other and there is grave danger that the separation of these families may ultimately mean their complete disruption and dissolution.

The Republican and Democratic platforms of 1928 assured the people of this country that families separated by the immigration laws would become united. The fact of the matter is, instead of uniting families this arbitrary action of our consuls abroad upon advice or direction from the State Department under this Republican administration has rather resulted in separation of families and the consuls have gone as far as denying visas to children of American citizens because their American fathers could not show that they had as many thousands of dollars as the American consuls think sufficient to take a person out of the category of "public charges."

The statement therefore made by our Department of Labor is based upon an incorrect assumption that the prospective immigrants are likely to enter into competition with our American labor. I say that this is not a fact, and the official figures substantiate my contention. Both on the floor of Congress and in other public utterances I made it clear that I am in favor of immigration restrictions, particularly such restriction as will prevent the entrance of alien laborers. I do not wish to be considered as advocating any system by which such laborers can be admitted to the United States in competition with our own laborers. The fact of the matter is, however, that no relief has come to our American labor by keeping out these prospective immigrants, since, for the most part, these prospective immigrants are fathers and mothers of American citizens who are between the ages of 60 and 70 years, and are too old to work, or they are wives and minor children of American citizens or of persons legally in the United States, and the minor children, of course, are too young to work. Should these people be permitted to come in, their coming could have no effect whatever on our labor conditions, and not a single American as a result of it would lose his job. On the contrary, these persons would increase the number of consumers of American goods and would permit more labor to be employed in the furnishing of their wants and the making of goods necessary for these people. It is also significant that large sums of money, totaling about $300,000,000, have been sent abroad annually from this country to support these aged parents or minor children. If they were here, this sum of money would not be sent abroad but would be used right here in the United States for the purchase of their wants and distribution amongst our people instead.

So that instead of preventing prospective laborers from coming to the United States, the American consuls are preventing American families from being united. I for one would rather see the union of a few families in the United States than a thousand criminal aliens running loose throughout the country, some of whom should be deported but who are not. If these alien criminals were deported and in their stead law-abiding members of families permitted to come into this country it would immediately create better conditions and bring about happiness to many homes.

I believe if our people were apprised of the real situation they would learn how incorrect it is to say that the action of our American consuls abroad is beneficial to our people. Quite the contrary. Not a single person is kept out of this country as a competition with our labor conditions, but the many thousands who seek to come to the United States but who are denied admission on the plea of public charge would be coming to this country and become consumers of our American goods and permit our citizens to obtain work where now they can not.

It is essential for us to know that the assumption of Czar-like powers by consuls abroad who arbitrarily say who shall or shall not obtain a visa only results in the breaking up of home ties of American families. The State Department is taking no action to reverse the inhuman denials of visas to these relatives and has placed no rule or standard by which consuls can be guided in this method of conduct relating to the issuance of visas. We are leaving this grave human problem in the hands of men, many of whom have lost what Mr. Rudyard Kipling so aptly described as the "common touch."

To illustrate what I have said before I am making reference to a letter addressed to the New York Times by a former member of the Diplomatic Service of the United States, who on the date of April 24 says as follows:

> Many appeals were made to me to intervene in favor of people who had every claim to visas. The Diplomatic Service is powerless. The people who seek entry into our country are entirely at the mercy of the consular officers. Perhaps some of the latter are good and worthy, but others are lacking not only in tact and humility but even in a sense of justice.

What is the administration going to do about it?

During the session of Congress just adjourning extensive hearings were held before appropriate committees on bills proposing a method of appeal to Washington by citizens, legal alien residents, and their relatives abroad in cases where an American consul had withheld or refused an immigration visa after a petition had been approved by the Department of Labor in behalf of such relatives abroad. This proposition met with very strenuous opposition by the State Department under this Republican administration, so that I am convinced that the question of facilitating the reunion of families in the United States will receive no genuine, bona fide assistance from the so-called restrictionists, because their whole argument centers around the inviolate maintenance of the quota plan and insist that any union of families shall be accomplished by adjustments within the quotas, but at the same time they demand as a prerequisite before they give concurrence in any genuine relief measures the almost total elimination of all quotas. They, of course, know but apparently ignore the fact that their plan of reduction of the quotas also reduces the number of families united by reduced number of near relatives admitted within the quotas. Their plan offers no genuine reunion of families now separated by the operation of our quota system.

Current information given me from the State Department shows that for the year ending June 30, 1932, during which time the national-origins provisions of the immigration law would have provided for the issuance of 153,831 immigration visas to quota immigrants, there were issued less than 4,500 immigration visas to nonpreference-quota immigrants, whereas the reports issued for the year ending June 30, 1931, show there were issued 26,833 nonpreference-quota immigration visas; this indicates a radical reduction of about 83 per cent or more of these immigration visas issued to so-called new-blood immigrants—that is, immigrants with no previously established family ties in the United States.

So in conclusion I wish to emphasize the fact that the records clearly show that the American consuls abroad, acting upon directions or instructions from the Department of State with the tacit approval of the present Chief Executive, under the Republican administration, in their zeal to reduce the number of immigration visas issued by their respective consular offices by the strict application of the presumption that an alien applicant for a visa is liable to be a person "likely to become a public charge," have kept apart more families of American citizens and more families of resident aliens lawfully admitted for permanent residence in the United States than they have kept out of the United States so-called new-blood immigration. So that the present Republican administration should immediately put into operation some administrative order which will facilitate a bona fide reunion of families. Whenever the alien member of the family is able to fully qualify otherwise for admission under our immigration laws the family resources in the United States should be considered, and constitute a prima facie presumption by the consul that the alien applicant is not a person liable to be held as "likely to become a public charge."

CONGRESS MAKING COMMENDABLE EFFORT TO REDUCE THE COST OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, never before in the history of this country have so many people been interested in what is being done and what is not being done in the Congress.

The radio is responsible for the spread of much information and some misinformation over the land. The new tax bill probably is largely responsible for awakening the people to the cost of the Federal Government. All taxes, and especially those taxes paid at the local courthouse for town, city, school district, county, and State governments, have become oppressive.

Low prices of commodities, shrinking incomes from all sources, and the readjustment of values generally, have combined to wipe out equities, impoverish the people, and make the tax burden felt as never before.

The people are entitled to relief. They are entitled to have the cost of government brought down in line with readjustment values.

The total cost of all government—town, city, county, school, State, and national—is about $14,000,000,000 a year. The cost of the Federal Government is about four and a half billions of dollars. So the cost of your local, city, county, school, and State governments is about nine and one-half billions of dollars.

The nine and one-half billions of dollars tax for city, county, school, and State government is raised chiefly by a tax on real estate and personal property. This tax is paid usually at the county courthouse.

None of the tax paid at the courthouse or the city hall goes to the Federal Government. Some people do not understand that. Some people seem to think that the heavy tax on the farm is caused by extravagance in Congress. But that is not so. Congress, at least, can not be blamed for the high taxes on the home or the farm or for any of the taxes that are usually paid to the county treasurer at the courthouse.

The Federal Budget, with which Congress has to do, is only about one-third of the total cost of government.

At different times during the past years I have given to the House and the country quite a detailed statement concerning the cost of the Federal Government. I shall bring these figures up to date and show you some of the problems of balancing the Budget.

Some people may not understand just what the Budget is, why it is out of balance, why worry about it if it is, why and what the deficit, and why the necessity of additional taxes in these hard times.

So I shall explain some of these matters in simple terms and hope to bring forward some interesting facts and figures.

WHAT IS THE BUDGET?

It is the annual financial statement furnished by the President to Congress at the opening of the December session each year. It comes up to the Appropriations Committee in the shape of a large book of about 800 pages. The brief statement of the Budget shows income and expenditures of the Government for the previous year, estimates for the present year and for the next year for which appropriations are to be made.

The appropriation bills passed by the present session of Congress are for the fiscal year from July 1, 1932, to June 30, 1933.

In brief the statement of the Budget by the President made up in the fall of 1931 and presented to Congress in December was as follows:

For year ending June 30, 1931

Total expenditures	$4,091,663,908.41
Total receipts, all sources	3,189,640,080.30
Deficit	902,023,828.11

Estimated for year ending June 30, 1932

Total expenditures	$4,361,839,800.00
Total receipts	2,238,878,800.00
Deficit	2,122,961,000.00

Estimated for year ending June 30, 1933

Total expenditures	$3,996,672,450.00
Total receipts	2,576,630,202.00
Deficit	1,420,142,248.00

ACTUAL FOR YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1932

On June 30 the fiscal year 1932 ended, so we can give the actual results:

Total expenditures	$4,886,000,000.00
Total receipts	2,005,000,000.00
Deficit	2,881,000,000.00

The increase in expenditures over previous year is accounted for largely by emergency construction, heavy postal deficit, $500,000,000 for Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and $125,000,000 for stock in Federal land banks.

WHAT IS THE DEFICIT?

The deficit you hear so much about is merely the amount of money paid out in excess of that taken in. It is no new thing in our country's finances. However, we have had no deficit since the war years until 1931.

The actual deficit for the last two years was:

For 1931	$902,000,000
For 1932	2,881,000,000
	3,783,000,000

And for the present fiscal year, ending June 30, 1933, without the new tax bill, the deficit would have been at least $1,420,000,000.

No country, however great, can go on spending more than it takes in year after year. It must balance the budget. It must collect as much as it spends or spend no more than it collects.

To balance the Budget for 1933, that estimated deficit of $1,420,000,000 must be wiped out. So Congress was asked to pass a new tax bill that would raise a little over a billion dollars and cut down Government costs and appropriations by about $400,000,000.

The new tax bill has been passed. The appropriation bills have been cut down considerably, a number of drastic economies have been put through, and it is believed now that the Budget will be balanced for this year of 1933.

WHAT CAUSED THE DEFICIT?

You may well ask that question. Many think and some assert that it is caused by extravagance of Congress. But that is not so by any means. There are some extravagances that should be cut out or down. But they are small and incidental to the large figures in Government affairs.

Beginning with 1920 the Budget was balanced. The country was getting along fine. The taxes, chiefly on incomes, were high in 1920. Several different times during the past 12 years the taxes have been reduced. I have brought these figures forward year after year, showing the great reductions in taxes, the large surplus turned in to the Treasury every year, and the constant and heavy reduction in the public debt.

From 1920 to 1930 a large surplus was accumulated every year and applied on the public debt. In 1920 the public debt was $24,000,000,000 and by 1930 it had been reduced to a little over $16,000,000,000.

SURPLUS FOR MANY YEARS

Look at these figures. They show the surplus accumulated each year for 11 years. Each year the surplus was applied upon the national debt, in addition to the statutory amount required to be paid.

1920	$212,500,000
1921	86,700,000
1922	313,800,000
1923	309,700,000
1924	505,400,000
1925	250,500,000
1926	377,800,000
1927	635,800,000
1928	398,800,000
1929	184,800,000
1930	183,800,000

Those were prosperous years, everybody happy, most people contributing little or nothing directly to Federal Government expenses. Most all the revenue came from income tax, customs, and tobacco. Here is a statement of sources of revenue for 1930:

Receipts for 1930

Income tax	$2,411,000,000
Customs	587,000,000
Tobacco	450,000,000
All other receipts	729,000,000
Total	4,177,000,000

Then came the dark panic years of 1930 to 1932. Down came values of all kinds—deflation runs rampant. Fortunes are wiped out and incomes fade away. With the vanishing of incomes from all classes of people, in all lines of industry, goes the possibility of collecting income tax, of course.

Income tax collected in fiscal year 1930 was $2,411,000,000. For fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, it was only $1,057,-

000,000. Down more than half—down more than $1,300,000,000. Other revenues are down in about the same proportion.

Take a glance at receipts for fiscal year just closed—June 30, 1932—and compare these receipts with those collected just two years before in 1930. Observe that total receipts for 1932 are less than half what they were in 1930.

Receipts for 1932

Income tax	$1,057,335,853.19
Customs	327,752,391.15
Tobacco	444,276,503.00
Other receipts	176,360,689.80
Total	2,005,725,437.14

So in 1931 instead of the usual big surplus the Government had a deficit of about $902,000,000.

And for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, the deficit was, in round figures, $2,881,000,000.

That is why the Budget is out of balance.

The major Federal tax has been based on incomes. When the incomes vanish, no matter how high may be the rates, tax levy does not produce much revenue.

No family, business, nor government can keep its credit good and run on long if it pays out more than it takes in each year. It must reduce expenditures or raise its revenues.

Why does not the Federal Government reduce its expenditures right now to the amount of money taken in?

Balance the Budget right off the bat by cutting enough off the pay roll to do it and add no new taxes.

A nation-wide propaganda put out by big business men has flooded the country with that slogan. Members of Congress have received thousands of letters from business men everywhere demanding that the Budget be balanced without a new tax bill.

That would certainly be fine if it could be done. But I will show you why it can not be done this year.

The total receipts this fiscal year ended June 30, 1932, were $2,005,725,000. That is all the money we took in from all sources. We should have had receipts of over $4,000,000,000, but we did not; they were down less than half what they should have been.

Now, if the Government should have decided to pay out only what came in this year it would begin with fixed charges, of course.

Here are some:

Interest on public debt	$599,276,000
Debt retirement	412,554,000
Pensions and veterans' relief	947,000,000
Adjusted-service certificate fund	200,000,000
Postal deficit	202,000,000
Total	2,361,708,000

So you see after taking care of the veterans' benefits and paying the interest and a little on the principal of the public debt there was nothing left for all the other functions of government.

You can not do away with the Army, Navy, Department of Justice, Agriculture, and the other major Government functions by a scratch of the pen. And, of course, nobody expects it to be done when they understand the facts.

There simply was no way to balance the Budget next year without a new tax bill.

THE NEW TAX BILL

Do Members of Congress enjoy working up and voting for a tax bill?

They do not.

Writing a tax bill and getting it finally enacted into law is about the most unpleasant duty the Congress has to perform—and one of the most difficult.

No tax bill is ever popular. In war times the people stand for a great deal without much complaint. For some years after the war the taxes were high. Gradually they were reduced until the Federal taxes were little burden on anybody. Less than 2 per cent of the population pay income tax.

And now in times of peace, in panic years, it becomes necessary to pass a new tax bill which will produce a little over $1,000,000,000.

This new tax bill taxes about everything from chewing gum to automobile tires, from bank checks to brewer's wort, and boosts the income and estate taxes to nearly war-time rates.

No single Member of Congress would have written this bill as finally passed. It contains many unpopular, inconvenient, and troublesome items. I would not have let a number of the nuisance-tax items in the bill if I could have helped it. But if each individual Member could keep out of a tax or tariff bill the items he personally is opposed to, you can readily see there would be no tax or tariff bill.

One proposal before the House was a manufacturer's excise tax of about 2¼ per cent factory cost on most manufactured products, exempting food, clothing, and medicines. The tax would have been collected from the manufacturer, as the tax on cigarettes and tobacco is collected. That proposal was voted down largely by the Democratic majority, and a long list of specially picked items was substituted upon which was placed the obnoxious excise tax—a sales tax, just the same, under some other name.

The one element of humor in connection with this unhappy tax business was the manner in which the Democratic leaders, who oppose a tariff bill generally, went after a tariff on oil, copper, and coal, and got it—by placing an import tax upon these products.

This tax bill will help to balance the Budget. It is hoped that it is only temporary. Much of it is written in the laws for only two years. Some of it may be amended or repealed when Congress meets next December.

ALL SALARIES HAVE BEEN CUT, INCLUDING CONGRESSIONAL

I offered an amendment to the legislative appropriation bill cutting salaries of Senators and Representatives $1,000. It failed of passage by only 8 votes.

If that amendment had been adopted that day, the country would have known that the Congress had cut its own salaries and would have applauded.

As a matter of fact, the salaries of Senators and Representatives have been cut, but most people in the country who are prone to criticize Congress do not know it.

The Congress passed what is known as the economy bill. It is estimated that this act will effect a saving in the cost of Federal Government of from $150,000,000 to $180,000,000. This act provides a cut in salaries of the Speaker of the House and the Vice President of 15 per cent and a cut of 10 per cent on the salaries of Senators and Representatives. This bill takes something away from every employee of the United States Government who gets a salary of more than $1,000 a year—it provides for a 5-day week, or a 30-day furlough without pay, or a salary reduction of 8⅓ per cent on salaries above 1,000 and up to $10,000. It covers a multitude of little items and makes many little savings and deductions through the service which in the aggregate amount to millions of dollars.

The Congress can not cut the salary of the President of the United States during the term for which he has been elected. However, to show his sympathy and interest in this campaign for lower costs of government, President Herbert Hoover has voluntarily ordered a 20 per cent cut in his salary—cutting it from $75,000 to $60,000. The members of the Cabinet have also voluntarily taken a 15 per cent cut in place of the 8.3 per cent required by the economy bill. This reduces salaries of Cabinet members from $15,000 to $12,750.

APPROPRIATIONS A BILLION DOLLARS LESS THAN LAST YEAR

The Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives is the most economical branch of the Federal Government.

It helps to hold appropriations and expenditures down. It has been especially active this year in seeking places where reductions could be made.

The Appropriations Committee studies the estimates sent up by the Budget, hears many witnesses from all departments as to actual needs, then writes up the appropriation bills and reports them to the House. The House usually passes the appropriation bills just about as written by the committee. The Senate usually adds some millions of dollars to the bills as passed by the House.

But this year the Senate has done a most unusual thing—it has reduced the sums carried in the appropriation bills even below that passed by the House.

So the Congress as a whole has made a commendable showing in reductions of appropriation bills below totals carried for the previous year.

As finally passed, the total carried in all appropriation bills for this fiscal year, ending June 30, 1933, is just about $334,000,000 less than the Budget estimates sent up to Congress in December.

Total appropriations for 1933 are just about $1,139,000,000 less than appropriations for 1932.

In considering this large decrease for 1933 under the total for 1932 it should be remembered that there are extraordinary and unusual items in each fiscal year. For 1932 there are included—special sum, $500,000,000 for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, $125,000,000 for capital stock of Federal land banks, and several additional sums of this character. For 1933 there is included the appropriation in the emergency relief and construction act of 1932, totaling $332,224,000, as well as increases for interest on the public debt and debt-retirement funds. Eliminating from each fiscal year the large special items applicable to that year, the decrease for 1933 under 1932 on all other items amounts approximately to $600,000,000. This includes the $150,000,000 of estimated savings under the provisions of the economy act.

The spirit of economy pervades the atmosphere around the Capitol as it has not done for years. There is a determination to reduce expenditures, cut out waste and duplication, and bring the cost of government down. The Appropriations Committee has had fine support by the membership of the House and unusual cooperation in the Senate.

PORK BARREL BILLS COST A LOT OF MONEY

I got my impression and conviction about congressional pork barrel bills long before I was elected to Congress.

Some years ago I was down on the Mexican border following the big news of the day. Got some good stories about Pancho Villa as a temporary ruler and as a private bandit, General Pershing's expedition into Mexico, raid and burning of Columbus by Villa's men. Saw some of his men in the State penitentiary at Santa Fe. But the best story written that season, I think, was my impression of the pork barrel building bill before Congress.

I had read in a local newspaper of the efforts of a local United States Senator to get into a public building bill $250,000 for a post-office building for his home town. That sum sounded big to me, so I strolled around to the post office and asked the postmaster what rent he was paying for office quarters. He said $50 per month—$600 per year.

Rather extravagant, I thought, to build a building costing a quarter of a million dollars to house a business then paying $600 rent a year.

In justice to the Senator and the system and in light of knowledge gained in more recent years, think it quite probable that the proposed $250,000 building was designed to accommodate the United States Federal court as well as the post office.

A Federal courthouse in connection with a post-office building was a fine piece of pork in the old days. The Member got an innocent little bill through Congress designating Homeville as a place where the Federal court might sit. Then when Homeville was included in a public building bill it got a courthouse at $225,000 to $250,000 instead of a post-office building at $90,000 to $100,000.

The additional cost for the second and third stories for court facilities has usually run about $125,000.

Interest on that sum at 4¼ per cent would be about $5,312 a year—to say nothing about additional cost for light, heat, janitor, and a court clerk or two. In some of these places the Federal court may meet not more than 6 to 12 days a year. In some of these small-town Federal courthouses I fancy it costs the Government $1,000 a day for every day the court actually sits.

Since I have been a Member of Congress we have had no pork barrel building bills until this session. Some years ago the Congress passed a public building act which provides that as money is made available places for buildings shall be selected by a joint committee of the Treasury and Post Office Departments.

This year a huge pork barrel building bill was introduced and passed the House but did not become a law. I had to vote against it.

It would have provided buildings in many towns, several in every Member's district all over the country. It included 1,093 towns for $70,000 buildings and 418 towns and villages for $55,000 buildings.

In the old days the towns out through the country would have been rampant for these buildings. But people are beginning to be concerned about Government appropriations. This year this gigantic pork barrel bill fell flat.

In many towns where a $55,000 building was suggested the Government now pays less than $1,000 per year rent. When the Government moves into a new $55,000 post-office building, its yearly cost for interest and maintenance is not less than $5,000 per year.

Take Holly, Colo., for example; suppose a $55,000 building were put up there in the interest of the unemployed.

The actual construction would require so little labor, particularly local labor, that it would hardly be noticed. A local landlord would lose a good tenant. A piece of local real estate would be removed from the tax rolls. Neighborhood property owners or the town would have to pay the sidewalk and street paving tax, as the Government does not do that. The Post Office Department would cease paying the $1,000 a year rent. But the Treasury Department would assume carrying charges of about $5,000 a year—a net loss to the Government of $4,000 a year.

For Holly to get a building it would be necessary to give about 1,000 other towns of similar size similar buildings, and that would make an annual loss of about $4,000,000 which would be added to the taxpayer's bill for many years to come.

In the old days of prosperity and pork-barrel stuff that bill would have gone over without question. But the people are counting the cost of government and want it reduced. Many towns listed for buildings asked their Congressmen to oppose the measure. Holly, Colo., did that. The people have changed suddenly. There was very little argument from the country for this bill. In the old days people seemed to think that Government money came from nowhere and cost nobody anything; therefore get all of it spent in your community that you could. But they are finding out to their sorrow that every dollar the Government spends is added to their tax bills.

PENSIONS AND BENEFITS FOR VETERANS OF ALL WARS

The country is grateful and the Congress has tried to be liberal with legislation and appropriations for veterans and dependents of all wars.

Something over $15,000,000,000 have been paid for pensions and benefits of one sort or another to our veterans of all wars. Occasionally uninformed persons have quoted this figure as the cost of benefits for veterans of the World War. But such is not the case. It covers all wars from 1790 down to date.

The cost of pensions granted to veterans of all wars, except the great World War, from 1790 to June 30, 1932, was $8,637,569,793.

The cost of benefits granted veterans of the World War up to April 31, 1932, amounted to $5,266,952,369.91, to which might be added $1,355,220,091.79 loaned on the bonus certificates. That would make a total of $6,622,172,461.70.

Pensions and benefits for the veterans of the several wars run about as follows:

War of the Revolution	$70,000,000.00
War of 1812	46,203,800.40
Indian wars	53,614,907.47
War with Mexico	60,149,291.73
Civil War	7,601,773,450.02
War with Spain	686,146,515.60
Regular Establishment	102,872,972.30
Unclassified	16,808,856.22
Total all other wars	8,637,569,793.74
World War benefits	6,622,172,461.70
Grand total	15,259,742,255.44

REDUCTIONS AND ECONOMIES EFFECTED BY THE SEVENTY-SECOND CONGRESS

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Speaker, Members of the House, upon your return home, the first thing the people will want to know is: How much have you reduced the cost of government? They are entitled to this information, and I propose to give you the actual figures as agreed upon by our Democratic chairman of the House Appropriations Committee and the Republican chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, which make this information reliable and such as you may give your constituents in answer to their question.

The people have set the example in reduction by reducing their own expenses and then reducing the cost of their local government.

THIS CONGRESS HAS MADE UNPRECEDENTED REDUCTIONS IN FEDERAL EXPENSES

Upon several occasions, as we approached the end of the session, I endeavored to state the amount of reductions being made and finally estimated the total economies to be effected at $700,000,000. Now, at the close of the session it is indeed gratifying to me to be able to state that such estimate was more than justified. The actual savings have far exceeded the amount of the estimate. The total reductions made during this session of appropriations for the fiscal year 1933 are $857,353,618.94 less than the appropriations for the fiscal year 1932. Add to this enormous reduction the estimated minimum savings of the economy bill and you have a total reduction for this session of Congress of $1,007,353,618.94. This total reduction is a greater reduction than has ever been made by any previous session of Congress. It shows that the Congress has responded to the demands of the people and followed their example in reducing the costs. I am sure this will be gratifying to your constituents as the people generally everywhere were deeply interested in this question. They wanted the expenses of government brought within the limits of the revenues and placed upon a sound business basis.

Notwithstanding this unprecedented record of reduction, this enormous amount of saving, it does not fully reflect the work that this Congress has done to effect permanent economies in government. Still further reductions will be made as reorganization takes place and the cutting out of duplication progresses, as the Executive weeds out unnecessary employees and recommends the abolition of all unnecessary boards, bureaus, and commissions as the laws are revised and amended.

In the very nature of things there are certain charges, rather of a fixed nature, which must be paid. They may be reduced somewhat, but in their substantial amounts they must be paid, as the following will illustrate:

Interest on the public debt	$640,000,000
Sinking-fund requirements	496,803,478
Veterans' Administration, including permanents and indefinites	1,020,364,000
Naval service, including permanent annual appropriations	318,906,141
Military service, exclusive of nonmilitary items, but including permanent annual appropriations	290,575,924
Postal Service	806,104,675
Total	3,572,754,218

At a glance it is easily seen that the reductions in these six items can not be as great as many would expect. Deducting this sum of $3,572,754,218 from our total appropriations of $4,761,192,479.24 for 1933, you have remaining $1,188,438,261.24. Thus it will be observed that the field of reduction is much more restricted than many believe. In a country filled with progressive, ambitious citizens, it is with much difficulty that appropriations are reduced. Yet in the face of all these obstacles we have effected a saving of $1,007,353,618.94. We believe that still further reductions may be made in several of the above items, but it will require a change of substantive law to effect them.

I voted for the retirement of 2,000 Army officers from the service to further economize, but the item was defeated in the Senate.

POSTAL COSTS MUST BE CUT TO A MINIMUM CONSISTENT WITH EFFICIENT SERVICE

The amount for the Postal Service likewise will afford opportunities for reduction, although we must admit that popular demand has insisted upon a progressive expansion of its service to the people. The demand for reading matter daily fills sacks with papers and magazines to be delivered by the rural carriers on rural routes reaching out in every direction. The Rural and City Free Delivery Service, the Parcel Post System, the savings-funds accommodation, money orders, air mail expansion—all have been demanded and have added to the total cost.

In 1931, out of a total expenditure of more than $802,000,000, the receipts from postal business alone aggregated more than $666,000,000, the deficit for 1931 amounting to $145,725,910. We believe that expenses may be cut so as to place the department upon a paying basis.

HOW MUCH DOES THE FRANKING PRIVILEGE COST THE GOVERNMENT?

As evidence of the interest in this department, we quote the following letter:

DEAR MR. GARBER: While at the post office to-day, a traveling man said that if Congress had abolished the franking privilege there would not have been any deficit and no need for a tax bill. We would like to know how much the franking privilege costs the Government.

The newspapers are responsible for a great deal of misinformation in regard to the cost of the franking privilege. The total cost for handling franked material of Members of Congress for the year 1931, which includes both Members of the House and Senate, was only $530,298.50—just a little more than half a million dollars. I have given you the actual figures, the accuracy of which is vouched for by the Postal Department. In the face of these figures, what becomes of the statement of the traveling man that "if Congress had abolished the franking privilege there would not have been any deficit and no need for a tax bill"?

AIR MAIL AND SHIP MAIL SERVICES ARE COSTING US TOO MUCH

Contrast the cost of the franking privilege of $530,000 with the free handling of newspapers published and mailed in the counties of their publication for 1931 of $8,425,242.11. Contrast the cost of the franking privilege of $530,000 with the cost of handling second-class mail over revenues for 1931 amounting to $96,973,717.40. We believe that substantial economies can be made in the Postal Department. For instance, in 1931 the maintenance of air mail for the domestic service cost $17,693,410, while the revenues received were $6,210,344.86, leaving a net loss of $11,383,065.14. Take the foreign air mail service. It cost the United States in 1931, $6,564,858, while the returns from our foreign air mail service aggregated $780,422, leaving a net loss of $5,784,435, or a combined net loss for 1931 for air mail service of $17,167,500.14.

Take the carrying of mail in American ships to foreign countries upon the basis of combined poundage, mileage, and speed of ships. The department during the year 1931 incurred a loss in the carriage of such mail of $18,911,474.

The above items of loss show that we have been forcing the carriage of air mail and ship mail far beyond its practical stage, and such items should be cut down to the limits of the revenue they afford.

CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE WILL STUDY PRACTICAL ECONOMIES FOR POSTAL SERVICE

A subcommittee of the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads has been directed to fully investigate and report at the next session all the economies which can be safely made in the Postal Department, and if such amendments include the abolition of the franking privilege I shall support it.

THE FRANKING PRIVILEGE IS FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE PEOPLE BACK HOME

The purpose of the franking privilege was to enable the Representative to send information back to his people, answering all their inquiries in regard to public questions, their petitions, protests, telegrams, giving his position on public questions, information as to what Congress is doing or has done, such as I am now furnishing, giving the exact information as to what reductions this Congress has made in the expenses of government.

THE PEOPLE SHOULD MAKE THEIR CHOICE OF REPRESENTATIVE ON A BASIS OF SERVICE

It is the duty of a Representative to keep his constituents as fully informed as possible and to make to them a report of his services. This I have done at the close of each session so that the people of the eighth congressional district have been kept fully informed as to my position on all public questions. They know to-day where their Representative stands upon all national questions and how he has voted upon such questions as they came before Congress. It enables them to determine intelligently whether such course has represented their views and their interests as they saw them at the time. With such information continually at hand, it makes it difficult for the opportunist seeking self-preferment because he is a Democrat or a Republican, because he wants the office, or because the big interests of the country may feel that in his election they will have a friend in court. The position of Representative should be bottomed upon actual service to the people of the district and not to the special interests in Wall Street or the inside organization of any political party.

GIVE CONGRESS THE CREDIT IT HAS EARNED

While Congress, like all other legislative bodies, is subject to criticism, and deservingly so in many instances, yet I am sure the people which you represent will be glad indeed to give Congress credit for the actual accomplishment of reducing the costs of government during this last session $1,007,353,618.94.

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST THE FARMER

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. GARBER], in the course of a speech which he delivered on the floor of the House, took occasion to offer some criticism of the Democrats for not passing some general farm-relief legislation during this session. This phase of his address ignores the most essential facts in connection with the situation.

Three farm organizations indorsed what is known as the 3-way bill which would have given the board the optional right to utilize the equalization-fee plan, the debenture plan, or the cost-price allotment plan. This so-called 3-way plan was favorably reported by both the Senate Agriculture Committee and the House Agriculture Committee. The House Agriculture Committee also favorably reported the debenture plan. The 3-way plan was taken up in the Senate and after discussion was not passed but was sent back to the committee by a vote of 38 to 28. After the adverse action by the Senate, the House did not take action thereon, although the bills, of course, remain on the calendar.

What is the basis of the farm problem to-day? Every thinking man must admit that the present farm conditions were brought about primarily by two things, first, the legislation which has heretofore been enacted favoring certain special groups, and, second, the discriminations against agriculture, especially in the tariff and freight rates.

The industrial tariff schedules, through a long period of years, have increased the price of the supplies which the farmer must buy. On the major surplus farm commodities, the tariff is of little, if any, advantage. This is especially true of wheat and cotton, and on cotton it can be of no advantage whatever.

This discrimination against agriculture has bled the agricultural sections white and destroyed the purchasing power of those engaged in farming. This has caused an economic paralysis which has slowly crept up on the rest of the economic body, and finally by destroying the purchasing power of the farmer has tended to destroy the market for the industrial products themselves.

During the last 12 years the Republicans have had control of the Executive and both legislative branches of the Government. In this period this favoritism and these discriminations have been practiced to a greater degree than ever before.

What has been the offering of the leaders of the Republican Party for restoring agriculture to a basis of equality with industry? They established the Federal Farm Board, with powers of such a nature that they could not touch the basic essentials of the problem. They put this board into the buying and selling of commodities, wholly ignoring the vital discriminations which are responsible for the present plight of the farmer. No matter how able the members of this board might have been, they did not have authority to do the things that would have been necessary to restore agriculture to its proper place in American life. They undertook to do a great many things that have tended to aggravate rather than help the situation.

I am not unmindful of the fact that they undertook this experiment in one of the most difficult periods of American history. At the same time, no matter what their ability might have been, the mere matter of marketing could not possibly heal the discriminations in our trade barriers and other legislation in operation at the same time which operated to the disadvantage of those who were engaged in tilling the soil.

During the long years of agitation for the equalization fee and the debenture plans the President has consistently opposed both of them.

When the equalization-fee plan was passed by the House and Senate some years ago it was vetoed by President Coolidge, a long statement from Secretary Mellon being attached as a part of the veto message. It was commonly understood that Mr. Hoover, then Secretary of Commerce, assisted in the preparation of the data and in paving the way for a veto. Senator L. J. DICKINSON, then a Member of the House, said that the arguments sounded "strangely like those of Mr. Hoover," the Secretary of Commerce.

Soon after Mr. Hoover became President he called the Congress into special session primarily for the purpose of enacting farm-relief legislation. His lieutenants, with his full approval, presented the principles of the present Farm Board act. It is his pet and his baby, and it was drafted in the form that he desired and it was crowded through the House and Senate without material amendment. While it was pending an effort was made to amend by attaching the equalization-fee plan. This was voted down. An effort was made to substitute the debenture plan. The effort became so serious that a letter addressed to Senator CHARLES L. MCNARY and signed by the President was sent to the Congress on April 20, 1929, and was read into the RECORD. In this statement the President gave 10 reasons why he opposed the debenture.

Thus the President opposed each of the plans which had for their purpose the removing of the discriminations against agriculture.

In his message to the Congress on April 16, 1929, the President specifically stated that there should be no fee imposed and that no form of price guaranteeing should be indulged in. Thus he specifically condemned the plans that were offered to restore equality and stood upon his own plan, which was enacted into law and for which he is primarily responsible.

What has been the result? The prices of wheat and cotton and of practically all farm commodities have been lower than at any time in a half century.

The program he advanced has not only not restored agriculture, but its very operations have tended to accumulate further surpluses while other nations of the world were disposing of theirs, to the point where we now have more than 11,000,000 bales of cotton—practically a year's production—in the carry-over; and we had more than 400,000,000 bushels of visible wheat before the harvesting of the 1932 crop began. These accumulations have been so enormous that any plan of real relief would be very greatly handicapped by these surpluses and would be in material danger of being swamped. Practically all of the reports from farm organizations admit that before the matter can be cured in any way some disposition must be made of these great surpluses.

We are not interested in political relief. What we want is real relief, or rather a real cure.

The Democrats have had control of the House of Representatives by a slender margin during the present session of the Congress. The Republicans have had control of the Senate. The Republicans have had control of the Presidency. They have had control of all three branches for 12 years. The occupant of the White House has been the same personage who has repeatedly condemned the various programs advanced by the farm groups.

With this situation prevailing, with the Republicans in control of two of the three branches of the Government, it is idle to talk about the Democrats, who are in control by a narrow margin of only one of the three branches of Government, being responsible for the failure of curative legislation and of their being charged with the duty under such circumstances of correcting all of the results of 12 years' Republican misrule. This is especially true when in any proposal that was suggested they were compelled to go into the teeth of the open and positive statement of the opposition of the President, placed in black and white, which constituted advance notice that any such action would meet a presidential veto.

In view of these facts, in view of the appalling mistakes of the last 12 years, in view of the stand-pat attitude of the present administration and its cohorts, the only hope for the American farmer is for him to remember the ides of November and vote to place the Democrats in power of both branches of the Congress and the Presidency.

If this is done, the Democratic Party will set about the task of removing the discriminations against agriculture, of doing away with the favoritism to special groups, and will legislate in such a way as to restore the Government of the United States to the people.

ACTIONS SPEAK LOUDER THAN WORDS

Mr. HESS. Mr. Speaker, Congress came to a close July 16 with no attempt by the Democrats in control of the House and its committees to carry out the promise of the Democratic national platform adopted June 29.

THE WORDS

Immediate modification of the Volstead Act to legalize the manufacture and sale of beer and other beverages of such alcoholic content as is permissible under the Constitution, and to provide therefrom proper and needed revenue.

THE ACTION

Just nothing, although the Democratic-controlled House had sufficient time to consider and pass a modification of the Volstead law and knew they would have the support of 77 Republican Members.

The people want action. They should not be fooled again by Democratic promises. When they vote for Republican candidates for the House and Senate who promise to vote for "immediate" modification and repeal, they know that those promises will be carried out.

The votes in the House at the last session on submission of the eighteenth amendment and modification of the Volstead law clearly prove a larger percentage of wet Republicans than of wet Democrats. The wet Republicans were ready and willing for action. The wet Democrats yielded their personal views to those of their party leaders.

Actions speak louder than words.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, July 14, 1932, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

632. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report dated July 11, 1932, from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, on preliminary examination and survey of Multnomah Channel, Oreg.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

633. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate for the Veterans' Administration, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, in the nature of a proposed amendment of Public Resolution No. 35, entitled "Joint resolution making an appropriation to provide transportation to their homes for veterans of the World War temporarily quartered in the District of Columbia," approved July 8, 1932 (H. Doc. No. 362); to the Committee on Appropriations.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. PATMAN: A bill (H. R. 12957) to provide for controlled expansion of the currency, increase in commodity prices, relief of unemployment, and the immediate payment to needy veterans of the face value of their adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. RANKIN: A bill (H. R. 12958) to authorize additional broadcasting facilities for certain States whose facilities are below their established quota under the radio act of 1927, as amended; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

By Mr. KELLER: A bill (H. R. 12959) to amend the Federal corrupt practices act, 1925, to provide minimum penalties of fine and imprisonment for violations thereof, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress.

By Mr. CHRISTGAU: A bill (H. R. 12960) to provide immediate gathering and dissemination of such economic data and information as will enable farmers to make such regional or national readjustments in acreage and in production as shall aid in bringing about the reconstruction of agriculture and the balancing of production and demand in the United States; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12961) to repeal the homestead, preemption, and desert-land laws of the United States of America and all laws or parts of laws amendatory thereto providing for the transfer of public lands to individuals for agricultural purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 12962) to provide for the stabilization of industry during the existing national economic emergency; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HOWARD: A bill (H. R. 12963) to deny compensation to Senators, Representatives, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners absent from the sessions of their respective Houses, except under certain conditions; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BYRNS: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 473) to amend the public resolution entitled "Joint resolution making an appropriation to provide transportation to their homes for veterans of the World War temporarily quartered in the District of Columbia," approved July 8, 1932; to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, joint resolution (H. J. Res. 474) making available as of July 1, 1932, the appropriations contained in the regular annual appropriation acts for the fiscal year 1933 for the Departments of Agriculture, Post Office, Treasury, and War, and ratifying obligations incurred in anticipation thereof; to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, joint resolution (H. J. Res. 475) making an appropriation for the payment of pages for the Senate and House of Representatives from July 16 to July 31, 1932; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. GARBER: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 476) to limit the amount of compensation paid by common carriers by railroad which may be charged to operating expenses; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BOYLAN: A bill (H. R. 12964) for the relief of Joseph P. Kinlen; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DELANEY: A bill (H. R. 12965) for the relief of the Mizrach Wine Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 12966) for the relief of the Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Massachusetts; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HOGG of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 12967) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Plasterer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12968) granting an increase of pension to Harriet E. Hess; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOLLISTER: A bill (H. R. 12969) granting Briggs Cunningham Jones the privilege of filing application for benefits under the emergency officers' retirement act; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. HOPKINS: A bill (H. R. 12970) granting an increase of pension to Anna Aughinbaugh; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KLEBERG: A bill (H. R. 12971) for the relief of D. E. Sweinhart; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MOREHEAD: A bill (H. R. 12972) granting an increase of pension to Fannie Bates; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MURPHY: A bill (H. R. 12973) granting an increase of pension to Anna M. Thompson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SNELL: A bill (H. R. 12974) granting an increase of pension to Agnes C. Johnson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

8532. By Mr. CRAIL: Petition of Studio Carpenters' Local Union, No. 946, Los Angeles, Calif., favoring the enactment of legislation providing for a $5,000,000,000 bond issue for necessary public improvements to give employment and relief to the people; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

8533. By Mr. LINDSAY: Petition of National Cooperative Council, Washington, D. C., urging the repeal of the agricultural marketing act; to the Committee on Agriculture.

8534. By Mr. RANSLEY: Resolutions from the Philadelphia Wool and Textile Association, favoring the abolition of those activities of the Government for so-called farm relief, which have proved to be impractical, wasteful, and at the same time harmful to business, to the end that further drains upon the Federal Treasury for such purposes may cease; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

8535. By Mr. RUDD: Petition of National Cooperative Council, Washington, D. C., favoring the repeal of section 9 (known as the stabilization clause) of the agricultural marketing act; to the Committee on Agriculture.

SENATE

THURSDAY, JULY 14, 1932

(Legislative day of Monday, July 11, 1932)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12280) to create Federal home-loan banks, to provide for the supervision thereof, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. STEAGALL, Mr. STEVENSON, Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH, Mr. MCFADDEN, and Mr. STRONG of Kansas were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4747) to provide for the entry under bond of exhibits of arts, sciences, and industries, and products of the soil, mine, and sea, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 3276) to amend the act entitled "An act to promote the production of sulphur upon the public domain within the State of Louisiana," approved April 17, 1926.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 8374) to authorize the settlement, allowance, and payment of certain claims, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

MERGER OF DISTRICT STREET RAILWAYS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 154, to authorize the merger of street-railway corporations operating in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, would the Senator from Nebraska be willing to yield to permit a motion to be offered for the reconsideration of the vote by which the farm aid bill was passed on yesterday?

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator does not want to take it up now, does he?

Mr. BINGHAM. I want to make the motion to ask for a return of the papers at once, as I understand the House is likely to consider the measure this morning. It may not be that the Senate will agree to a reconsideration.

Mr. NORRIS. I would not have any objection to yielding for the purpose of entering the motion, but, as I understand it, the papers in the case referred to have already been sent to the House, and that means the motion would be debated before bringing the papers back. It might lead to unlimited debate. I would rather the Senator would wait until I am through. I would rather not yield for that purpose.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to enable me to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin withhold the suggestion for a moment?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Very well.

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I would like to ask the Senator from Connecticut whether he has consulted with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], the author of the bill? As I understand it, the Senator from South Dakota is engaged in a conference meeting this morning. It seems to me he ought to be notified.

Mr. BINGHAM. I shall not press the motion to reconsider, merely the motion to ask for return of the papers.

Mr. NORRIS. It all means that the motion to reconsider will probably result in the bill being debated until it is too late to get action in the House. I decline to yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska declines to yield.

Mr. BINGHAM subsequently said: Mr. President, I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the action of the Senate whereby the bill known as the farm aid bill, introduced by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], was passed on yesterday.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, has the bill been sent to the House?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been messaged to the House.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska will state the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. NORRIS. A motion made to reconsider could not be considered or entertained unless the papers are returned, could it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the rule the motion can not be considered until the papers are returned. Also under the rule the motion to reconsider shall be accompanied by a motion to return the papers and action upon the motion calling for the return of the papers is to be taken without debate.

Mr. NORRIS. Would not the consideration of the motion lead to debate?

Mr. BINGHAM. The motion is not debatable and will not, therefore, lead to discussion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to return the papers is not debatable.

Mr. BINGHAM. In view of that fact I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

EMPLOYEES OF GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a substitute for Senate Joint Resolution 200 now on the table. This substitute is suggested by Mr. Carter, the Public Printer, at my request. I am informed that this substitute has been submitted to the Comptroller General McCarl's office, who gave an informal opinion that the aim to be accomplished by Senate Joint Resolution 200 can only be attained by the adoption of this substitute.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 205) relating to leave with pay for employees of the Government Printing Office was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas under authority of existing law it is the practice of the Government Printing Office in granting annual leave with pay to grant such leave only after the employee has earned during the fiscal year the full 30 days' leave; and

Whereas the practice in other Government departments has been to grant leave as earned at the rate of two and one-half days per month; and

Whereas the employees of the Government Printing Office in accordance with section 103 of Title I of Part II of the legislative appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, will be deprived not only of leave earned during the fiscal year 1932 but also of leave earned during the fiscal year 1933, and the annual leave with pay accumulated during the fiscal year 1934 will not be available until after June 30, 1934; and

Whereas under the provisions of existing law employees of the Government Printing Office are not now and never have been entitled to sick leave with pay; and

Whereas the effect of such section 103 of such legislative appropriation act of 1933 discriminates against employees of the Government Printing Office: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That notwithstanding the provisions of section 110 of Title I of Part II of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1932, all moneys returned to the Treasury on account of furlough and pay reduction from the wages and salaries of employees of the Government Printing Office under said act are hereby reappropriated as they become available for use by the Public Printer in payment of leaves of absence earned by said employees during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1932; such payments to be in lieu of time off on account of said earned leaves of absence and in full compensation therefor; and all payments so made shall be in alphabetical order beginning with employees of the lowest grade and those who may die or be separated from the rolls during the fiscal year 1933, but shall not include payments for any leaves of absence earned during the fiscal year 1933.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield for that purpose?

Mr. NORRIS. That, too, will lead to debate.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I do not think it will. If it does, I shall withdraw my request.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I do not think consideration of the joint resolution will call for much debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am heartily in favor of the joint resolution, but it ought to go to a committee and be reported back to the Senate first before we take action on it.

Mr. SMOOT. Under the rule it will have to go to a committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

UNIT BANKING

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD of to-day's proceedings an address on the subject Holding the Line for the Unit Bank, delivered by H. B. McDowell, prominent Pennsylvania banker, vice president of McDowell National Bank, of Sharon, Pa., before the Thirty-eight Annual Convention of the Pennsylvania Bankers' Association, held in Pittsburgh May 17, 18, 19, 1932. Mr. McDowell is the son of the late Alexander McDowell, former Member of Congress at large from the State of Pennsylvania and later Clerk of the House of Representatives, and is at present a member of the executive council, American Bankers' Association, and past president of Pennsylvania Bankers' Association.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOLDING THE LINE FOR THE UNIT BANK

Mr. President, ladies and gentlemen of the Pennsylvania Bankers' Association, and guests, I have been asked to discuss with you the subject of pending bank legislation in Congress, particularly as it concerns unit banks. My text, therefore, is taken from Senate bill No. 4412, page 44, section 19, beginning at line 18, as follows:

"Paragraph (c) of section 5155 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, is amended to read as follows: '(C) A national banking association may, with the approval of the Federal Reserve Board, establish and operate new branches within the limits of the city, town, or village, or at any point within the State in which said association is situated: Provided, That if by reason of the proximity of such an association to a State boundary line the ordinary and usual business of such association is found to extend into an adjacent State, the Federal Reserve Board may permit the establishment of a branch or branches by such association in an adjacent State, but not beyond a distance of 50 miles from the place where the parent bank is located. No such association shall establish a branch outside of the city, town, or village in which it is situated unless it has a paid-in and unimpaired capital stock of not less than $500,000.' "

This simple statement means that if a national bank has $500,000 and upwards of paid-in capital it can establish branches in any part of the State in which it is located; and if it happens to be near the border, it can spread out for 50 miles into another State, whether the State laws in either State permit branch banking or not; and, further, even if the State laws absolutely prohibit branch banking. This, in my opinion, is intended only as the forerunner of nation-wide branch banking.

HISTORY OF BRANCH-BANKING PROPOSAL

Before going into the merits of this revolutionary proposal may I set forth a series of events that have led up to the legislation now before Congress? This discussion naturally divides itself into two parts, which are interrelated to a larger extent than would appear on the surface.

While there have been advocates of branch banking for many years, the first serious effort for a broad adoption of the principle was made in the American Bankers' Association convention at Los Angeles in 1925, where it was sought to place the convention on record in favor of branch banking. This effort was defeated, and the issue remained more or less dormant until 1928.

In May, 1928, Hon. John W. Pole in an address before the Maryland Bankers' Association at Atlantic City pointed out that 5,000 banks had failed, with liabilities of one billion five hundred million. He recommended as a cure enactment of a Federal law which would permit national banks in large cities to engage in branch banking within so-called trade areas.

The comptroller overlooked in this address the time over which these failures took place and the general location of the failed banks. Also that the total average assets per bank were only $300,000. Nor did he make any statement as to the actual final loss to depositors. Since large banks were included in his figures, he might have stated that many of the failed banks were very small and had no sufficient prospect of success even at the time their charters were granted. Had he pointed out that in the 9 years prior to 1928 only 121 banks had failed in the 14 Eastern States, including Ohio on the west and Maryland on the south; that in that same period there had been no failures at all in the State of New Jersey, only 6 in the State of Maryland, and only 36 in the State of Pennsylvania; that New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and West Virginia had the lamest record during this period, and that 6 of these 14 States had had only 1 failure each in 9 years; then these certainly would have been no cause for alarm about the unit-banking situation so far as these 14 Eastern States were concerned.

The reasons for the failures, which could have been cited in 1928, were that too many charters had been granted in all States, so that competition had been forced on established banks, both by State and Federal authorities. In my own community one National and two State banks chartered, where no more were needed, have passed out of the picture.

The failures in New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and West Virginia, the 4 States of the 14 Eastern States having the greatest population and the largest number of banks, can be assigned to specific reasons in addition to the excess number of chartered banks.

(a) In New York—to speculation together with faulty and dishonest financing.

(b) In Pennsylvania—to a changed bituminous-coal situation in the western section, and a changed anthracite-coal situation in the eastern section, these changes due partly to State and Federal governmental interference. Also, real-estate speculation on the part of building and loan associations in the eastern part of the State caused much distress.

(c) In Ohio—to competition of banks with building and loan associations operating under laws very detrimental to banks, causing highly inflated real-estate prices.

(d) In West Virginia—to the bituminous-coal situation.

It must be admitted, in view of the foregoing, that bank management of any type—whether in centralized or unit banks, could not have controlled these conditions, nor could it have expected to cope successfully with, for instance, cotton and real estate in the South—wheat and farm products in the West—and the changes we experienced in basic industries in the Eastern States, including ill-advised building and loan competition operating under State law.

As a matter of fact the situation might well have been worse, since in addition to the economic recession large banks had sold many issues of bonds and stocks based upon all of the property and types of bad industry enumerated above. Under unified control, sales resistance would have been less and the chance increased for a greater distribution of bonds and securities faulty in their inception and not infrequently based on either ignorance or dishonesty, or both. In fact, one of the main contentions for branch banking is that a wider and more economical distribution of securities could be had, and a more mobile pool of accumulated savings would be available for the financial centers. Under that sort of control, one wonders to what lengths our recent debacle in investment securities might have taken us.

MORE HISTORY

The figures of 1928 showed that 121 banks had failed in the 14 Eastern States in the 9 years, while 4,439 had failed in the United States as a whole—a percentage of 2.7 per cent for the Eastern States. Had the facts been given the publicity they so richly merited, I firmly believe much of the trouble in the East would have been averted.

Starting about the time of the comptroller's 1928 address, many financial writers, speakers, and alleged authorities turned loose a running fire of propaganda which indiscriminately attacked country banks and held up branch banking as the cure for a "bad banking system." This in spite of the fact that the unit system had operated successfully in the Eastern States. It is significant that during the next two and one-half years to July 1, 1931, failures in Eastern States increased to 340, against a previous record of 121 failures in 9 years.

By July 1, 1931, there had been a total of 7,193 failures in 11½ years, divided as follows:

In 14 Eastern States	340 or	4.7 per cent
South of Maryland and east of Mississippi River	1,525 or	21.3 per cent
West of Ohio in remaining States	5,328 or	74 per cent
	100	per cent

This represents an increase from 1928 of 2,754, or more than 62 per cent, after the attack began. I am sorry that later figures are not available.

Published articles appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, Harper's, Atlantic Monthly, World's Work, Standard Statistics, Moody's, Business Week, and many other periodicals, including the daily newspapers, all pointing to the weakness of the unit-bank system and of country banks in particular. Many of these articles had every indication of being inspired by individuals and interests wishing to advance the branch-bank idea.

One of the most unfortunate omissions was that all failures of groups and chains were placed in the unit-bank-failure column. Not one official word, even yet, has appeared concerning the extraordinary failures centering about Louisville, Ky., where a group operating under the guidance of Rogers-Caldwell carried down almost 100 banks. Nor has much been said about the branch-bank experiments in New York, where many consolidations took place, and the failure of the Bank of the United States carried down more than 57 corporations; or of the Bankers Trust Co. in Philadelphia, with its 21 branches; or of Toledo, Canton, Youngstown, Ohio; New York, Boston, Chicago, Louisville, and other cities where branch or group banking is established. The assets tied up by these failures are of far greater amount than those of all the failed country banks put together. The contrast between these totals in the Eastern States is particularly impressive.

And while much has been heard, nothing has thus far been said about the situation in California, except that their climate remains soft and balmy.

Moreover, it should not be forgotten that these very failures of city banks adversely affected country banks and in many cases brought about their failure, also, because the city bank carried country bank reserve funds as well as funds in transit, both aggregating huge totals.

I assert that research and declaration have not sought the fundamental truth, namely, that one seat of the trouble was in too many banks. The record shows that North Dakota had one bank for every 750 of its inhabitants, and Iowa one for every 1,400. The situation in these States was not exceptional. On the contrary, an excessive number of banks had been established throughout those sections of the country mainly devoted to agriculture. It is admitted, also, that a further cause of difficulty and eventual failure was the Federal reserve act, which removed from city banks the cost of the transfer of funds and placed it upon the country banks by denying the latter the right to charge for checks drawn on them and sent for collection by their city correspondent banks.

Another contributing cause for uncertainty and bank failures has been the interference of the Federal Government in loaning money through the Federal farm-loan banks and joint-stock land banks, which have dumped surplus funds in prodigious quantity into agricultural sections at the same time, hampering the banks in their ability to loan money safely.

SOWING SEEDS OF DISCONTENT

For more than five years the unit bank has been under a constant fire of propaganda from writers and speakers, thus actually creating "events and circumstances" for immediate as well as ultimate use. The first and perhaps the greatest exponent of this art was the well-known P. T. Barnum. He has to-day many apostles in our centers of financial influence. While the Chicago troubles were on, articles in Moody's Letters and in Standard Statistics pointed to a "Recurrence of failures among country banks." Babson's Service also did a bit of pointing in the wrong direction. While the Pittsburgh troubles were on, the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette of October 26, 1931, spoke of troubles among country banks. Business Week, of September 17 and 24, 1931, spoke of weakness of country banks in the midst of grave troubles in New York, Philadelphia, and Chicago. Only last summer the president of a large Detroit bank said in an address having wide circulation that Federal legislation would be proposed for the purpose of preventing failures among country banks.

What the public might actually have been told was the course of procedure within the "big tent," meaning, of course, those unavoidable ceremonies within the larger groups where "shotgun weddings" of banks took first place in the order of the day's business. [Applause.]

POINTS OF VIEW

It is interesting to note here the vigorous opposition of city bankers to those provisions of the Glass bill dealing with holding companies and security affiliates.

In the May issue of the Atlantic Monthly, Mr. John T. Flynn describes "The Science and Art of Ballyhoo" as practiced by Edward L. Bernays. Mr. Bernays has established a very lucrative business dealing with the science of unconscious mental processes. He deals with the psychology of the crowd and he controls or directs mass thinking through group leaders. He sells his services. I do not know who has directed the propaganda for branch banking, but the methods used follow very closely those employed by Bernays.

First the attention of the public was called to the great number of bank failures, avoiding all suggestion as related to group, branch, and chain failures. Then the great strength of city banks was played up in contrast to the alleged weakness of country banks. Scant attention was given to city bank failures. The large tie-up of assets in cities as contrasted to the small asset tie-up in the country was missed as clean as a whistle. Then we had the testimony of the big boys before the Banking and Currency Committee, then interviews in newspapers and periodicals, and now more statements, from which I quote as follows:

Mr. Robert O. Lord, president of the Guardian-Detroit Union Group (Inc.), in the Wall Street Journal of May 3, says: "If the Glass bill in its present form becomes law and permits state-wide branch banking, there will not be the slightest danger of big banks obtaining sole control."

I have recently read in the May 7 issue of the Michigan Investor an address delivered by Mr. Lord before the Bankers' Club of Detroit at their semiannual banquet, in which he makes several statements and arrives at some conclusions. In regard to this I would only have this comment to make: That, having started with a wrong premise, Mr. Lord naturally arrives at a wrong conclusion, and when he says, 'that upon the enactment of the branch-banking provisions of the Glass bill there will be a greater anxiety on the part of the country banks to be taken over as branches than on the part of the city banks to take them over," it is permitted to raise a considerable question as to the accuracy of this statement in view of the opinions which I have heard expressed by several Michigan bankers outside of Detroit. In fact I believe the weight of opinion in both number and amount would be very much against the statements contained in Mr. Lord's address.

The vice president of a large New York trust company, in the Philadelphia Public Ledger and the Wall Street Journal of April 30, was quoted as declaring in an interview with President Hoover that the branch banking section of the Glass bill is of vital importance to the country. This gentleman has since said that the subject of branch banking was not even mentioned in his interview.

Royal Meeker, the economist, is quoted as having said that the national banks hail with joy the thought of Federal control of all banking processes.

Since these published items are all of the same cloth, it is pertinent to recall that the same sequence of events—namely, the World War, followed by the boom of 1919 and part of 1920, and the collapse of 1920 and 1921—which undermined a great many of our small agricultural banks, also undermined great branch-banking systems in many parts of the world. These failures include a great bank in Denmark; a great bank in Canada with 400 branches; the Banque Industrielle de Chine in China, with its widespread branches; the Banca di Sconto in Italy, with branches spread all over that country; and more recently the collapse of great branch-banking systems in Japan and Austria. In all parts of America the great bulk of unit banks as measured by resources survived the shock, and in every State the majority of unit banks in number and resources stand intact. As a matter of fact, despite the present business recession, more than 95 per cent of all bank resources are still intact.

THE AMERICAN BANKERS' ASSOCIATION ATTITUDE

May I refer to the position assumed by our own American Bankers' Association officers, who were instructed at Cleveland in 1930 to uphold the autonomy of State laws with regard to branch banking. Before the Senate committee they vigorously opposed certain other features of the bill which had not been anticipated by their members, and upon which no instructions had been given. Aside from the strong testimony of Mr. Rudolph S. Hecht, chairman of the economic policy commission, the official position taken by the American Bankers' Association on section 19 is weak indeed. I quote from a statement as follows:

"In regard to section 19 of the bill covering branch banking, we call attention to the resolution of the American Bankers' Association adopted at Cleveland in 1930 which reaffirms its belief in the unit banks, modified to the extent that community-wide branch banking in metropolitan areas and country-wide branch banking in rural districts, were economically justified, may be desirable, but in every respect preserving the autonomy of the laws of the separate States in respect to branch banking."

"Neither the executive council nor any committee of the association has power to take any position in conflict with the action of the convention."

Now, just what does this conclusion mean? Does it mean they are still of the same opinion as they were in 1930, or does it mean that because their hands are tied is the only reason why section 19 is not now indorsed? It certainly does not explain why it is that a vigorous protest against section 19 was not entered by the officers of the association in accordance with the convention mandate.

As the late Phineas T. Barnum might say: "The herd is now ready to tumble and throng its way past the box office." In other words, we are told in effect that the psychology of the mass has been prepared so that they will now accept branch banking as a cure for our present ills. Let me say, gentlemen, that if the unit bankers of America are not willing to accept that verdict, they must take off their coats and go to work.

I like to think I have many friends among city bankers for whom I have great respect. But to them this is simply an academic question. Even though many oppose branch banking, they know they can not be hurt by it, and besides a widening of their field may be of value to them in the future. Let us not fool ourselves by thinking that the public has any interest in this question except as they have been taken over by propaganda. The public, which does not understand the strangulation of branch banking, has only one interest—namely, that banks stay open. Unit bankers who want to preserve their business can not pass the buck to anyone. We must do the work ourselves, even though this warning may come to many of us as a distinct shock. Remember—

"Still as of old, man by himself is priced,
For 30 pieces of silver, Judas sold himself—not Christ!"

OTHER PHASES OF THE PROBLEM

May I refer to other phases of this problem? Commercial banking is not the only necessary and legitimate function of banks. Other bank services, however, seem to be receiving scant consideration at the hands of legislators. The time has not yet arrived when we must bend the knee and acknowledge as our sole god or king the creation and distribution of goods.

Twenty years ago character was considered to be an asset, and the elder Morgan once said something to the effect that he would rather loan to a man with good character than to a man with a good statement. To-day there is a great hue and cry for absolute liquidity, supported by balance sheets, which in many cases would exclude character loans. After all, the experience of the past few years might lead our Federal authorities to believe that character was an absolutely extinct asset; but out in the country districts we still know some honest folks, and maybe they can't pay in 30 days, but they will pay.

Before taking up some of the other things that have caused bank failures over the 12-year period from 1920 to 1932, let me observe that in spite of the record of the failures that those who were fortunate enough to have deposits in banks, either open or closed, during the past few years will come out with a much greater percentage of their principal left than they would have had if they had invested it in many of the so-called good securities which were offered with high recommendations.

And when we speak of consolidation and the economy thereof let us remember that corporations in the United States doing a business of one hundred and twenty billions in 1930 earned less than 1 per cent on the capital invested, and the record in 1931 and so far in 1932 is much worse. The overhead is hard to control.

The world was thrown out of joint by the World War. Ever since the armistice artificial respiration has been induced and we have tried to solve our difficulties by giving various kinds of shots in the arm to the sick patient.

We have had frequent but incomplete debt settlements. We have had a controlled money market. We have had conferences, and more conferences, and experiments. In December, 1930, a conference of the heads of the trade bodies was held at Washington. There was no use of it unless those who spoke were to give a true picture of their particular industry. In the light of later events it appears that most of those who spoke were, to say the least, not well informed. The conference was followed by private agreements not to reduce wages, on the theory that if labor costs were kept up commodity prices would soon be dragged up by the boot straps. Everyone was encouraged to believe that prices would rebound within a short time, but this did not work.

Again, we realize that central bank interest rates are manipulated throughout the world. So poorly have world finances been handled that Germany has had to establish an international barter clearing house. The Federal reserve banks buy Government bonds. The price goes up. Perhaps, whenever they stop buying, or when more bonds are issued, the price will come down. How far down? Is the question. Some think there is a world-wide necessity for credit inflation. To what extent is it necessary and when will our leaders stop inflating it?

Again, when the Interstate Commerce Commission grants to a railroad the right to issue bonds, should a banker be condemned for having bad judgment if he thinks the proceeds are to be used for railroad purposes? In 1928 such a privilege was granted to the Wabash Railroad. Sixty millions of bonds were issued. The proceeds, I am informed, were used to buy Lehigh Valley and Ann Arbor Railroad stocks. The road is now in receivership.

Likewise in 1928 and 1930 the Interstate Commerce Commission authorized the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad to issue bonds. In 1932 they say to the same road, "You must reorganize your finances." Meaning, of course, that they must default interest on bonds issued in 1928 and 1930. Many other railroad bonds similarly authorized by the Interstate Commerce Commission are now quoted at receivership prices.

Should a mere banker be censured if he failed to visualize the Interstate Commerce Commission with their "tongue in their cheek"? Frankly, it would seem that somehow those in authority work like the census taker who somehow found the death rate in a certain town was 11.7. On being asked what that meant, he said he did not know unless 11 were dead and 7 were at the point of death.

At some time B. C. there were three wise men in the East—but that was B. C.

In 1931 President Hoover announced a moratorium on foreign governmental debts beginning July 1 and lasting one year. Concerning this, Sir Henry Strakosh, the English economist, wrote as follows:

"A moratorium has been aptly described as 'Insolvency for future delivery.' No debtor wants to be insolvent if he can help it, when delivery time comes, so he strains every nerve to realize assets and to curtail purchases in the intervening period; while creditors—bent upon creating liquid resources, in case the debtors should indeed become insolvent on the day of delivery—do likewise. The result is to double the pressure on realizations and so to accentuate the fall in prices and the lack of confidence it creates." If anyone doubts the logic of this statement, let him look back at what has happened since the moratorium was declared. Let him also look ahead and envision actual default in July, 1932.

In October, 1931, the National Credit Corporation was launched. Later, the Glass-Steagall bill and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

My friends, is it any wonder that people are confused and lack confidence? Is it any wonder that bankers everywhere have been unable to interpret movements correctly? And who is there that believes that centralized control of banks through branch banking would, or could, make the authorities any more expert in handling the morphine gun?

In all seriousness, I ask you if in your judgment we should, through the medium of branch banking, turn over our financial destiny to those who assume financial leadership, but who have themselves failed so miserably. Shall we not frankly admit that the idea of safety in "big-banking leadership in America" stands as a hopelessly exploded myth?

AS FOR RESULTS

There must, of course, be changes in banking law. One ought not criticize without offering some suggestion for a remedy. There should be a restriction on the number of charters that can be issued. The capital stock required should be increased so as to eliminate entirely the very small bank that can not profitably exist. I do not see why a code containing the fundamental principles of bank organization and management could not be gotten together, which would be universally adopted by the States in much the same manner as the negotiable instruments act was adopted, and in much the same manner in which the collection code is now being adopted. There are certain principles which are so fundamental that they could be included in such a code; and there would probably be very little difficulty in securing the adoption of the code in all States. If the same fundamental principles were the basic law of both the Federal and State banking departments, a uniformity could be had which would be of value in strengthening the unit system of banks.

Supervising agencies should be strengthened and enlarged so that complete examinations and honest and fearless bank direction could be applied.

However, there is no substitute for individual initiative. When folks point to the success of Canadian branch banks, I suggest that they go up to the lakes and follow along the American side and then return on the Canadian side. There is the same climate, the same natural resources, and about the same kind of people; but the difference in the growth and development of the two countries is startling. The strangulation that comes of branch bank control is at once apparent.

If you ask why the branch system has survived in Germany, the answer is found in the fact that since the reorganization of February 22, 1932, the Reich has supplied 90 per cent of the capital on one bank—70 per cent of the capital of a second bank—and 70 per cent of the capital of a third bank. The Reich controls the largest bank with the most extensive branch system. Of five most famous banks, only three remain; and the only banks in Germany which did stand up were the unit banks, which have not required Government assistance.

If you want to find out why they survived in France examine the French Government treasury figures showing that the Government absorbed the loss to French banks occasioned by England going off the gold standard.

And then go to Japan and you will find that the Japanese branch-banking system survived the war period of 1914 only to collapse in 1921 and later. Just another moratorium.

According to figures submitted by Senator GLASS before the Banking and Currency Commission, the wealth of this Nation was $376,000,000,000. The largest amount of gold we ever had was a little over five billion, or a ratio of something over 70 to 1. Five billion gold and three hundred and sixty-five billions of credit and property. In a period of three weeks in September and October, 1931, more than $1,000,000,000 of gold was withdrawn from this country. There must have been a shrinkage inevitably of more than seventy billions of credit. Does it not seem to you that this shrinkage, coupled with vacillation in the control of the money market, must have had more to do with bank failures than did inexpert bank management? The New York Times of April 17, 1932, said—"Business property alone has shrunk in value in the last three years by $100,000,000,000." We know that the shrinkage in the market value of stocks listed on the New York Exchange aggregates $64,000,000,000.

Let me say to you that the advocates of branch banking are on their toes and are turning all of these "events and circumstances" to further their ends. So far the unit bankers have been singularly silent. Only a few have spoken.

HELPERS

Charlie Zimmerman, who prevented the adoption of the branch bank resolution at Cleveland in 1930, told the bankers at Williamsport that we would have an organization of unit bankers for our own protection. He also informed the legislative committee of the executive council, American Bankers' Association, that if the association was not willing to appoint a functional committee so that the voice of the unit banker could be heard (for the first time perhaps), then that voice and the medium for its expression will have to be heard through some other avenue. He also reminded the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate concerning the promotional idea that activates many of the advocates of branch banking. His work on behalf of the unit banker has been outstanding. [Applause.]

Then there is Felix McWhirter, of Indianapolis, president of the State bank division, American Bankers' Association. He gave the executive council at White Sulphur Springs the true American gospel. Many of the unit bankers are like a friend of mine up in Sharon. A preacher asked him if he was not ready to put the devil out of his life. My friend said, "I'm not so sure, the way business is, whether or not I should take on any more enemies."

CONCLUSION

What we are going through to-day is not new. Fifty years ago Prof. William G. Sumner, a professor at Yale, had the following to say: "Extravagant governments, abuses of public credit, wasteful taxation, legislative monopolies and special privileges, juggling with currency, restrictions on trade, wasteful armaments on land and sea, and other follies in economy and statecraft are capable of wasting and nullifying all the gains of civilization." He might have added branch banking as another folly in economy and statecraft, but unfortunately the fallacy was not so well known at that time.

The Glass bill now has preferred status on the Senate Calendar, and its place it held in the House by the Steagall bank deposit guaranty bill. If we are to defeat this strangling, stultifying legislation we must be up and doing.

Let us get busy before we have saddled upon us the Prussian idea of "The state-czar, absolute master of persons and things, which is flourishing and spreading to fantastic perfection in Germany. The German Republic controls all the banks and the movements of capital. It dominates all of the great industrial and commercial enterprises. The new economic constitution suppresses all liberty. The state fixes the scale of wages and the salaries of those in private pursuits. The economic constitution has no author. Each isolated measure has been taken under a supposed necessity; but all of these measures converge toward an economic system controlled and closed as strictly as that of Russia. The revolution evolves under our very eyes, while we continue to look for it in the future."

If unit bankers want to preserve their business and if this Nation of ours wants to have any semblance of individual liberty left, unified control of financial processes through a national system of branch banks must be prevented. The two agencies which can contribute most to that end are the unit bankers of America and the Constitution of the United States. [Applause.]

MAJORITY AND MINORITY STATEMENTS OF APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. JONES. It is customary for the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, after Congress adjourns and within the time limit fixed for the printing of the RECORD, to file a statement regarding the appropriations for the session. I ask unanimous consent that I may have that privilege and also that the minority may have a similar privilege to file a statement.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have no objection, but I want to have the privilege of filing a statement on behalf of the minority.

Mr. JONES. Yes; I have made that a part of my request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington as modified by the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DISARMAMENT

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article appearing in the New York Times of July 3 entitled "New Phase in the Arms Parley Opens with Hoover's Proposal," written by Raymond Leslie Buell, research director Foreign Policy Association.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

NEW PHASE IN THE ARMS PARLEY OPENS WITH HOOVER'S PROPOSAL—A DECISION ON A DEFINITE PLAN OF REDUCTION IS NOW ASKED OF THE CONFERENCE, WHICH HAS PASSED FIVE MONTHS IN FRUITLESS DEBATE

(By Raymond Leslie Buell, research director Foreign Policy Association)

One year after his famous proposal for a debt moratorium, President Hoover has again startled the world with a far-reaching and drastic proposal for armament reduction on land, sea, and in the air. He advocates (1) the abolition of "aggressive" weapons, such as tanks, poison gas, large mobile guns, and bombing planes; (2) the reduction of the treaty tonnage of battleships and submarines by one-third, and of cruisers, airplane carriers, and destroyers by one-fourth; (3) the reduction by one-third of the "defense components" of armies.

The plan states that an army has two functions: (a) The maintenance of internal order, (b) defense against foreign attack. Having a population of 65,000,000, Germany was allowed an army of 100,000 by the treaty of Versailles on the theory that this number was necessary to maintain internal order. The President proposes that every country take the German proportion as a basis for fixing the "police" component of its army and then reduce by one-third the remaining effectives, constituting the "defense" component.

WHAT THE PLAN MEANS

It is believed that the adoption of this plan would reduce the number of men under arms in Europe, excluding Russia, by half a million. Moreover, the plan would result in the scrapping of 350,000 tons of ships by the United States, 366,000 by Great Britain, and 267,000 by Japan, or a total of 983,000 tons in comparison with the 1,645,000 tons scrapped as a result of the Washington conference of 1921–22. President Hoover believes the adoption of his proposal as a whole would save the world from ten to fifteen billion dollars during the next 10 years.

From the political standpoint, the proposal has given the arms conference new hope of life; has tended to relieve the United States of responsibility should the conference eventually fail, and has postponed an immediate demand on the part of Europe for cancellation of the interallied debt.

Geneva—First stage

Before analyzing the plan in greater detail and discussing the prospect for its adoption, it may be of interest to review the history of the disarmament conference since its first meeting at Geneva on February 2.

The first stage of the conference ended on March 17, when an adjournment over Easter was taken. During this stage three main proposals for disarmament were made: (1) The Italian proposal for the abolition of aggressive weapons, (2) the Russian proposal for progressive disarmament, (3) the French proposal for an international police.

I. AGGRESSIVE WEAPONS

Signor Grandi pointed out that the treaty of Versailles had forbidden Germany to maintain "aggressive" weapons, such as tanks, heavy artillery, military airplanes, battleships, poison gas, and submarines. Should every government agree to abolish such weapons a great step toward reducing arms would be made. During the first stage of the conference 27 of the 60 represented countries supported either total abolition or the restriction of certain aggressive weapons.

Those who advocated this measure declared that these new weapons of war had destroyed the traditional superiority of defense and that their abolition would make the invasion of a foreign territory, protected by fortifications and machine guns, almost impossible. Such abolition would convert armies into instruments of "defense" in accordance with the spirit of the antiwar pact. Moreover, abolition would be a concrete step toward reduction which could be taken without the necessity of agreeing upon the relative strength of every army in the world; such abolition would make possible an immediate saving in expenditure. Finally, it would be a step toward giving Germany equality with France.

OPPOSING ARGUMENTS

Three arguments were, however, made against the abolition of aggressive weapons. The first was that such a step would put an end to the mechanization of armies and bring about a return to mass movements. The abolition of tanks and artillery would not diminish the tensity of warfare, but merely produce a stalemate, making decisive victory impossible.

In the second place, the paper abolition of such weapons would not prohibit peace-time manufacture, if not in arsenals, at least in private factories. To remove this defect, some form of international supervision of the manufacture of arms and abandonment of industrial preparedness was necessary.

In the third place, it was objected that it was impossible to distinguish between an aggressive and defensive weapon. These arguments for and against aggressive weapons prevented progress being made on this question during the first phase of the conference.

II. PROGRESSIVE DISARMING

While the Italian plan aimed at attacking the problem of material, the Russian proposal for progressive disarmament was confined to man power. Thus M. Litvinov asked that States having armies larger than 200,000 reduce by 50 per cent; States with armies between 30,000 and 200,000 men reduce by a smaller percentage; while States having 30,000 men retain the status quo. This principle was aimed at securing "equality for all," but since its percentages were regarded as too drastic and since the plan ignored the differences between the great and small powers, it was not seriously considered.

III. AN INTERNATIONAL POLICE

The conference was startled on February 5 by a plan submitted by M. Tardieu, then French Premier, for the creation of an international police force. France believed, he said, in giving the league a real executive authority as an essential preliminary for disarmament. The present system of sanctions prescribed by Article XVI of the covenant was inadequate because of the difficulty in obtaining the necessary cooperation of States in times of emergency. If Europe could rely upon a league police force, it could consent to drastic disarmament.

Tardieu proposed the establishment of a small league army, to be supplemented in time of need by national contingents. Moreover, he would place "aggressive weapons" at the disposal of the league and organize an international civil air transport service. The purpose of this latter proposal was to meet the difficulty caused by the ease of converting a commercial into a military plane. If all the commercial aviation systems could be fused into a single international company, no one government could employ commercial planes for military purposes.

PLAN HELD PREMATURE

Although the plan of internationalizing civil aviation met with wide approval, even those who believed in the principle of international sanctions regarded the international police plan as premature. In fact, some observers were unkind enough to suggest that the Tardieu Government had advanced the plan in order to have a reason not to disarm. On June 20 the new Herriot Government announced that, for the time being, it had abandoned the idea of a league army.

Although the first stage of the conference did not arrive at any definite agreement, it was generally believed the conference would accept (1) the principle of budgetary limitation, (2) the abolition of poison gas, (3) the establishment of a permanent disarmament commission, (4) and possibly some method of internationalizing civil aviation in Europe.

The second stage

When the conference reconvened on April 11 Ambassador Gibson, head of the American delegation, accepted for the United States the idea of eliminating aggressive land weapons, such as tanks and heavy artillery. On April 15 Secretary Stimson arrived in Geneva and carried on conversations with the various delegations, including Prime Ministers Bruening, Tardieu, and MacDonald. Although at first the United States wished to limit the principle of aggressive weapons to armies, it finally agreed to the inclusion of navies.

In a resolution of April 22 the conference accepted the principle of "qualitative" disarmament, and instructed the special commissions to examine all armaments, whether naval, land, or air, with a view to selecting those weapons which are "aggressive" in character. On May 1 Mr. Stimson left Geneva, having failed in his plan to hold a further discussion over reduction of armies with the German and French prime ministers, because of M. Tardieu's illness in Paris.

DIFFERENCES APPEAR

Although the military experts who shared in shaping the treaty of Versailles had little difficulty in determining what weapons should be prohibited to Germany, the expert commissions of the Geneva conference could reach no agreement despite a month's debate. On May 26 the naval commission presented a draft report exhibiting an insoluble difference over the battleship and the submarine. Eleven countries, including France, Germany, and Italy, expressed the belief that the battleship above a certain size was an aggressive weapon. The three leading naval powers—the United States, Great Britain, and Japan—took the opposite view; they did not wish to abolish the basis of their naval supremacy over France and Italy.

The same division occurred over the submarine. The small countries regarded the submarine as the best "defense" against the battleships of the great powers; the United States, Great Britain, and Argentina believed, however, that the submarine was an "aggressive weapon."

On June 6 the land commission made a report revealing similar differences. It declared that all artillery could be used either for offensive or defensive purposes.

DISAGREEMENT ON AVIATION

Finally, two days later, the air commission reported that the delegates could not agree that bombing planes were any more aggressive than other types. It followed that the only means of ending the bombing danger to civilian populations was to abolish all aviation, which no one would consider.

These reports demonstrated that there were no technical criteria by which aggressive could be separated from defensive weapons.

Confronted by this anticlimax, the conference began to despair. There were rumors that the European States wished an adjournment for a year, until after the reparations question had been settled, but that the American delegation opposed such adjournment for political reasons. Meanwhile the French elections had resulted in the establishment of a radical socialist government, headed by M. Herriot, one of the authors of the famous but ill-fated Geneva protocol of 1924.

En route to the Lausanne reparations conference, Prime Ministers Herriot and MacDonald stopped off at Geneva on June 13 to see what should be done about the arms conference. A few days later Mr. MacDonald returned from Lausanne to Geneva, where Anglo-French-American conversations were again held.

At this stage it seemed that the idea of abolishing aggressive weapons had been given up. The French apparently proposed that the conference adjourn after agreeing to reduce military expenditures by a figure to be decided upon later, while the British suggested that for a term of years governments should not replace most of the offensive weapons prohibited to Germany by the treaty of Versailles.

The United States, however, was unwilling for the conference to end with these meager results. The press reported on June 19 that Senator SWANSON, one of the delegates, had warned that Washington could not give up its hopes of obtaining a reduction in land armaments, especially when being asked to cancel the interallied debt. One report intimated that if the conference failed, Senator SWANSON would attack debt cancellation in the Senate upon his return. These dispatches brought forth a denial from Secretary Stimson that the debt question had been injected into the situation.

The Hoover plan

At 2 o'clock in the morning of June 22 the league secretariat hurriedly sent out a call for a meeting of the conference. At this meeting the United States presented Mr. Hoover's far-reaching plan for reduction of armies and navies, including the abolition of tanks, large artillery, and bombing planes, and the prohibition of all bombardment from the air.

Although a large number of smaller countries, as well as Italy, came to the support of the Hoover proposal, its acceptance will finally depend upon the attitude of the leading military powers, particularly France. Their attitude is affected not so much by the general reduction features of the Hoover plan as by the following special considerations: (1) The Hoover plan, while proposing a reduction in the armies and navies of other powers, would authorize increases for the United States, particularly in its Army; (2) the plan would severely reduce the present military superiority of France over Germany without giving France any assurances that an extremist government in Germany, once it obtained military equality, would not repudiate all reparations obligations, seize the Polish Corridor, and revive pre-war plans for expansion in central Europe.

I—AMERICAN FORCES

Under the Hoover plan the United States alone will be authorized to carry on new naval construction—in the case of cruisers and aircraft carriers. Moreover, under the Hoover scheme of estimating "police components" the United States, having a population about twice that of Germany, would be authorized to increase its Regular Army from 140,000 to about 200,000 men.

Our Regular Army is already supplemented by a highly efficient National Guard having a strength of 187,000. Moreover the United States maintains 108,210 reserve officers, partly recruited through its Reserve Officers' Training Corps and summer camps. As this large number of officers indicates, the American Army is not being trained primarily for defense against invasion. But it is scattered in small units all over the country so as to serve, along with our reserve officers, as a skeleton for six field armies of 4,000,000 drafted soldiers, which may be quickly mobilized and transported to Europe following the outbreak of war.

Although President Hoover, in submitting his plan to Geneva, declared that the antiwar pact means that arms must be used "solely for defense," he did not offer to reorganize the American Army so that it would become a purely defensive force. On the contrary, his plan would leave the national defense act of 1920 intact and would permit an increase in our regular Army to 200,000 men. Other countries are quick to point out that armies and navies are not based on any mathematical indexes of population and resources but upon "security" needs. If the United States, the one power in the world that is in no danger of invasion, proposes to increase its naval and military strength while at the same time urging other nations to reduce, the feeling of "insecurity" of countries actually surrounded by hostile neighbors will increase; and, confronted by the example of the United States, they will be less willing than ever to disarm.

An answer to this problem might be found along the lines which it is understood that the American delegation has suggested as a solution of Germany's demand for military equality with France. In return for the recognition of juridical equality, it is proposed that Germany make a unilateral declaration that it will not increase its army and navy for a given number of years. Similarly, the United States, while obtaining the treaty right to increase its Army and Navy for the sake of "parity," might give an undertaking that it would not exercise this right.

II—FRENCH SUPERIORITY

Inasmuch as Germany is already denied the right of maintaining aggressive weapons by the treaty of Versailles, the Hoover proposal to prohibit tanks, bombing planes, and heavy artillery would be a step toward abolishing French military superiority over Germany. Likewise, the Hoover proposal for the reduction of armies would have the same result, as it would reduce the French army from 615,000 to 435,000 men, not including colonial troops.

According to some observers, when the United States brings pressure upon France to surrender its present military supremacy, without undertaking at the same time to strengthen international organization, it is really joining Germany and Italy in asking France to surrender its political objectives in Europe. Such a program, it is urged, only arouses false hopes in Germany, thereby delaying Franco-German rapprochement, and tends to drive an indignant France into the arms of Japan. From this standpoint the Hoover disarmament proposal, unaccompanied by a political agreement, is regarded in France as an attempt by the United States to overturn the present balance of power in Europe.

A SUGGESTED COURSE

The one means by which President Hoover can answer this argument is by offering to strengthen international organization. The purpose of international organization is not to underwrite the present map of the world against change, but to guarantee that changes should not be made by force. It is only with the development of an international organization able to effect an equitable compromise between French and German interest that France can afford to renounce its military superiority.

Although the State Department announced on June 23 that the United States would not consider entering into a security pact with France under any circumstances, it is significant that the Republican platform adopted a week earlier at Chicago declared: "We favor enactment by Congress of a measure that will authorize our Government to call or participate in an international conference in case of any threat of nonfulfillment of Article II of the treaty of Paris."

According to many students, if President Hoover would announce his support of the Capper resolution authorizing the United States to impose economic sanctions against a state deemed to be an aggressor, the possibility that France and the other powers would accept the present disarmament proposal would be greatly increased.

WORLD WAR VETERAN'S ADJUSTED COMPENSATION

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a petition in the nature of a resolution presented to me by a number of ex-service men with reference to adjusted compensation. I ask that the resolution may be referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JOINT RESOLUTION

To the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, greetings:

We, the ex-service men of the United States, after serving our flag and country during the World War, returned to civil life feeling that we had accomplished our goal of preserving democracy within the borders of our country.

We were welcomed back as heroes and modestly found our places in industry and peaceful walks of life. For the first decade we toiled and provided for our families cheerfully in the belief that the Government which we defended would function properly as a cooperative democracy for the good of the greatest number of our citizens.

Our rank and file has not asked for any favors or special privileges which would exclude other classes of citizens. But rather we have opposed all special privileges and class legislation. We have endeavored to remain nonpartisan at all times and exert our meager influence in favor of the majority of our citizens.

But in course of time, after a decade of patient endeavor, we found not only ourselves and families but all the great mass of our citizenry being discriminated against by special class legislation. We found ourselves and neighbors being denied our constitutional rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness by the indirect method of having the opportunity denied us to work in gainful occupations and provide life, liberty, and happiness for our families.

In our chagrin and despair we decided to exercise our constitutional right to petition our Congress for a redress of grievances. Our previous petitions have been ignored or denied, so we, the ex-service men of the United States, decided to come to the seat of our Government in person and in the name of human rights and in the interest of ourselves and all the loyal citizenry of this country, register a joint protest against the autocratic and unjust usurpation of power and privilege being granted to property rights and the utter neglect of the human element for human rights. We, the ex-service men of the United States, and the degraded citizenry of the United States hereby jointly protest against these intolerable conditions, and: Be it

Resolved, That we favor the expansion of our currency system in like manner as suggested in an amendment of the Federal home loan bank bill, H. R. 12280, which was adopted by the Senate July 11, 1932, except that we urge our Congress to reconsider the method of putting this new currency into circulation.

We hereby urge and recommend in the same patriotic spirit which inspired us in 1917 and 1918, that the needy, unemployed, and disabled ex-service men of the United States be permitted and granted the permission to deposit their adjusted-compensation certificates with the Secretary of the Treasury as collateral for greenbacks at this time, and we promise our Government that we will be more patriotic than the bankers. We will not ask 3⅜ per cent interest, but will allow our Government to use our adjusted-compensation certificates gratis, without any interest, thereby saving our Treasury Department $37,500,000 annually for the next 13 years.

Respectfully submitted.

EX-SERVICE MEN OF THE UNITED STATES.

John H. Balch, 6448 North Seeley, Chicago, Ill.; Paul W. Davis, 377 South Oakland Avenue, Sharon, Pa.; Buell S. Shaw, Parkerville, Kans.; Victor E. Johnson, Seward, Alaska; Walter W. Berg, 6515 Wisconsin Avenue, St. Louis, Mo.; T. W. Sabing, R. F. D. No. 1, Marshall, Tex.; M. B. Beck, 8313 Madison Street, Houston, Tex.; Fred L. Baker, Trinity, Tex.; Hugh L. Scott, 600 Rector, Little Rock, Ark.; H. Hayden, 4721 Bell Avenue, Houston, Tex.; Dr. Samuel Ward, 273 South Third Street, Louisville, Ky.; Christ. Tesdall, 504 East Washington Street, Morris, Ill.

EMPLOYEES ON ISTHMUS OF PANAMA

Mr. BLAINE. I ask that Senate Joint Resolution 201 defining annual leave of Panama Canal and Panama Railroad Co. employees on the Isthmus of Panama be referred to the committee to which was referred the joint resolution recently introduced by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection the joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

Mr. BLAINE. I asked that it be referred to the committee which will have charge of the resolution introduced by the Senator from Minnesota, so they may be considered together.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. Without objection, the joint resolution of the Senator from Wisconsin will be likewise referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PROHIBITION—CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, when I yielded the floor last night I was discussing holding companies. I want to continue a little farther with that subject.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, before the Senator enters upon that discussion will he permit me an inquiry?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LEWIS. Under the rule does the joint resolution introduced yesterday by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], looking to the announcement of the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, come up in automatic process under any of the rules previous to 2 o'clock to-day?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It does not.

Mr. LEWIS. It can not be called up under the rule?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate recessed last night and consequently there is no morning hour to-day. It will come up during the first morning hour.

Mr. LEWIS. I appreciate the suggestion of the chair. I thank the Senator from Nebraska for his courtesy in yielding.

MERGER OF DISTRICT STREET RAILWAYS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 154, to authorize the merger of street-railway corporations operating in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, when the Senate recessed last night I was discussing the question of holding companies and had discussed that subject at some length. I desire this morning to continue the discussion briefly. I want to take up some holding companies which are operating right under the nose of the Congress, right here in the Capital City.

The city of Washington is supplied with electricity by the Potomac Electric Power Co., but the Potomac Electric Power Co. is only a subsidiary company. The parent company is the North American Co. It owns the Washington Railway & Electric Co., one of the street-railway companies of Washington. In turn the Washington Railway & Electric Co. owns the Potomac Electric Power Co. The father of this corporation is the North American Co. Its child, or one of its children, is the Washington Railway & Electric Co. The Potomac Electric Power Co. is a child of that child, being a grandchild of the North American Co. The Potomac Electric Power Co. develops electricity and distributes it in the District of Columbia. It sells electricity to its own father, the Washington Railway & Electric Co. The grandchild makes the electricity, sells it to the child, and the thing is all owned by the child's father, the North American Co. The grandchild sells to the child the electricity at a lower cost than it sells electricity to anybody else. In addition to selling electricity to the Washington Railway & Electric Co., it sells electricity to all the people of the city of Washington, but the Washington Railway & Electric Co., its own parent, is a preferred customer. It gets electricity for less than anybody else. It does not require a very deep study of mathematics to see that the people of Washington are paying more for their electricity than they ought to pay, because a very large portion of the electricity manufactured is sold to a preferred customer.

COST OF ELECTRICITY IN WASHINGTON CITY

I know it may be said that we are getting cheaper electricity in Washington, and if the price be compared with that charged for electricity by the Power Trust all over the United States, that is true; but it is a demonstration of what could be done if the Power Trust which generates and sells electricity all over the United States were compelled to sell to all people alike, to sell at a reasonable profit, and to get rid of these holding companies, these subsidiaries, these children and grandchildren and great-grandchildren and great-great-grandchildren, all owned by holding companies. The only thing that can be said—and I do not know whether it is favorable or not—is they keep the profits all in the family, and the general public is "the goat" that bears the burdens and makes it possible for these children and grandchildren to prefer members of their family and give them special rates.

Another instance of holding companies in the city of Washington has to do with the gas company which supplies gas to all the people of the District of Columbia and, I understand, to some outlying municipalities.

RESTITUTION OF EMPLOYEES OF DETROIT POST OFFICE

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. On yesterday there was reported from the Committee on Claims House bill 5256, to relieve a number of the underpaid employees of the Detroit post office. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered at this time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Underpaid employees of what?

Mr. COUZENS. Of the Detroit post office. The bill is No. 1093 on the calendar, being House bill 5256. Of course it has passed the other House.

Mr. SMOOT. Is there a favorable report on it?

Mr. COUZENS. It comes from the committee of the Senate with a favorable report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 5256) for the restitution of employees of the post office at Detroit, Mich.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think the Senator should explain the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, Mr. President, I will not yield——

Mr. COUZENS. Will not the Senator yield just for a minute?

Mr. NORRIS. Very well; I yield, but if I yield once, there will probably be a dozen other requests.

Mr. COUZENS. There are only a few bills on the calendar.

It appears that an employee of the Detroit post office nearly six years ago embezzled some postage stamps in excess of the amount of his bond, which was $10,000. The entire embezzlement, I think, was some $19,000. The Government collected all the bond and some retirement funds the man had. He afterwards committed suicide, but, because of his defalcation, the Postmaster General at that time assessed the loss to some six or seven employees in the post office who, he said, should have been more alert and should have caught this man who was embezzling postage stamps. So he assessed them varying amounts.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COUZENS. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Was the postmaster proceeding under the law to determine the liability of these employees?

Mr. COUZENS. I do not know whether he was proceeding under the law, but I know that he gave them the alternative of quitting or paying up, and in one case I think he gave an employee the alternative of taking a lower grade. One of them did take a lower grade rather than pay up, but the others paid up rather than lose their jobs. I do not know whether there is any statutory provision for that, but I do state, Mr. President, that he held a gun at their heads and said, "Come across and reimburse the Government or get out of your jobs." These men, of course, had families.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What was the total amount of the embezzlement?

Mr. COUZENS. About $19,000 all together, and the Government recovered between ten and eleven thousand dollars on the bond and from other funds.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator will not ask for the consideration of the bill at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah objects.

Mr. COUZENS. I hope the Senator from Utah will withhold his objection. This measure has passed the House; it has been before us for five or six years. The Committee on Claims gave the matter very careful consideration. The subcommittee, consisting of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] gave very careful consideration to it. I went over the papers, and it is simply doing an injustice to hold these employees out of the money which they paid some five or six years ago.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I notice the Post Office Department does not recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. COUZENS. It makes no recommendation. It says that it does not feel justified in making any recommendation; that it is up to Congress.

Mr. KING. I shall object to the consideration of the bill now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah objects.

RIGHT OF SENATOR HOLDING FLOOR TO YIELD—INTERPRETATION OF RULE

Mr. REED. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. REED. Does not the Senator from Nebraska lose the floor when he yields for a matter of that kind?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks not, when he yielded for that purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. I would not blame the Chair if he held that I did lose the floor. I want to be courteous, Mr. President, and Senators will understand that it is difficult to refuse them when they say that a request they desire to make will take only a minute. I realize that often it takes much more than that, but I dislike very much to refuse Senators on these important matters.

As the same time, I realize that if the rule were enforced I would not be allowed to do it. I do not want to do it, and I wish Senators would refrain until I have concluded from trying to secure the consideration of other bills unless in the case of some measure that must be acted on before we adjourn. I do not think I ought to be asked to yield. If the Senator from Pennsylvania had made his suggestion to begin with, I would not have yielded to a single one of these interruptions, but I think it would hardly be fair now to take me off the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair state that under the circumstances he will not hold that the Senator from Nebraska has lost the floor? But the Chair would like to state that the rule specifically provides:

It shall not be in order to interrupt a Senator having the floor for the purpose of introducing any memorial, petition, report of a committee, resolution, or bill. It shall be the duty of the Chair to enforce this rule without any point of order hereunder being made by a Senator.

The Chair having neglected to protect the Senator, he deems he should hold he still has the floor, but the Chair will hereafter hold that a Senator may not be interrupted unless in a matter of very great importance.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield for a question?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield for a question.

Mr. REED. Am I right in thinking that the Senator understands I did not mean to be unpleasant technically about this matter?

Mr. NORRIS. I understand; I am not finding fault with the Senator.

Mr. REED. But when the Senator yields to some Senators and not to others, I think that we ought to enforce the rule.

Mr. NORRIS. That is a difficult thing, and I do not blame the Senator at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, informed the Senate that Mr. LUCE was appointed a manager on the part of the House, in place of Mr. STRONG of Kansas, at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12280) to create Federal home-loan banks, to provide for the supervision thereof, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 475) making an appropriation for the payment of pages for the Senate and House of Representatives from July 16 to July 25, 1932, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 3276. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to promote the production of sulphur upon the public domain within the State of Louisiana," approved April 17, 1926;

H. R. 11732. An act to amend section 2 of an act approved February 25, 1929 (45 Stat. 1303), to complete the acquisition of land adjacent to Bolling Field, D. C., and for other purposes; and

H. R. 11897. An act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.
